Mr. CABELL. My friend the gentleman from Kentucky asked the question whether there was not a bill of that same character pending before the Ways and Means Committee. Let me say in reply he may before the Ways and Means Committee. Let me say in reply he may have allusion to a bill which I offered, and which is pending before the Ways and Means Committee, and to which I called his attention, if he will recollect, more than once. But it is not the same in substance as this amendment. That bill was to the effect that the reduction of tax on brandy made from fruits should be general, but this amendment offered here to-day by the gentleman from North Carolina confines it to farmers who raise their brandies on their own farms. It is not, therefore, the same bill at all.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman from North Carolina and the gentleman from Virginia who has just taken his seat both admit there are such bills before the Committee on Ways and Means, in reference to exempting from taxation brandies made from fruit. I will say to the chairman it does not make any difference whether the brandy is made before the Ways and Means Committee. Let me say in reply he may chairman it does not make any difference whether the brandy is made on the same farm where the fruit is raised or made on some other man's farm, or whether the article is made by a man who lives off the farm or not, it is an exemption of the article from taxation, and that same question is before the Committee on Ways and Means by two same question is before the Committee on Ways and Means by two bills as admitted by both gentlemen.

Mr. SCALES. Let me ask the gentleman one question on the point of order. Is it the substance of the bill before the committee if the amendment does not accomplish as much? Can it be the substance of the bill before the committee, when the bill applies to all brandies by whomsoever and wheresoever made, and the amendment applies to the substance of the bill before the committee, when the bill applies to all brandies by whomsoever and wheresoever made, and the amendment applies to the substance of the bill before the committee of the bill before the substance of the bill before the subst plies only to brandles made by farmers on their own lands and from their own fruits? The bill includes the amendment, but the amendment cannot contain the bill, and cannot therefore be the substance

Mr. PRICE. I need not tell my friend from North Carolina it is precisely the same thing, as it covers the reduction of tax on precisely the same article.

Mr. MILLS. I think, Mr. Chairman, it would be a dangerous precedent to establish that because a bill is pending before this House covering a general proposition, you cannot, therefore, introduce an amendment comprehending part of the same subject and attach it to some proposition pending before the House in order. Because, if that is to be the rule to determine the action of this House, it means simply then a clog of all legislation. Any member can then come into this House and by introducing a bill prevent an amendment being offered in order when the subject is up generally for legislation. In order to comply with the rule, the amendment must be shown to be substantially, from beginning to end, the bill pending before the

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Was not that the object of these rules,

Mr. MILLS. I suppose not; and they were never claimed to have such effect. This amendment embraces a part of what is in the bill offered by my friend from North Carolina, but it is legitimate as an amendment to be offered to this or any other bill to which it is ger-amendment to be offered to this or any other bill to which it is germane. It does not come in opposition to that denunciation of the rule which prohibits gentlemen from offering as an amendment the substance in whole of any bill pending before the House.

Mr. PRICE. I do not suppose, Mr. Chairman, it is necessary to argue this question. I wish simply to call attention to one bald fact, and that is, the bills before the Committee on Ways and Means introduced by the suppose of the Committee on Ways and Means introduced by the suppose of the Committee on Ways and Means introduced by the suppose of the Committee on Ways and Means introduced by the suppose of the Committee on Ways and Means introduced by the suppose of the Committee on Ways and Means introduced by the suppose of the Committee on Ways and Means introduced by the suppose of the committee on Ways and Means introduced by the suppose of the committee on Ways and Means introduced by the suppose of the committee on Ways and Means introduced by the committee of the committee on Ways and Means introduced by the committee of duced by the gentleman from Virginia and the gentleman from North Carolina propose to reduce the tax on brandy; this amendment pro-poses to reduce the tax on brandy. They are all the same thing precisely.

Mr. VANCE. I desire to call attention to the fact that the caption of the bill is "A bill to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue," and any subject pertaining to internal revenue as set forth in the Revised Statutes seems to me to be pertinent and germane; and, the Revised Statutes seems to me to be pertinent and germane; and, therefore, the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The bill referred to the Committee on Ways and Means not being before the Chair, the gentleman from North Carolina states that in substance it is to reduce the tax on certain articles, while the pending amendment is a total exemption from duty wherever they are raised.

Mr. PRICE. Do I understand the Chair to say that the exemption from two is no reduction?

from tax is no reduction?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a reduction, but this is an exemption from tax entirely

Mr. PRICE. When you take it all off, you have reduced it considerably

The CHAIRMAN. One reduces it fifty cents, and the other takes it off entirely, and in substance they are not the same. Therefore, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, we have heard it said here—
Mr. PAGE. I would like to hear the amendment read again.
The amendment was again read.
Mr. WARNER. If it is in order now I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this time.

Mr. WARNER. Is this an amendment to an amendment that is

The CHAIRMAN. It is an amendment to a substitute.

Mr. SCALES. Mr. Chairman, we have heard it said here on all sides that there is returning prosperity to this country. The balance of trade is in our favor again and there is evidence of a revival of business and general prosperity throughout the length and breadth of the land which is encouraging. Now, sir, in this general return of prosperity, as I trust, I am anxious that a class of our citizens who have so long and so patiently borne the burdens and heat of the day in this country shall be relieved. These burdens have been exceedingly heavy and they have borne heavily upon a most deserving if not ingly neavy and they have borne heavily upon a most deserving it not the best class of our people. I refer to the small but honest, humble, toiling farmers, who though anxious to utilize their whole farms, or chards and all, are yet unable to do so because they are not able to advance the money necessary to pay the taxes. They have been crushed out by this system so unequal, so unjust, and so oppressive. The whole business is concentrated in the large cities. Corrupt rings are formed, and formed, too, it is feared, by a combination of rings are formed, and formed, too, it is feared, by a combination of revenue officials with others to defraud the Government and strike down all competition. The small farmers have fruit, but they must see it rot in their orchards. There is no market for the apples or cider, and they cannot make brandy by reason of the high tax. The country may be prosperous to others, but there is no prosperity to them. The other products of the farm are exhausted in the support of the family. The only alear more view to be desired from the them. The other products of the farm are exhausted in the support of the family; the only clear money is to be derived from their orchards, and with this they could hope to meet the rainy day which must come to all. Once it was not so, and it should not be so now. The necessities of the country do not demand it. Whether it is the result of our legislation or the work of a bountiful Providence, or both combined, I will not stop to inquire; but it is conceded that money is more plenty and business looking up; and under this state of things we are told that we are paying off the public debt at the rate of $10.000.000 ner month. Last month was noil $15.000.000.000 ner rate of $10,000,000 per month. Last month we paid $15,000,000, and the Secretary gives us reason to hope that we can pay this sum, or larger, monthly during the year. Why, then, continue this unreasonable taxation upon the farmers? They are the bone and sinew of this country, the men who in great emergencies bear the Government upon their shoulders and supply it at all times with the means of life, and whose virtues and patriotism are to give stability and permanency to our institutions.

Ought they not to have some relief? I appeal to Congress to-day in their name and in their behalf. I appeal, not in the name of speculators, not in the name of manufacturers, but in the name of the toiling masses, in the name of the men who with their own hard hands till the ground day in and day out that they may sustain life and advance the interest of their children. I hope, sir, this appeal will not be in vain. It could not reduce the revenue beyond $1,000,000. Last year only about $900,000 was raised from this source. Cut this down and the Government will not feel it, but it will bring courage and hope to thousands.

Mr. WARNER. I hope the gentleman from North Carolina will incorporate in his amendment the words "for his own use and not for

Mr. SCALES. I am willing, at the instance of gentlemen around me, for fear I may not do better, to accept that amendment.

Some time subsequently, Mr. SCALES said: Mr. Speaker, upon further consideration, I de-cline to modify my amendment, and insist that it be voted upon as it is.

Burdens should be imposed only when necessary to sustain the credit of the Government, honestly and economically administered, and the representatives of the people should be quick to seize the first and every opportunity to diminish these burdens. Our constituents will not be trifled with, and will hold us to a rigid responsibility. When necessary they have heroically submitted to any privation, and will continue to do so; but every dollar taken from them beyond what is necessary they will and should regard as robbery. It has been said that it is a luxury, and therefore should pay the taxes. Do you tax all luxuries? We see around us every day evidences of wealth and luxury that are not subject to taxation. We see fine carriages and pleasure horses, magnificent jewelry, elegant furniture wealth and luxury that are not subject to taxation. We see fine carriages and pleasure horses, magnificent jewelry, elegant furniture costly apparel, all of which can better afford to pay taxes, and yet pay nothing. We see men who count their incomes by the thousands and millions per annum. They have more than they can ever possibly need, all that heart can wish is at their command, and yet these men pay nothing. Away, then, with the cry of luxury until you put all upon an equality.

It is urged by some that brandy is a great evil and should be prohibited. If this is meant, let it be done in a manly, open way, and pass a law to prohibit its manufacture. Instead of this we actually license it, and so great do the law-makers esteem the privilege that they actually sell it at ninety cents per gallon paid in advance. These good men say we know it is a great evil; that it is hot damnation scattered through the land, and we loathe and abhor it, but if we can get our price for it then all shall have the privilege without regard to the damage done or the sin committed. Is the Government to be to the damage done or the sin committed. Is the Government to be sustained by revenue thus obtained at the expense of life, fortune, and character? Can we expect the favor of Providence upon such action? Surely not. The tax should be abandoned; and let us resort to other means to bear the evil of intemperance. The history of this tax will show that the manufacture of ardent spirits, as well as its consumption, has increased rather than diminished since its existence. No man is deterred by the price from its use, and the tax is so high that corrupt men for profit swindle the Government and kill thousands by the mean of rark poisons with which they adultarete their liquors use of rank poisons with which they adulterate their liquors.

I am a friend of temperance, as I trust, by example and precept, and I will on all proper occasions and in all proper ways do what I can to promote it; indeed I regard it as every man's duty to do this; but then this tax has not and will not have the effect to work out intemperance; nor will any honest man pretend that it was so intended, and brave and good men would meet it in a more manly way by actual prohibition. Then this tax is not intended as a blow at intemperance or a prohibition upon the manufacture of spirits. It is intended for revenue, and revenue only. I think I have shown it is not now needed for this, that it should not be taxed as a luxury while so many men able to pay are exempt; that if it is an evil the Government should not perpetuate the evil and license it for money, and finally, that if it is an evil, the evil has grown and increases with the Then, sir, let us abolish the tax on brandy, and as we prosper we will take another step until we have abolished all the internal taxes upon all the industries in our land. We will take the temperance question out of the hands of Congress, and commit it to the churches and to good men everywhere; we will take away temptation from our people to violate the law, revive that love and loyalty to the country among them which has been so severely tested by an oppressive and fraudulent execution of an unjust and hard law. I again invoke the aid of this House. If prosperity has indeed come, let the people feel it in a reduction of taxation. The news will be speedily carried to every vale and hamlet throughout our land. The people will rejoice in this unmistakable evidence of prosperity, and join with us in thanks to that Providence which has so materially aided us in bringing it about. Mr. VAN VOORHIS.

Mr. Chairman, I can see how somebody Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Mr. Chairman, I can see how somebody would be benefited by the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina. The farmer who makes his apple-jack, and who gets forty cents a gallon tax taken off of it, will, of course, be benefited by it. But if that amendment should pass, I am yet at a loss, owing perhaps to my ignorance of this subject of whisky, to determine who is to be benefited by this bill in the end. I shall be alled to yet when the bill undertable in the late of the part I can glad to vote upon the bill understandingly if I can, but before I can do so I need a little more information about it, and I shall therefore address myself to the distinguished gentleman in charge of the bill, a member of the Committee on Ways and Means, [Mr. CARLISLE,] for that information. I thought when the gentleman from Tennessee took the floor a short time ago, and addressed the committee, that we would be able to learn something of this matter, but I soon found that he was a "know-nothing" upon that subject, and nothing could be got from him. What I want to find out is, where this two or two and a quarter million of dollars which this bill takes off from the revenue of the country, derived from whisky, is to go to? Who is going to get the money? In other words, will the few distillers, wholesale dealers and exporters, or the consumers, be benefited? My question is this: whether if this bill is passed, the cost of the ordinary rations of the rank and file of the democratic party will be reduced? Will not whisky to the consumer cost just as much by the drink, if this bill passes, as if it did not? as if it did not?

Mr. CARLISLE. Has the gentleman from North Carolina accepted the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. War-NER ?] Mr. SCALES.

Mr. SCALES. No, sir.
Mr. CARLISLE. I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina why, in his opinion, the farmers who produce corn should not be allowed the same privilege that he proposes to give in his amendment to those who produce fruit?

Mr. SCALES. The answer to the question of the gentleman from Kentucky is a very simple one. Corn is the staff of life and is the product of the sweat of the brow and the toil of these men; but the product of the sweat of the brow and the toll of these men; but the amendment which I propose here looks to the use of that abundance which Providence, without toil or labor, furnishes everybody.

Mr. CARLISLE. I do not know but that I would support a well-regulated provision upon the subject to which this relates but for the fact that the question to which this amendment relates is now in the Committee on Ways and Means for consideration, though not perhaps in this precise form.

Mr. SCALES. Will the gentleman from Kentucky permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. SCALES. My question is, Can we ever expect anything from the Committee on Ways and Means on that point?

Mr. CARLISLE. That of course I am not able to answer.

Mr. SCALES. I think, then, I can answer. We may not expect anything, judging from the past experiences.

Mr. CARLISLE. It seems to me that this would be making a discrimination.

The CHAIRMAN. Further debate is not now in order. Mr. BAYNE. I ask that the amendment be again read.

I desire to know whether the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] has been incorporated in the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.]

The amendment was again read.

Mr. PRICE. May I ask the Chairman a parliamentary question?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. PRICE. If I cannot make a speech, I want to ask a question.

If this amendment should be adopted and the bill should pass as thus amended, would the man who makes whisky out of rye pay ninety cents per gallon, and would the man who makes brandy from apples and peaches pay nothing?

The CHAIRMAN. That would seem to be the effect of it.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes, and that would be right.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 53, noes 68

Mr. SCALES. I call for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] and the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. SCALES.]
The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 61, noes 86.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose; and Mr. WHITTHORNE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the resolution of the Senate to print 10,500 copies of the Report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1879, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Anthony, Mr. Ransom, and Mr. Hamlin to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, the bill (H. R. No. 4247) to change the name of the steam-yacht W. J. Gordon to Salmo.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

and joint resolution of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1538) authorizing the closing of the accounts of the late Rear-Admiral A. H. Foote, United States Navy; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 73) authorizing the President of the United States to call an international sanitary conference to meet at Washington, District of Columbia.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. PERSONS. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

That the tax on all spirits made from apples and peaches be, and is hereby, abolished.

Mr. PRICE. May I run the risk of making another point of order? The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order. Mr. PRICE. I think that has been voted down already. Mr. PERSONS. There has been no amendment like it hitherto offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PERSONS. The reason why spirits made from fruits should be subjected to a less tax than those made from grain is very easily explained. They give us an opportunity of utilizing a large quantity of fruit that is annually lost, and especially in the southern country. The peaches and apples of that country for many years were manufactured into spirits, but by reason of the tax placed upon them lately that manufacture has been almost entirely abandoned. I notice that within the four months of July, August, September, and October of last year, which embraced the fruit period of the South, the revenues derived from this source amounted to $270,000; and that was for distillation, including grapes, as well as peaches and apples. The net revenue derived from this tax, after defraying expenses of collection, must have been at most very trifling.

And not only has the revenue thus raised been small, but we have had great trouble in that country to prevent moonshiners, as they are called, from carrying on illicit distillation, and thus causing great annoyance to a very considerable section of the State which I have the honor in part to represent.

The amendment I have offered, if adopted, by enabling the people to manufacture their brandy, will add to the prosperity of that country. If the effect of the present law had been to make the people abandon with their stills the use of spirituous liquors it might be commended; but they still indulge in the use of ardent spirits as

I think that any amendment less sweeping than that which I have offered will illy answer the purpose. It is not merely the tax that has prevented the manufacture of spirits from peaches and apples, but the people who manufacture spirits are remote from the towns, and have to go a considerable distance to find the assessor and collector. This is very troublesome, and for that reason as well as because of the tax they have abandoned this manufacture almost entirely. smallness of the revenue is a proof how little is manufactured.

I desire, therefore, we may be able to permit a product that will add to the national wealth without increasing the drunkenness of the people; for there is no proof that there have been less spirits consumed since the great falling off in the distillation of fruits. The removal of this tax would make perhaps loyal citizens of those who removal of this tax would make perhaps loyal citizens of those who have been greatly complained against. The only complaint made against them is as to their infraction of the revenue laws. They are a class of people who during the war were Union men and since the war I believe were republicans, who are now known as moonshiners in our State. I would be very glad, indeed, that they should be made good citizens, and perhaps if we were to abolish this law which prevents them from indulging in what seems to be a most favorite pastime they might become good citizens.

A MEMBER. And democrats.

Mr. PERSONS. And I trust, as my friend suggests, they might eventually become good democrats. As soon as they got to be lawabiding they would be democrats.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. What authority the gentleman from Georgia has for stating that the violators of the law in his country called moonshiners, who are reported to have killed in cold blood thirty or forty officers of the Government while executing the laws, are republicans, shiners, who are reported to have killed in cold blood thirty or forty officers of the Government while executing the laws, are republicans, I do not know. He has made that statement in regard to that class of men who are the violators of all laws of God and man in his district. Why republicans there should be so different from all other republicans in all the States as to be moonshiners and murderers, and still republicans, I cannot tell. I leave that for him to settle with the people of his district.

Mr. PERSONS. The gentleman labors under a great misapprehension

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Persons] is not in order. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is on the floor. Does he yield?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; I will finish my remarks. I say I will leave the charge that these moonshiners in the gentleman's district, or in his State, I care not where, were Union men through the war and are republicans to-day, though violators of the law of God and of man—I say I will leave that gentleman to his proof and to his constituents for an answer.

Now to the amendment. The object of this amendment and of the

Now to the amendment. The object of this amendment and of the former amendment is to leave every man who raises fruit to manufacture, without tax, without restraint, whisky or apple-jack, or any of the alcoholic products of fruit; that whatever restraints there may be in this country under the laws upon the manufacture of such spirits shall be removed; that if it be hard for them to find intoxicating spirits for use in their families at places in their neighborhood, or at the four corners, the way shall be open to them to make spirits as the savages of Alaska make their "hoochoo," in their own tea-kettles by their own firesides, to be drank in their own families.

I wish there might be, and probably there will be if this amendment is adopted, a vote in the House where the record can go forth showing who are in favor of making the manufacture of brandy and whisky a domestic manufacture, to be used only in the family where manufactured.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. Persons; and it was not agreed to upon a division-ayes 49, noes 79.

Mr. WARNER. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's

The Clerk read as follows:

That all brandy hereafter made by the owner or lessee on his own farm, from apples, peaches, and grapes which are the products of said farm, and for his own family use and not for sale, shall be exempt from taxation.

Mr. WARNER. I would be willing to vote for a reduction generally of the tax on this class of distilled spirits as a matter of principle. But to remove the tax entirely from brandies distilled from fruits and leave it as it is on other distillations does not seem to me to be the right thing to do.

Again, I can see no reason why they who distill the products of Again, I can see no reason why they who district the products of their own farm for profit should not pay tax as well as those who distill products which they buy of others, if they do it for profit. But when a farmer makes a few gallons of brandy for his own family use, from grapes or peaches or apples, as many do, it seems to me rather a small thing to send a revenue officer into his family to collect a few cents of tax. Such taxes are odious. Where men have planted their orchards or their vines, it should be left to them to say whether they will eat the fruit or will make it into wines, cider, or brandy, when the product is for their own consumption.

Mr. BROWNE. Just there let me ask the gentleman if he will also consent to include in his amendment corn and rye?

Mr. WARNER. Oh, no, I will not include them.

Mr. BROWNE. I would like to know the reason.

Mr. WARNER. To distill corn or rye requires a much more expension.

sive preparation than to distill a few gallons of spirits from grapes, apples, or peaches, and they would never be so distilled for private use. Will the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Browne] vote for my amendment if I accept that? I would not accept it, however.

Mr. BAYNE. It seems to me that these various propositions are simply trifling with a great interest. I am one of those who recognize the men who manufacture whisky as entitled to the protection of the law and accept that the control of the law and accept that the second of the law and accept the law accept the la of the law and as entitled to fair treatment. I think it is very unfair to those who are engaged in a legitimate business, the business of manufacturing spirits out of corn, rye, barley, and other materials that are used for that purpose, to undertake to make a special exemption in favor of spirits manufactured from apples or any other one commodity. The effect in the long run would be a driving out of the emption in layor of spirits manuacture from applications of the commodity. The effect in the long run would be a driving out of the market of those engaged in a legitimate pursuit by those engaged in a pursuit specially exempted from taxation. I think gentlemen can have scarcely studied the consequences upon one of the great industries of the country, if one of the various propositions which have been submitted here should be adopted and should become a part of the law of the land.

I think moreover that these various propositions are hardly treating in good faith and fair dealing this great interest which is represented here and interested in the modifications of the law contained in the bill in charge of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Car-

LISLE.]

It is also rather a peculiar feature of this case that there should be developed in the State of Georgia and in the district represented by the gentleman who spoke a few moments ago [Mr. Persons] a class of moonshiners who are known there as republicans. When we look at the record and examine the election returns in that gentleman's district, as stated in the Congressional Directory, we find that there were given for Henry Persons, democrat, 13,336 votes, and for H. R. Harris, democrat, 10,101 votes, and not a single republican vote cast in that district.

Mr. PERSONS. There is not a moonshiner in it.

Mr. BAYNE. Now it is a little marvelous that the gentleman representing that district should allege here that there are men in the district who are moonshiners and violators of the law, all republicans, when not a single solitary republican vote was cast in his entire

This is in keeping, however, with the reports that come from gentlemen of the South, or I should say from portions of the South—because I do not by any means intend to include all the gentlemen from the South, for there are many honorable and fair Representatives on this floor—but it is fairly in keeping with this mode of covering up the iniquities of men who violate the law and undertake to shift the responsibility upon the shoulders of other people who do not violate the law.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. On that subject of moonshiners—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. WARNER, it was not agreed to, there being—ayes 43, noes 75.

Mr. VANCE. I move to amend by inserting the following:

That section 3247 be amended by adding thereto the following: Provided, That any farmer who distills brandy made exclusively from apples peaches, or grapes of his own production or the production of others, to the amount of eighty gallons or less, shall not be considered a distiller within the meaning of this section: And provided, also, That said eighty gallons or less when so made shall not be subject to any tax.

Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is a very intelligent gentleman, informed me in the course of conversa-tion that the objection to relieving the tax on brandy was owing to the fact that there are places where perhaps a single manufacturer would turn out a thousand barrels; but he did not urge the same objection to relieving those who in the interior may desire to distill their fruit to a small amount.

Now, I wish to say that I have been an advocate of temperancefrom my boyhood, but my opinion is that you can never revolutionize the sentiment of the people by a system of taxation. If I had my way to-day I would repeal the internal-revenue system as being op-pressive to the people, and I would resort to other means with a view to promote temperance, sobriety, and happiness in this great land of

What has this nation done by this system of taxing spirits—taxing whisky and brandy? It has given the sanction of the law to the distillation or manufacture of spirits. Although it is regarded as a crime against humanity to make and sell intoxicating beverages, these men have the sanction of law for doing that thing. If I had it in my power to-day (and I wish I had the power) I would abolish the existing system and then I would go before the country with the power of the press and the power of the pulpit; I would persuade men to do better, and I think the effort would have better success than the present system of oppression.

People in many sections of the country believe that they ought to be allowed to distill a portion of their fruit. The fruit now rots in the orchards. They ask this boon. We have reduced the public expenditures of the Government, and we have pledged the people to reduce taxation. Now, I ask the temperance men to come up and act with us in taking this step in the right direction. Let us show these people that we do not wish to oppress them by a system of legislation which, as a gentleman on the other side has stated, has cost human life, and I wish he had also stated how many innocent men have been oppressed and put to death by those who have carried out the internal-revenue system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. CARLISLE. I wish only to put a question to my friend from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] as to the meaning of his amendment, and then I will yield the floor. The amendment, as I understood the reading by the Clerk, provides that a person who manufactures fruit brandy to an amount not exceeding eighty gallons shall be exempt from taxation. Does the amendment mean eighty gallons per day, eighty gallons per month, or eighty gallons per year?
Mr. VANCE. It means per year.
Mr. CARLISLE. It does not say so.
The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again read the amendment.
The amendment was again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. VANCE. I modify the amendment by inserting the words "in any one year" after the words "eighty gallons or less."

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I have long since found that a man ought not to be astonished at anything which he meets in his pilgrimage through this world.

Mr. VANCE. I am sorry that we cannot hear the gentleman.

Mr. PRICE. I will try to make you hear if you keep the speakers on your side quiet. Here is my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. VANCE.] I knew that his State was the land of tar and turpentine; but I did not knew until to-day that it was a land of wine and brandy. I was not astonished to hear some gentlemen on this floor advocate additional facilities under the law for manufacturing and selling intoxicating liquors, for I do not know their antecedents. But when my friend who was last upon the floor takes up the cudgels in favor of eighty gallons of brandy for a private family I cannot help thinking of the story told of an old lady who said that in her family they had used two barrels of whisky in a year; and when a neighbor remonstrated with her and said that was entirely too much, she replied, "Indade I don't think it's too much when you take into account that we have five children in the family and nary cow." [Laughter.] That it should conduce to temperance is the very last temperance speech I ever expected to hear made. Eighty gallons of brandy by every farmer in North Carolina, and as a matter of course every farmer in Iowa, for I do not suppose my friend from North Carolina intends that his State shell have the proposal of all this havinger. intends that his State shall have the monopoly of all this business. Eighty gallons of brandy free from tax so we may promote temper-

If eighty gallons is conducive to temperance would not one hundred and sixty be more conducive to temperance? Or does my friend from North Carolina take the ground that the more wine you drink the more temperate you will be? I know some men have taken that ground and made the argument in good faith. I know we had a man who left Washington City some years ago and went to France and told us that the people of this country who were talking about total abstinence and temperance ought to go to France and take a lesson from the people there, because, as he said, everybody drank wine there

(and that, I suppose, is the line of the remarks of my friend from North Carolina) and nobody got drunk. But in picking up the police report of the city of Paris for that same year I found they had made fiftyfour thousand arrests for drunkenness in that city, not to say anyfour thousand arrests for drunkenness in that city, not to say anything of the number which should have been arrested and was not. If drinking wine in Paris makes men of that character, I want to know of my friend from North Carolina, who makes temperance speeches sometimes, whether he expects that we are to have a sober country if he puts eighty gallons of brandy in every man's house?

Mr. VANCE. May I have the opportunity of answering the gentleman?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

The question recurred on Mr. Vance's amendment to the amend-

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 77. So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KITCHIN. I offer the following amendment to the amendment:

That section 3247 be amended by adding thereto the following:

Provided, The first sixty gallons in any one year manufactured by each distiller shall be exempt from taxation.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point of order that that section is not in this bill and not before the House, and the amendment therefore is not in order. There must be some place where the point of order will lie against amendments proposing to amend laws not referred to at all in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The same point of order has substantially been already made.

Mr. CONGER. Not the same point of order, for the section referred to here is not mentioned in this bill at all, and is, therefore, not before the House in any shape. The other amendments referred to sections in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The object of this bill is to amend the internal-

The CHAIRMAN. The object of this bill is to amend the internalrevenue laws, and any amendment of the internal-revenue laws is, therefore, in order.

Mr. CONGER. That includes stamps on matches, and the Chair would not go so far as to say that would be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not yet pending.
Mr. CONGER. I only made the point to show the effect. I make the point in all seriousness.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.
Mr. CONGER. I expected the Chair would. I might apologize for my ignorance of the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has knowledge enough of the rules to know the amendment is in order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, I have this to say in answer to the gentleman from Iowa, who wished to know whether North Carolina was a land of whisky and wine, that it is not, that it is a land of honesty and patriotism. I hope that is satisfactory to the gentleman.
I say to the gentlemen on this floor and on this side of the Cham-

I say to the gentlemen on this floor and on this side of the Chamber, who represent large whisky manufacturers, that I have offered this amendment for the purpose of putting their constituents, these manufacturers of whisky, on an equality with the small farmers and the poor men scattered throughout the North and South. I simply propose by this amendment to exempt the first sixty gallons of whisky propose by this amendment to exempt the first sixty gallons of whisky or brandy made at any distillery.

I will take occasion to say that I believe it is radically wrong and unjust and in opposition to the fundamental principles upon which our Government is based, to tax the necessities of life, to tax that which a man raises upon his farm for the support and benefit of those who are dependent upon him. Every man ought to have the right to use what he raises upon his farm for the benefit of his family. That is the intention of government. It will do injustice to no section of the country, and to no individual, and whatever revenue the Government may fail to derive from this exemption can be made up by passing a law levying a tax upon incomes, upon the money and by passing a law levying a tax upon incomes, upon the money and the capital of the country. Let us put a burden there and take it off the poor and the needy.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I believe the people are honest down in these States, and I also believe there are exemptions enough. information on the subject which I take from a very influential and reliable paper, published in Washington, The National Republican of yesterday, and I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read as a part of my speech.

The Clerk read as follows:

MOONSHINE VIOLENCE IN NORTHERN GEORGIA.

Since Representative SPEER, of Georgia, received the reply of Commissioner Raum to his inquiry as to the reason of employing force to collect the revenue in his district, a new series of attacks on United States officers have occurred. In four counties of Northern Georgia a reign of terror exists, owing to the fact that the illicit distillers have banded themselves together to maltreat all who harbor United States officers, by giving them food or lodging either for themselves or horses, and all who give the least information. For offenses of this kind one deputy collector had his store, house, and barn burned, and his family fired on and driven out. One citizen had a barn and four farm-houses burned, and when he had some of the marauders arrested and taken before a justice of the peace, the latter ruled out the evidence of all his witnesses on the ground that they were not to be believed under oath, because they had given United States officers information about illicit stills. One citizen was shot because he had been subpœnaed as a witness against distillers. One entire family has been driven from its home for selling revenue officers food. One was shot for reporting a still, and the property of another was burned because he was suspected of having furnished information. In one case of house-burning the band that did it organized at the house of a justice of the peace, and this officer acted as leader of the band. One distiller, whose still was seized near Clarks-ville, went into that town and swore out a warrant against the officers for carrying concealed weapons, and he was appointed a deputy to help make the arrest of the deputy marshal.

The United States marshal for Northern Georgia has been lax in the discharge of his duty, refusing either to arrest these men or deputize the revenue officers to do it. To-day Attorney-General Devens telegraphed, ordering him to see that arrests in these cases were promptly made.

Commissioner Raum has sent Revenue Agents Whitfield, Kellogg, and Chapman to report to Agent Wagner, now in charge of the district, and a force is to be organized under each of them, and armed for a lively campaign in the northeastern counties of the State.

Mr. COOK. Mr. Chairman, that whole statement has been proved to be absolutely false, and a scandalous and unwarranted attack upon to be absolutely false, and a scandalous and inwarranted attack upon the people of that part of the State. I do not represent that district. I do not live in reach of that people. There is no distillery in my own district, and never has been. I live in a country which has nothing but apples and fruit out of which liquor could be distilled. The people of my district therefore are not concerned in the manufacture, but I know that the statement which has just been read is a false accusation against the people who live in that part of the State. It refers to a district which defeated the regular democratic nominee in the last election, and sent a man here who opposed him. But there are many good people there, and though there may have been and doubtless have been violations of the law in some few instances, yet it is unjust to make a sweeping charge of that kind against the whole community. I will venture the assertion that there is more illicit distillation in one day in the city of Cincinnati or New York, and other large cities of this country, than is carried on in twelve months in the whole State of Georgia.

why, within the last year right here, almost under the very walls of the Capitol and in sight of the Treasury Department, the officers have tracked up a distillery which has a capacity greater than all the mountain recesses combined in the State of Georgia. I say that this statement has been shown to be false. The governor of the State, the attorney-general, and the marshal of the State, who is recognized as an honorable man, and who made his report to the Attorney-General, (and his conduct to this Government was as faithful as any man in its service, investigated this matter and show that this statement in can an sconduct to this Government was as fathful as any man in its service,) investigated this matter, and show that this statement in every important particular was absolutely untrue. It is a political steal, if I may so use the word. It is a base suggestion to abuse in this way and vilify the virtuous and good people of that section who are faithful to their obligations to this Government with the exception of here and there, as is found in every community, of a man who may be engaged in some unlawful pursuit, such as illicit distillation. And it is a contrarge to make the charge in the statement in every limit is a contrarge to make the statement in the sta it is an outrage to make the charge.

I am surprised, I am astonished—I will not say indignant, because a decent man has no right to be indignant at anything said or done here, [laughter and applause]—but I do say that I am astonished, and I regret to see that a gentleman of character and standing as a member of this House should put forth as a part of his speech the statement that has just been read here.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word of the section.

I find, sir, from the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, dated November 25, 1878, that in the State of Georgia there were two hundred and thirty-seven illicit stills seized. In the second Georgia district there were two officers killed and one wounded in that the second Georgia district there were two officers killed and one wounded in the second of the in that year; and in the third Georgia district there were forty-four illicit stills seized and two officers wounded. I ask the Clerk to read from this report what I have marked on the first three pages, and also the table which is appended to the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

It is with extreme regret I find it my duty to report the great difficulties that have been and still are encountered in many of the Southern States in the enforcement of the laws. In the mountain regions of West Virginia, Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, and Alabama, and in some portions of Missouri, Arkansas, and Texas, the illicit manufacture of spirits has been carried on for a number of years, and I am satisfied that the annual loss to the Government from this source has been very nearly if not quite equal to the annual appropriation for the collection of the internal-revenue tax throughout the whole country. In the regions of country named there are known to exist about five thousand copper stills, many of which at certain times are lawfully used in the production of brandy from apples and peaches, but I am convinced that a large portion of these stills have been and are used in the illicit manufacture of spirits. Part of the spirits thus produced has been consumed in the immediate neighborhood; the balance has been distributed and sold throughout the adjacent districts. This nefarious business has been carried on, as a rule, by a determined set of men, who in their various neighborhoods league together for defense against the officers of the law, and at a given signal are ready to come together with arms in their hands to drive the officers of internal revenue out of the country.

So formidable has been the resistance to the enforcement of the laws that in the districts of fifth Virginia, sixth North Carolina, South Carolina, second and fifth Tennessee, second West Virginia, Arkansas, and Kentucky, I have found it necessary to supply the collectors with breech-loading carbines.

The illicit distillers have on numerous occasions fired upon our officers. A table in another part of this report shows in detail the loss in killed and wounded that the service has sustained since my last report. I regret to have to record the fact that when the officers of the United States have been shot down from ambuscade, in cold blood, as a rule no efforts have been made on the part of the State officers to arrest the murderers; but in cases where the officers of the United States have been engaged in the enforcement of the laws, and have unfortunately come in conflict with the violators of the law, and homicides have occurred, active steps have been at once taken for the arrest of such officers, and nothing would be left undone by the State authorities to bring them to trial and punishment.

Mr. CONGER. Now I find in the Congressional Directory that the third district of Georgia, in which there were forty-four illicit stills seized, and in which two revenue officers were wounded in the disseized, and in which two revenue officers were wounded in the discharge of their duties, is the district of Georgia which as I understand is represented by the gentleman who says that everything is so quiet and peaceable there, General Cook.

Mr. COOK. I wish to say in response to the gentleman from Michigan that I do not live in the third district; I do not live within two hundred miles of that district.

Mr. CONGER. I only take what I find in the Congressional Directory.

Mr. COOK. But the gentleman from Michigan will remember that the third congressional district is very different from the third collection district of Georgia to which he refers. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted. The question now is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Ken-

Several members called for the reading of the proposed substitute. The substitute was again read, as follows:

And provided further, That the proof of such distilled spirits shall not in any case be computed at the time of withdrawal at less than 100 per cent., and in case it shall appear upon such regauging that the proof of such spirits is less than 100 per cent., the distiller or owner shall pay the tax upon the wine-gallons.

The substitute was adopted.

Mr. CONGER. I now renew the motion I made to strike out the section. Of course, however, amendments can be still put in. Mr. DAVIS, of California. I move the following amendment:

In line 3 of section 17, after the word "warehouse," insert the words "or from a special bonded warehouse;" and in line 14 of the same section, after the word "warehouse," insert "or special bonded warehouse."

My object is to place those distillers who come under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1877, which provide for bonded warehouses for grape brandy, on the same level with the other distillers provided for in this bill. This amendment is offered by the consent of the committee.

Mr. CARLISLE. As I understand it this amendment has been sug-

Mr. DAVIS, of California. It is offered at the suggestion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. SIMONTON. I move to strike out the last word. I will detain the committee but a moment. My colleague from Tennessee [Mr. Young] took occasion to refer to me this morning and said, after alluding in a humorous manner to the position of other gentlemen, that my opposition to the bill was the unkindest cut of all. I regret that I am unable to reply in the spirit of humor and pleasantry which characterized the remarks of the honorable gentleman when he alluded to myself and others. I can, however, be as courteous. I admire the honorable gentleman, the earnestness, assiduity, and fidelity with which he on all occasions represents those who sent him here. I take it that on this bill he designs to protect their interest, and I offer no criticisms of his position; to his constituents he is amenable; if they are satisfied then I am content. And I beg leave to say that in the position I have taken of opposition to certain provisions of this bill, (not to the whole bill, however,) I am but representing the best interests of the greatest number of my constituents, as I most firmly believe. I dislike to part company with the gentleman and my other colleagues from Tennessee, but when duty points the way I will make the sacrifice and submit my action in the premises to my constituents, to whom I am responsible.

to whom I am responsible.

If my colleague can show me how my constituents, or any considerable number of them, or the public generally, would be benefited by the passage of the bill unamended, I would most cheerfully vote with him. I fail to see, however, how those whom I have the honor to represent here will derive any benefit by retaining those features or provisions of the bill to which I have expressed my opposition. I do so see, however, and I think I have shown, how they will be injured by the operation of those provisions.

The people whom I represent, the people of this country, have upon their shoulders the burdens of government, and they have asked that they might be relieved in some degree by this Congress. And now what relief is this that is extended? When they have asked for fish, you offer a serpent; when they ask for bread, you offer a stone.

they might be relieved in some degree by this Congress. And now what relief is this that is extended? When they have asked for fish, you offer a serpent; when they ask for bread, you offer a stone. They want the tariff taken off the necessaries of life. They want to be able to purchase their hats and blankets cheaper. But the Committee on Ways and Means in effect says "No, but you may have your liquor cheaper." This, however, is a mere delusion. This is not true, and if it were I submit that however desirable it may be esteemed to have cheap whisky, it is far more so to have cheap clothing, cheap nave cheap whisky, it is far more so to have cheap clothing, cheap implements and necessaries of life generally.

Sir, if you take away these $2,000,000 which this bill proposes to take from the revenues of the Government, then somebody, some other class of persons, will have to make it up again. This is what I complain of. One class of persons, to wit, those who have liquors in the Government warehouses and distillers, is released to the amount of $2,000,000 per annum, and that burden is clapped on the shoulders of $2,000,000 per annum, and that burden is clapped on the shoulders of that class whose Representative I am in part at least on this floor. I represent an agricultural district. Sir, these agriculturists are entitled most of all to the fostering care of Government. It is in their interest that I have ventured to part with my colleague. It is in their behalf I have taken my stand against certain provisions in this bill. I represent no whisky manufacturers, I believe, and but few, if any, wholesale whisky dealers—in all probability not a single man who would be benefited by the rebate of taxes as contemplated in the bill—and I jusist that no person no class of citizons is benefited by the

and I insist that no person, no class of citizens, is benefited by the provisions of this bill except those who have whisky now or will have hereafter in the Government warehouses.

Sir, I ask this question; it has been asked by me before and is un-answered: If this bill is passed unamended, will whisky be any cheaper to the consumer? No gentleman in this debate has ventured to say it would. I do not he sitate to say it will not be one cent cheaper. Will the grain that goes into the making of it, the produce of our farms, bring any better price by the passage of this bill unamended. Not a particle.

Mr. SIMONTON. I withdraw the formal amendment.
Mr. CONGER. I have made a motion to strike out clause 17. Before the question is put upon that motion I desire to make a correction—and I ask the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle]—I desire to make a correction of a statement made I think by that gentleman in his argument to the House; for I venture to say I am satisfied he would not willingly misstate the law. It was stated that those who import spirits from abroad might allow it to remain in warehouse three years without being chargeable with any additional duty.

Mr. CARLISLE. Idid not say that. That statement was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Kelley.]

Mr. CONGER. I know the statement was made by some gentleman and I wish to correct the misapprehension it may have caused. I call attention to section 2970 of the Revised Statutes, which is as follows:

Sec. 2970. Any merchandise deposited in bond in any public or private bonded warehouse may be withdrawn for consumption within one year from the date of original importation on payment of the duties and charges to which it may be subject by law at the time of such withdrawal; and after the expiration of one year from the date of original importation, and until the expiration of three years from such date, any merchandise in bond may be withdrawn for consumption on payment of the duties assessed on the original entry and charges, and an additional duty of 10 per cent. of the amount of such duties and charges.

Mr. KELLEY. I stand corrected.
Mr. CONGER. Gentlemen will thus perceive there is an additional duty of 10 per cent. on merchandise which remains over one year in bond and is withdrawn during the next two years. If the statement has caused any misapprehension the reading of the law will re-

Now, sir, I have said what I desire to say in regard to this section. I think it is the worst section in the bill of those which have been commented upon. According to the statement of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and the admission here by the committee, there are at least $1,750,000, if not $2,000,000, taken out of the receipts of the Treasury by the passage of this one section. And if there be an increase in the manufacture and bonding of this kind of spirits proportionate to what the increase has been in the last seven months, the amount stricken out by this bill in the course of the years to come will be over $2,000,000 a year hereafter. This is a very serious question in my judgment. If this section be allowed to remain, it ought to endanger the passage of the entire bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois rise to oppose the amendment?

Mr. FORT. I desire to sustain the motion to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate is exhausted on that side.

Mr. FORT. Then I will oppose it.

Mr. CARLISLE. If the gentleman will allow me to say just a word, I will then yield him my time.

Mr. FORT. Very well.

Mr. CARLISLE. I desire to say a single word in response to a part of the remarks made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER.] It is true that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue estimates that the passage of this bill with this section in it will diminish the amount of revenue which otherwise would be received to the extent of $1,750,000. But in connection with that statement I wish to make this additional statement, which I believe, however, has already been made during the discussion, that during the present fiscal year the amount realized from the internal-revenue tax upon the particular business to which this bill relates will be at least $8,500,000 more than it was last year.

The Commissioner makes his estimate as to the amount of reduction upon what he supposes to be an accurate calculation of the amount of spirits which would remain in bond for a certain length amount of spirits which would remain in bold for a certain length of time, based upon past experience, as he says, shown by his reports in reference to the same matter.

I now yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.]

Mr. FORT. We may turn this question over and examine it as much as we please, and we find that there is nothing in the world in much as we please, and we find that there is nothing in the world in this section but a reduction of nearly two millions of dollars of tax on a certain class of whisky; that is all there is about it.

Now if the tax on sour-mash whisky is too high, then this section is right and should be passed; if it is not too high, then the section ought to be stricken out. The tax on high wines now is exactly the same that it is on sour-mash whisky. Pass this section, and the man-ufacturers of sour-mash whisky will have the advantage of all the evaporation which may take place in one, two, or three years, upon which the manufacturer will not have to pay any tax—

Mr. CARLISLE. Does the high-wine manufacturer pay any tax on that?

Mr. FORT. While the high-wine manufacturer must now pay the tax upon every gallon of high wine that he produces, and in no case is he allowed anything for evaporation or leakage.

Mr. CARLISLE. Does the high-wine manufacturer, under the law to-day, or will he under this bill if it passes, pay any tax upon a single drop of spirits which he does not sell in the market? The other man does.

Mr. FORT. Oh, my friend from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] is very artful. He asks, will the manufacturer of high wines have to pay any more tax if this law is passed than he does now?

Mr. CARLISLE. That is not my question.

Mr. FORT. That is what it means.

Mr. CARLISLE. My question is this: Does the manufacturer of high wines now pay tax on a single drop of spirits that he does not sell?

He does not.

Mr. FORT. He does not.
Mr. CARLISLE. The manufacturer of the other kind of spirits does pay a tax, as the gentleman admits, on spirits that have evaporated into the air.
Mr. FORT. It is in the interest of every honest man who is engaged in the manufacture of high wines or whisky that every other manufacturer shall pay all the tax that he ought to pay. Now, the manufacturer of sour-mash whisky has to pay the same tax that the high-wine manufacturer has to pay. If you pass this section, the sour-mash manufacturer will not have to pay as much as the high-wine manufacturer does, because the high-wine manufacturer pays a tax on what is measured out hot, while the sour-mash manufacturer pays tax only upon what is measured out three years hence after evaporation takes place. That is all there is in this section.

Mr. BARBER. Will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORT. Certainly.

Mr. BARBER. Suppose that one-half of the whisky in bond is destroyed by fire; would you require the payment of the tax on it?

Mr. FORT. Why, no; not at all.

Mr. BARBER. Is it any worse to have it destroyed by fire than to have it are normal?

have it evaporate? Mr. FORT. The gentleman is off the question entirely. I am sorry that my colleague does not see this thing correctly.

Mr. BARBER. Go ahead, and see if you can convert me.

[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. FORT. I think there is a conspiracy on the part of my friends

Mr. FORT. I think there is a conspiracy of the part of my fine.

Mr. SCALES. I ask consent to have printed in the RECORD, as a portion of the debates of this House, some further remarks upon the amendment which I offered to this bill a short time ago.

There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See Appendix.] Mr. BOYD. I move to strike out the last word. I have no disposition to detain the committee with any attempts to make extended remarks upon the merits of this bill.

remarks upon the merits of this bill.

It has been urged here that the passage of this bill is a favor justly due to the distillers of this country. That seems to me to be an open question. While I am not familiar enough with the ins and onts of the internal-revenue system of this country to determine whether it applies favorably or unfavorably to the distilling interests of the land, yet I know this stubborn fact, that in the district which I represent is located the largest distilling interest of this country. At this moment it is paying internal revenue at the rate of $1,000,000 a month. I know this, also, that the distillers of the city of Peoria in my district, and of the city of Pekin, in the adjoining district, are opposed on masse to the features embraced in this bill. I further vouch for the intelligence of those manufacturers, and I know that they know the intelligence of those manufacturers, and I know that they know whereof they speak.

They appeal to this House in a memorial which states in terms plainer and more concise than I can possibly do the grounds of their objections to this mode and manner of legislation. I ask to have objections to this mode and manner of legislation. I ask to have read as a portion of my remarks this memorial of me who to-day represent a producing capacity of ninety thousand gallons of spirits per day, and pay into the Treasury $81,000 per day taxes. I ask the House to listen while this memorial is being read, and I crave at the hands of this House that the opinions of these intelligent men who are interested in the manufacture of this article shall receive the consideration and credit which they deserve.

are interested in the manufacture of this article shall receive the consideration and credit which they deserve.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the honorable members of the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States:

We, the undersigned, distillers of Peoria and Pekin, Illinois, representing a capacity of ninety thousand gallons of spirits per day, the tax upon which is $81,000, respectfully submit the following for your consideration as reasons why H. R. No. 4812, (as it now is,) entitled "A bill to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue," should not become a law.

Section 4 of said bill does away with the 5 per cent. interest per annum on the additional two years of the bonding period.

Section 18 of said bill fixes an allowance of one to seven and one-half gallons for outage and exempts holders of whiskies in bond from the payment of tax thereon. Should the above two sections become a law the results will be as follows:

First. To reduce the price of whiskies in bond also to depress the market and reduce the price of tax-paid whiskies in the hands of dealers, unsettling values and materially disturbing the present prosperity of the whisky trade.

Second. It discriminates unjustly between the currers of whiskies by age and those who cure by age would pay no tax on the shrinkage or loss while in bond; while those who cure by mechanical processes sustain a loss of the tax of ninety cents per gallon on the amount of whisky lost by evaporation and shrinkage while undergoing rectification or redistillation. The effect of such discrimination would enact serious injury to redistillers and rectifiers, if id not entirely destroy their business and make their property valueless.

Third. It discriminates unjustly against the distiller who pays tax on his product immediately after its manufacture and in favor of the distiller who allows his product or ipen by age, he getting credit from the Government of from one to three years on the tax of ninety cents per gallon, the Government for from one to

Mr. WILLIS. I wish to make a remark in reply to what the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. BOYD] and my friend from Illinois [Mr. FORT] have said in regard to the discrimination which it is claimed is made by this proposed legislation against rectifiers of high wines. I desire to call attention to the fact that with the exception of three or four houses at Peoria and one at Pekin-

Mr. FORT. There are a great many houses at Peoria.
Mr. WILLIS. I say with the exception of the houses at Peoria and one at Pekin and two or three at Cincinnati, the whole rectifying interest of the United States is here petitioning this Congress as a matter of justice for the passage of this bill. I say further that at the time this bill was discussed in the Committee on Ways and Means the leading rectifiers of Saint Louis, of Pennsylvania, and of Chicago were present and counseled with the committee in drawing the bill.

I wish to call attention to the fact that the largest portion of the product manufactured by the houses whose petition has just been read is limited to alcohol and finished spirits, of which, as the gentlemen know, two-thirds are exported, paying no duty whatever into the Treasury of the United States. More than this, I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] whether last winter a bill similar to this section for leakage with reference to these distilleries was not recentled to this House and did not require his reto?

presented to this House and did not receive his vote? Mr. FORT. Let me answer

Mr. WILLIS. Is not that the fact?
Mr. FORT. Last year we passed a bill giving credit for what might leak out between the West and New York upon the cars.

Mr. WILLIS. Exactly. Now, I defy any man on this floor to explain why there should be a distinction in legislation between leakage which occurs by natural evaporation and leakage which occurs while the spirits are being transported. Commissioner Raum has presented this question in its true light in his last report. He is the officer of the Government charged with the supervision of this matter; and I call especial attention to what he says:

The intent of the internal-revenue laws is to levy a tax of ninety cents a gallon-Upon what? Upon what exists at the time the tax is levied? Does he say that? No. What does he say?—

upon spirits which are manufactured for, and actually go into, consumption in this country. The tax in question, therefore, in his judgment should not be levied upon that which does not have an existence. Our statutes now recognize this as the correct and equitable view, because when spirits are consumed in the warehouse by fire the Government relieves it from taxation, extending this same just principle.

All that these men claim is that the whisky which actually remains after the natural process of evaporation has been gone through with shall pay this tax. Where is the difference between the case of these distillers of pure whiskies and the case of those three or four firms who are the only ones in the United States opposing the legislation sought for in this bill? If these latter have now, as they do, a law exempting them from paying tax upon their goods which evaporate in transit, why should they not consent to the same relief provided for here? This view has controlled the judgment and action of all the rectifiers except these half dozen firms. I hold in my hand a list of fifty-two firms in the State of Illinois, twenty-three of whom are rectifiers, just as Woolner & Co., at Peoria, are—

Mr. FORT. The gentleman is mistaken. Woolner is the largest manufacturer of high wines in the world.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not deny that; but he is not the only manu-All that these men claim is that the whisky which actually refacturer of high wines.

Mr. CARLISLE. I do deny that Mr. Woolner is the largest manufacturer of high wines in the world. There is a house in the State of Illinois advocating the passage of this bill which has a capacity to mash five thousand bushels a day. I refer to Miller's establishment.

Mr. FORT. Let me make a proposition. Give the high-wine manufacturers the advantage of a like per cent. with that you give to the sour-mash manufacturers; then the bill will be fair and just, and we will vote for it.

Mr. CARLISLE. We will.
Mr. WILLIS. I say that every rectifier in the State of Illinois, with the exception of four or five firms, is in favor of this bill. In my own State of Kentucky the bill meets with general favor; and so all over the country. Here is a petition that has been sent to the House [Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. BOYD. I withdraw the formal amendment.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. Conger to strike out the seventeenth section, there were—ayes 51, noes 68.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. I will say about this as I did about the other, the understanding

Mr. CONGER. I will not make the point of order that no quorum has voted; but it is the understanding that this amendment may be renewed in the House.

Mr. CARLISLE. I understood yesterday that there were three amendments to which the understanding applied, this being one.

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir; this is the third. I hope the Clerk will make a record of this understanding.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is the understanding that there shall be a vote in the House upon this amendment.

Mr. CABELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following, to come in as an independent section.

The Clerk read as follows:

When any person is charged with an offense under this act, or any other law relating to the internal revenue of the United States, he shall not be taken beyond the limits of the county of his residence for preliminary trial or examination if there is a United States commissioner or other officer in said county, authorized to try and examine such person under section 1014 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, competent and willing to act under the same.

Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order that that is not relevant or germane to the bill.

Mr. CABELL. I do not think the point of order is well taken. If gentlemen will observe, the amendment I have offered applies to the pending bill as well as to other portions of the internal revenue as it now exists. It is true that it was intended by the amendment to affect as well the existing as the law contemplated by this bill. All good laws should be enforced—it is proposed to enforce rigidly the revenue laws of the country. It is entirely proper, therefore, for the law-making power to afford or provide adequate means for the enforcement of these laws, as also to point out in clear and unmistakable language the mode and manner of their enforcement or execution. The same penalties which are denounced against the violation of existing laws will apply to the provisions of the bill under consideration when passed into law; therefore it is of consequence, since we are endeavoring to change the revenue law in several particulars, that it should be made so plain and so specific as not to be misunder-stood, and besides relieved as far as possible of any and every oppressive feature.

It is a fact well known to this Congress, Mr. Chairman, and to the country that there is no greater deficiency now existing relative to the internal-revenue law than that I endeavor to supply by this amendment. The way the law is enforced now is a crying outrage, and I offer this amendment to obviate the troubles which now and heretofore have prevailed, in order that the law may be justly and properly enforced and the outrages upon citizens cease.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the gentleman indicate what law he desires to change?

Mr. CABELL. Certainly.
Mr. KELLEY. I make the point of order that the gentleman is discussing the merits of the question.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask it because I recollect in the last internalrevenue law there was a change made, and I call his attention to that. I have not the date of that law.

Mr. CABELL. If my friend will allow me—

Mr. ROBINSON. My friend will bear with me a moment longer. When investigating this matter before the Committee on the Judiciary our attention was called to this point, and therefore I ask for particular information, and perhaps the gentleman can refer me at once to the section.

Mr. CABELL. If my memory serves me, during the last Congress when the internal-revenue bill was under discussion there was a section enacted in that bill as it went to the Senate which provided that when a party was arrested for violation of the revenue laws he should when a party was arrested for violation of the revenue laws he should be carried before the nearest commissioner for examination. By some means, I know not how, either in the Senate or here, without my knowledge and without attracting the attention of those particularly interested in the matter, that provision was stricken out or greatly modified, and the bill as enacted into law does not contain it in such shape as to answer the demands of justice.

It is to supply that omission, Mr. Chairman, that I have offered the amendment to the pending bill. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will look at section 1014 he will see a provision of the law directing how and before whom offenders against the law shall be brought, but it does not provide before what particular commissioner or officer a party charged shall be carried with that particularity which the nature of the case demands. The practice has been all over my section of the country, as I will show when we come to the discussion of the merits of this amendment, to take men charged with offenses and carry them to be tried before commissioners or other officers at a great distance from their homes, where they have neither means nor opportunity to defend themselves, and where the Government as well as the parties arrested are subjected to heavy expense. It is to provide a remedy for this uncalled-for proceeding and to prevent a wrong to the citizen as well as to the Government that I submit the pending amendment; and I think, Mr. Chairman, it is one which should commend itself to the discreet judgment of every good man in this House

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to discuss the merits of the gentleman's amendment, were it proper I should do so. I rise for the purpose of saying that I witnessed the patient labors of the sub-committee of Ways and Means in charge of this bill; I saw the frequent conferences between them and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; I believe in the principles and details of the bill and want to support it. I do not want to see it defeated in this House. I do not want to be compelled to vote against it with many of its friends, as they will if that amendment be insisted upon.

My friend from Massachusetts tells me the provision is already in the law. If that be the case, I see in this proposition to renew the provision an ingenious and insidious method of killing this bill.

Mr. CABELL. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania undertake to say that I want to kill this bill?

Mr. KELLEY. By no means. What I said was that that would be the effect; for I myself would resolutely oppose it with that provision incorporated.

Mr. CABELL. I am very glad that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has withdrawn his assertion, because I do not desire to kill the bill or to respond discourteously to the gentleman. I will do nothing to kill it if I can possibly avoid it; but I want to fill a hiatus, a gap which appears in the law, that ought, for want of other opportunity, to come in here, as it will enable us to have a fair and proper execution not only of this law which we are about to enact, but of every law which to-day exists upon the statute-books of this country in relation to this subject, and which laws are executed now in a manner insulting and oppressive to the citizen, as well as costly and injurious to the Government.

Mr. KELLEY. Opposed as I am to political riders I will use all of my efforts to defeat this bill if a rider like that is placed upon it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Upon reflection I recall the passage of the bill, and recollect that it became a law. I have now found the section to which I referred and which I sale to have read.

which I referred, and which I ask to have read. The Clerk read as follows:

[Sec. 3231a.] Sec. 9. Where any marshal or deputy marshal of the United States within the district for which he shall be appointed shall find any person or persons in the act of operating an illicit distillery, it shall be lawful for such marshal or deputy marshal to arrest such person or persons, and take him or them forthwith before some judicial officer named in section 1014 of the Revised Statates, who may reside in the county of arrest, or if none in that, nearest to the place of arrest, to be dealt with according to the provisions of sections 1014, 1015, and 1016 of the said Revised Statutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think that covers the point.
Mr. CABELL. That does not, in my judgment, make the law as explicit as it ought to be; it has not so operated in the past certainly. I desire to have it so plain and explicit that "the wayfaring man, though a fool, need not err" in its construction. I desire to tell gentlemen who have addressed us from the other side of the House, that tlemen who have addressed us from the other side of the House, that I have no political motive in regard to offering this amendment. I wish only a good law, and that it may be properly enforced.

I do not wish to defeat and would not defeat the bill of the gentleman from Kentucky, but I wish if possible by any method or humble effort of mine to contribute to the work of perfecting a law which shall carry upon its face its own justice as well as provide for its own vindication. And to show the gentleman and those who doubt in regard to this matter that I am not asking an unreasonable thing or making an unreasonable statement, I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read an extract taken from the only republican paper within my district, published within the last few days, which will show the House and to the country the great necessity for the adoption of some law similar to my amendment which will break up the abuses complained of in the future. the abuses complained of in the future.

Mr. HORR. I raise the question of order that there is now pending a point of order, and that it is not in order for the gentleman to discuss the measure until the point of order is decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia will address himself to the question of order.

Mr. KELLEY. The gentleman from Virginia has sent up an article, which he has asked to have read by the Clerk, to sustain his cle, which he has asked to have read by the Clerk, to sustain his views in offering this amendment.

Mr. CABELL. I will withdraw the article for the present, until the question of order shall have been decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order as to the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. CABELL. Do I understand the Chair to sustain the point of order and to rule the amendment out of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; the amendment offered by the gentleman under section 1014 relates to criminal proceedings and not to

Mr. CABELL. Then I ask with all respect to the Chair how that affects the question we have been discussing? It is true that the bill under consideration is a revenue bill, but the amendment I offered relates to the manner in which it is to be executed, and makes provision for the trial of those who violate as well its provisions as the provisions of other revenue laws of the country. Surely this amendment cannot be ruled out upon the ground that it is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. FORT. I desire to offer an amendment, to come in as an additional earlier.

onal section. I presume there will be no objection to it.

Mr. McKENZIE. I desire to offer an amendment, which shall be considered as pending, as an additional section to this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. FORT. Then I offer the following amendment as an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMISSIONERS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

The Commissioner of Internal Revenue is hereby authorized, on application to him made, to abate or refund any such assessment now pending or heretofore paid; and also to abate or refund sent portions of any assessment for deficiency in production made against any distiller operating under the sour-mash system as may have been occasioned by his failure to produce spirits at the end of seventy-two hours after any commencement or resumption of operations: Provided, That no tax paid prior to January 1, 1874, shall be refunded under the provisions of this section.

Mr. DUNNELL. I raise the point of order that that amendment is not in order. It is not germane to the bill.

Mr. FORT. The bill already provides for this—
Mr. BARBER. Then why do you introduce this?
Mr. FORT. This section only provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may abate or refund any such assessment now pending or heretofore paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made by the gentleman from Minnesota that this amendment is not germane to the bill. Does the gentleman from Illinois propose to address himself to the

Mr. BREWER. I make the further point of order that it changes existing law and that it does not tend to reduce expenditures.
Mr. FORT. Is the point of order pending?
The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is pending. The Chair has not decided it.

Mr. FORT. The bill under consideration provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, under certain circumstances, re missioner of Internal Revenue may, under certain circumstances, refund or abate assessments. The section that I propose is an additional one and modifies that to some extent, and adds a proviso—
Mr. DUNNELL. This bill makes no such provision.
The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield?
Mr. FORT. I would prefer to have one five minutes to myself.
This only provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall

This only provides that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall do what is right and nothing more. I presume that if we desire to enforce the law, all will concede that we ought to be just. If the law takes money out of the pockets of the manufacturer which it ought not to take, it is wrong, and induces him to evade the law. To induce the citizen to be just the Government itself should be just. One further provision is that where a distillery is compelled to stop for any reason—and a sour-mash distiller cannot start up and make whisky in seventy-two hours; they require more time; it takes anwhisky in seventy-two hours; they require more time; it takes another day after they once get under way—they can then produce the high wines. The small distiller cannot produce them in that time. As the law now exists, as it is now enforced, and as the law officers are compelled to enforce it, it discriminates against small distillers. They cannot get under way and make their high wines under a limited time; so that they lose one day. This amendment, if enacted into law, will authorize the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to do exactly what is just, and charge them for all the spirits they make, and nothing more.

Mr. MILLS. Has the gentleman made an estimate how much it will take to pay those arrearages?

Mr. FORT. I suppose ten or eleven thousand dollars. It does not make any difference what it costs. If the Government has the money belonging to a citizen, it ought to return it. That is all there is

The question being taken on Mr. Forr's amendment, it was not agreed to.

Mr. McKENZIE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:

That the producers of leaf-tobacco shall be allowed, without the payment of any tax, to sell leaf-tobacco, the product of their own lands or of lands of which they are the tennats or lessees, to other than licensed dealers, manufacturers, or exporters, provided they do not sell exceeding one thousand dollars' worth in any one

The CHAIRMAN said: By the previous order of the House, the committee will now rise, as the time has nearly arrived when a recess is directed to be taken.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not want to say more than half a dozen other things, and I greatly prefer to say them now. [Cries of "Go on!" "Go on!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must suspend, for the time has arrived when the House must take a recess.

Mr. COVERT. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COVERT. Will the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. McKenzie] be entitled to the floor when the House reassembles to-morrow?

The CHAIRMAN. He will be.

Mr. McKENZIE. I do not want to occupy the floor when the House reassembles in the morning. I want to speak now, while the thing is hot. [Great laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will now rise.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. BLACKBURN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4812) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue, had come to no resolution

Mr. CONGER. The order of the House is that a recess shall be now taken.

Mr. BRAGG. I move that the House now adjourn.
Mr. McKENZIE. I trust that gentlemen who have objected to me continuing my remarks at this time will not object to my printing in the RECORD such additional remarks as I would have desired to make. There was no objection, and leave was granted accordingly. [See

Appendix.]
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is upon the motion to adjourn.

Mr. McMAHON. Is it not too late for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. McMAHON. I make the point of order that even if the motion to adjourn were made in time, and if the hour of half past four o'clock should arrive during the progress of the roll-call, that roll-call must be arrested and the House take a recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Wisconsin made his motion in time. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] is simply delaying action upon it.

Mr. McMAHON. It is too late now to entertain the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does entertain it; and it is

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Bragg that the House adjourn, it was not agreed to; there being—ayes 35, noes 63.

The House then, pursuant to previous order, took a recess until half

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past seven o'clock p. m., Mr. Blackburn in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

COURT OF PENSIONS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the session of this evening is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

WEDNESDAY, April 21, 1880.

On motion of Mr. Geddes, by unanimous consent, Ordered, That at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m. on Thursday next, April 29, the House take a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m., said evening session to be for the consideration exclusively of the bill (H. R. No. 5394) to organize a court of pensions.

Mr. GEDDES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of House bill No. 5394; pending which, I move that all general discussion be limited to two hours.

ing which, I move that all general discussion be limited to two nours. A Member. Say one hour.

Mr. FINLEY. I think this order cannot be made until there has been debate on the bill in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a strict construction of the rule, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINLEY] is right.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the rule in that respect applies to the five-minute debate, not to the general debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The practice of the House, as the gentleman from Illinois will remember, has been not to limit general debate on a measure until it has been considered in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think the practice is the other way.
Mr. FINLEY. I withdraw any objection on my part.
Mr. FARR. I renew the point. I think it much better to let the debate run till we see to what length it may be desirable to extend it.
The committee can rise at any time for the purpose of having the House make an order on the subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill should prevail, it will be at any time in the power of the gentleman having charge of the measure to move that the committee rise for the purpose of having the House close debate.

Mr. BUCKNER. I suggest whether the bill cannot be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GEDDES. I see no advantage in that, and for the present I will insist on my motion to go into Committee of the Whole.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. Knorr, for to-night, on account of sickness; To Mr. Covert, for to-night, on account of important business; and To Mr. Dibrell, for to-night, on account of indisposition.

COURT OF PENSIONS.

The motion of Mr. GEDDES, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5394)

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Stevenson in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 5394) to organize a court of pensions.

Mr. GEDDES. Mr. Chairman, this bill now under consideration, to organize a court of pensions, was reported to this House by the Select Committee on Pensions, Bounty, and Back Pay, of which I have the honor to be a member. Some diversity of judgment existed in the committee as to the form of remedy provided in this bill, but entire unanimity prevailed as to the necessity and great importance of immediate relief of some description.

It will be observed that the chief object of this measure is to or-It will be observed that the chief object of this measure is to organize a court, simply and solely to create a judicial tribunal, for the adjudication of pension cases. It does not undertake to provide a code of laws to regulate and govern the subject-matter of pensions. The laws now in force and hereafter to be provided must do that work. To warrant the creation of this court, to justify any increase of the number of Federal officers in any Department of the Government, it should be plainly, manifestly, and pressingly necessary. For one I would resist it until it appears indispensable. That emergency, in my judgment, now exists, and a brief statement will make it apparent.

Mr. Chairman, at the threshold of this inquiry, in the consideration of this measure, two questions naturally arise and should be consid-

Mr. Chairman, at the threshold of this inquiry, in the consideration of this measure, two questions naturally arise and should be considered. First, the evils that exist and call for remedy and the facts that demand the relief provided; secondly, the character of the remedy, whether expedient, just, and adequate.

Both of these propositions should be clearly established in order to command the judgment and support of this House. But little need be said to the attentive and thoughtful men of this House in regard to the first proposition. The evils that exist are various and serious. Some of them are so glaring as to be apparent to the most indifferent. All have felt the embarrassments growing out of the condition of things that has induced this particular measure. Frequent evening sessions have been assigned for the exclusive consideration of pensessions have been assigned for the exclusive consideration of pension cases. Most of those sessions were consumed, running into a late hour of the night, in discussing general principles, and without reaching any conclusion in cases.

Under the circumstances this was natural and inevitable.

not believe it was prompted by any hostility to just and equitable claims for pensions. From a personal knowledge of the sentiments and convictions of some members of this House who offered amendments to pension bills and participated in the discussion I know they are as ardent, faithful, and watchful friends of just and proper claimants of pensions as can be found on this floor.

Conflicting sentiments and emotions influenced members of this House whenever such cases came up for consideration. Each case as it was presented aroused an earnest sympathy, a deep sense of justice, and the warmest patriotism, producing a desire and determination to press forward and through to final action the cases already flooding our Private Calendar.

Now, with this feeling came a clear consciousness and judgment that the method of investigation was exceedingly imperfect and unsafe. All thoughtful men realized and acknowledged the ill adaptation and utter unsuitableness of congressional machinery for judicial duties and investigations. The soldiers and Government were alike exposed to injustice and wrong.

With all suitable deference for the embodied wisdom of this House when it can be reached and used, it is safe to affirm that it does not and cannot give proper attention to individual pension cases. A few facts will demonstrate this assertion. The amount and character of the work imposed renders it absolutely impracticable. Over three thousand cases have been presented to the committee, and the numbers of the Committee, and the numbers of the Committee and Invalid ber is rapidly increasing. Members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions it must be remembered have other important duties to perform in connection with other committees, with their private correspondence, and the labor during the sessions of the House. It is, then, utterly impracticable to give the time necessary to unite the judgments of the entire committee in any case. The result is they must and do subdivide the work among the members, giving to each one or more States, even then involving the examination by each member of hundreds of cases. Thus the practical result is to present for our consideration cases based upon the judgment of one man necessarily arrived at under the most unfavorable circumstances. To thus review cases which have been disallowed by the Pension Department cannot be satisfactory to reflecting men.

Mr. Chairman, the public interests and the interests of claimants demand and should have a more careful examination than the Commissioner of Pensions was able to give them or our action will be in the highest degree injurious. Most of these cases are appeals to Congress based upon alleged inconsiderate rejection of them in the Pension Office. To command the public confidence and respect, we must not acquiesce in equal or greater want of consideration, discrimination, and judgment.

I must not be misunderstood on this point. No injustice is intended to the committee having charge of this important business. They cannot perform impossibilities. It is, therefore, no injustice to say that some of them burdened with these cases are without judicial experience. They are unaccustomed to legal investigations, sifting testimony, weighing evidence, and applying legal rules for ascertaining facts and reaching a reliable judgment in a case.

Considering, then, the interests involved, the intricate legal questions, the conflict of evidence to be weighed and correctly determined, and all this under the most unfavorable circumstances, the most determined for the soldiers exting also considered the most unfavorable circumstances. devoted friends of the soldiers, acting also as guardians of the public interest, felt that our action in cases was unsafe and dangerous, and

This condition of things obstructed the consideration and disposi-tion of cases and produced one of the evils the most injurious and disheartening to claimants. Delay in determining cases and paying the amount due to pensioners is the cause of serious complaint. may be carried to such an extent as to be equivalent to a prompt de-nial of justice. Procrastination is said to be the thief of time. It nial of justice. Procrastination is said to be the thief of time. It may be used as an instrument to defeat meritorious pension claims and rob men, women, and children of righteous dues and demands. Every principle of justice, humanity, and patriotism demands prompt, rigid, and ceaseless efforts to discharge this highest and most sacred obligation of our Government. We should discountenance and frown upon any and every measure having the least tendency to unnecessarily increase the delays, expense, inconvenience, and burdens imposed upon this class of our people, so poorly able to endure them. Thousands will knock at the door of this great Government for their reward, not as mendicants supplicating favors, not upon bended knee Thousands will knock at the door of this great Government for their reward, not as mendicants supplicating favors, not upon bended knee asking for bread that another by industry and economy earned, but in a bold and manly spirit demanding of the servants in possession of the Government what should have been meted out to them years ago. These appeals cannot be disregarded. The honor of this Government is pledged to respond. It is a responsibility we cannot shirk, and dare not if we could. It is in binding force so great, in sacredness so strong, that efforts to violate it in thought, word; or deed would be unpardonable. Do I overstate or appear to color this obligation

Mr. Chairman, what is the nature of a pension? It is clearly and forcibly stated by an ex-confederate officer in a report to the Fortyfifth Congress, prepared by Hon. G. W. Hewitt. In that report he says:

fifth Congress, prepared by Hon. G. W. Hewitt. In that report he says:

The pensions of soldiers disabled in the line of duty are in no sense a gratuity, but are supported by contract made by the Government with them at the date of their enlistment that if disabled they should have a pension. The consideration is the service and blood of the soldier. The parties were competent to contract. The subject-matter of the contract was neither in contravention of law nor of public policy, but was expressly authorized by law and promotive of the public good. It has every ingredient of a contract as defined by all the law-books. The pension was predicated on the sole condition of the soldier's disability in the line of duty, and upon the happening of which condition the engagement of the Government became a perfect vested right and was the property of the soldier as much as any bond which he may have held on the Government or other choses in action which he may have owned.

The general pension laws do not and perhaps cannot provide for every case. Applications constantly occur that do not come within the strict letter of the statute, but do come within the spirit of all the strict letter of the statute, but do come within the spirit of all pension laws, and may be and often are infinitely stronger in equity and good conscience than some that are technically correct. Shall the door of our Government be closed against them? Shall we, Shylock like, insist upon the letter of our bond? That cannot, will not be. That class of cases, then, will continue to flow in upon us, and it will be economical, as well as wise and patriotic, to make immediate

Mr. Chairman, this leads me to make some suggestions as to the remedy proposed and to endeavor to show that it is a suitable, expedient, and adequate remedy. It is a court, and the bill contemplates the appointment of able and experienced judges to fill the position. This will not only secure justice, and an impartial judgment on the facts and law of each case, but will command the confidence and respect of all parties concerned. It is the only form of tribunal competent to sit in judgment as a court or tribunal of last resort and adiudicate rights so sacred and important.

adjudicate rights so sacred and important.

This is demonstrated by the present system that has produced universal complaint. It is not expected that the Commissioner of Pensions will or can give to applicants the benefit of his individual judgsions will or can give to applicants the benefit of his individual judgment in their cases. This duty is assigned to clerks in the Department under rules and regulations governing them. That thousands of cases are erroneously, unjustly, and illegally rejected is one of the admitted facts, and has given rise to the deep-seated discontent that exists, and universally prevailing complaints all over the country. In seeking a remedy this must be kept in view. We should not keep up and multiply the evils now existing. The tribunal to review, reconsider, and readjudicate the cases decided in the Department below should be above and wholly independent of that Department. below should be above and wholly independent of that Department. below should be above and wholly independent or that Department. It should be a court worthy of an independent existence. It should not be "subordinate to and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior," as provided for in the bill offered by the minority of the committee. It should not be under the direction of any power. To make it so would degrade it in the beginning, and make it a mere clerkship in the Interior Department in connection with the Pension Office. It would simply be a fifth wheel to the pension wagon.

This would be mere mockery. When men ask for bread you should not give them a stone. The remedy must go deeper, or it would be worse than useless.

Mr. Chairman, having settled the character of the court that should be created, the next question is as to its jurisdiction. As already shown, two classes of cases exist, jurisdiction of which should be con-ferred upon this court. First, all cases coming within the express letter of general laws governing pensions and which have been tried and disallowed for any reason not satisfactory to claimants. Secondly, all cases of an equitable character. As to the first class the decision of the court is to be final, except where the disability for which the pension was granted has been removed in whole or part which the pension was granted has been removed in whole or part and in cases of fraud. In the other class when in the judgment of the court the claimant has an equitable right to relief but his case does not fall within the letter of any law granting pensions, then the court is authorized and empowered to recommend the allowance of the same by Congress, and thereupon such cases, including the exhibits and testimony therein, with the equitable reasons therefor, shall be certified by the court to Congress and only cases so certified shall be passed upon by Congress.

shall be passed upon by Congress.

It was not thought advisable to confer on this tribunal the discretion that exists in the legislative department of the Government. This bill, therefore, reserves the right and power of final decision in all such cases. But this reservation is technical rather than substantial, for it may be safely assumed that when this court considers and recommends a case it will not be reconsidered or rejected by Congress.

This brings me to a question involved in this bill about which an irreconcilable difference of opinion existed in committee. The majority considered it safe and important to make it competent on appeal for the claimant and the Government to take additional testimony in the form and manner now provided by law, for or against any claim pending in said court, to be considered by said court in its adjudication. This question does not necessarily involve the propriety and efficiency, or otherwise, of the present mode of proof by affidavits. efficiency, or otherwise, of the present mode of proof by amdavits. It simply accepts and adopts that mode of proof until it is changed by legislation and another system provided. The vital question is whether on appeal the case shall be decided exclusively on the evidence submitted to the Commissioner of Pensions prior to his decision. This, in my judgment, would lead to rank, palpable, and shocking injustice. Look at the practical working of it. A claimant prepares his case fully and the Government has exhausted its examination and re-exminations in the most minute particulars constituting in fact one of aminations in the most minute particulars, constituting in fact one of the most rigid cross-examinations possible. Now, the Commissioner of Pensions is authorized to detail from time to time clerks in his office to investigate suspected attempts at fraud on the Government, and such persons have the power to administer oaths and take affidavits in the course of any such investigation. The work of such detectives and spies is concealed from the claimant. The names and character of the persons who complain or testify against the claimant are never disclosed. On this showing the Commissioner of Pensions acts, and from that decision an appeal is taken. Now, it is insisted that such case shall be retried on that same secret ex parte and often infamous testimony. It is shocking to my sense of justice. It seems to me every man's judgment and conscience should rebel against such cruel

Now, mark you, it is no reply to this to say that the bill submitted by the minority provides that in case the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions is affirmed it shall be returned to the Commissioner of Pensions and further proof offered. This would be productive of endless delays. It would then undergo the same round of investigation, closing up with the same, or more, infamous secret affidavits, and then another appeal. This would be intolerable.

This detective system as conducted in pension cases cannot be justified or defended.

Mr. HOUSE. Do I understand that in this bill the committee provide that this court shall receive ex parte testimony?

Mr. GEDDES. We do.
Mr. HOUSE. Upon that point the gentleman will allow me to say that the secret detectives of whom he complains have been rendered necessary by ex parte affidavits which have been filed in support of pension applications, ex parte testimony of witnesses when the Government has no opportunity to cross-examine; and in order to protect itself against evidence of this sort which it would be unsafe to rely upon, the Government has been obliged to resort to detectives.

Mr. GEDDES. I think we have taken into consideration all that the gentleman suggests. This bill provides that the testimony shall be by affidavit, because that is now the mode provided by law for the taking of testimony in all pension cases. It is the mode which has been provided by law for ninety years.

I did not wish to embarrass the discussion of this bill with a collateral question such as the gentleman has suggested; but I will say that in the organization of a judicial tribunal of this kind you should never provide the rules governing the taking of testimony or fix the law upon the subject of any matter that is to be presented by or to that court. You create the court as a legal tribunal, and then whether it is to decide cases upon record evidence exclusively or upon affidavits atone or upon depositions with notice, and examination and cross-examination—all this is a proper subject of independent legislation in a practice act, or code of proceeding regulating the taking of testimony and any other subject-matter pertinent to the proceedings of the tribunal. This bill, I will say to the gentleman, in no way seeks to draw into it the question as to the propriety or impropriety, efficiency or inefficiency of the present mode of taking testimony in pension occasion.

It creates a court and provides that the testimony offered in this court shall be by affidavit, because that is the present mode of taking Mr. HOUSE. There never was a court before for this purpose.

Mr. GEDDES. No, sir; not in this class of cases.
Mr. HOUSE. And this proposes to be governed by ex parte testimony.

Mr. McMAHON. There are, however, a good many questions decided by courts on strictly ex parte testimony, such as applications for injunction, attachment, motions for a new trial, &c.

Mr. GEDDES. I may say to the committee in connection with this testimony of the detectives that before the special committee of which I am a member—and as its session was not secret, therefore I feel at liberty to disclose what occurred in it-there appeared a claimant from some part of the country who demanded of our committee that he be subpænaed and allowed to testify. How long he had been receiving his pension and why he was dropped from the pension-rolls, how, when, upon whose testimony, and under what circumstances, he did not know, but he was dropped, and he asked an investigation and we subpensed him. Then when we were about to put him on the stand to testify we discovered what justified me in saying that the Commissioner could not be expected to give his individual time to the consideration of these cases. But the Commissioner took the case, the number of the claim, the name of the party, and he came before us at the next meeting of the committee and frankly announced that he had looked carefully into this case and that the man had been improperly dropped, and that he had restored him. Well, we let that poor fellow in, but what becomes of the other five thousand, or ten thousand, or one hundred? They are all at home and cannot pay railroad fare to come to Washington and learn the reason of their being dropped from the rolls, or to be able to learn that there is a committee in session here which will enable them to understand why they have been dropped from the rolls, and, if just, to restore them again.

There it is learned that at the hour of midnight, assassin-like, a bitdropped from the pension-rolls, and that affidavit is filed in the Department. The little clerk drops the pensioner from the roll of honor; and the great wrong is not alone to the soldier but to the man who is at the head of the Pension Department and who is held re-who is at the head of the Fension Department and sponsible before the country.

Mr. HOUSE. I hope the gentleman from Ohio does not understand me as advocating the detective system?

Mr. GEDDES. By no means. I should be surprised if any gentleman of the country man on this floor would stand up and seek to justify it. I would be amazed to look any man in the face here in this free country and have him to say "I am willing to justify the demand which is made for any such action as this, now or in the future."

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Will the gentleman from Ohio permit me to ask him a question in this connection?

Mr. GEDDES. In a moment. I want to say a word or two more about these detectives. The Commissioner of Pensions in his report of 1879, in referring to this odious and obnoxious detective force, says:

It is an offensive method of determining the merits of a pension claim, and is liable to be abused, and under the most scrupulous administration great injustice may sometimes be done.

We are asked to conclude a party and turn him out of court upon this offensive method of preparing the case against him, so liable to be abused and by means of which great injustice is often done. Why should the Government adopt and pursue with such unbending strictness and unrelenting severity methods of investigation in pension cases so abhorrent and hateful to all right-minded men? Why should our "Union soldiers" be made the victims of such cruel injustice? Why should the pensioned and pensionable "Union soldier" be compelled to endure the loss of honor and pension dues without an op-portunity to defend himself? Will you consent to a system of investigation that countenances, permits, and encourages spies secretly and tigation that countenances, permits, and encourages spies secretly and often at midnight to hunt up charges against the soldier, and by the statements of these malicious and sometimes vile and infamous men to deprive him of his blood-bought rights without being allowed to know who his accusers are, or any means of confronting them face to face and overwhelming them by proof? Why must this class of men with their rights be made exceptional and subjected to the painful mortification and disgrace of being stricken from the roll of honor—the pension roll of their country—without the opportunity of defense? Nowhere else does the Government seek to apply it in this manner. In no other tribunal, board, or court in this free country, where life, property, interests, or reputation are involved, is it tolerated. Other interests of equal magnitude have been managed by our Government interests of equal magnitude have been managed by our Government without resorting to this shameful system. For over ninety years past to the present day our Government, in all the questions of landwarrants, homestead entries, pre-emptions, and a great variety of other important interests, has investigated and disposed of them without resorting to this nefarious and despicable practice.

From thirteen States we have spread from ocean to ocean and multiplied into thirty-eight great States, and from three millions of people our population has increased until we now number doubtless fifty millions. This increase of our population, this development of our resources, and this marvelous augmentation of our wealth has not been accomplished without trials, suffering, and sacrifices. The history of our country during this wonderful progress records to the honor and glory of our people acts of heroism, deeds of valor, and lives of self-sacrificing devotion to our country unequaled in the annals of mankind.

Let us, then, by no act of ours mar this record by any act of ingratitude or injustice to our soldiers. Our resources are ample and abundant, if wisely and judiciously expended, to meet promptly all just and proper cases for pensions. Colossal fortunes have been built up out of the opportunities afforded by our wars and during the time our soldiers were struggling to maintain the Government.

From these fortunes men are enjoying incomes in sums that bewilder plain people. I witnessed recently one member of such a family covered over and bedazzled with diamonds valued at $800,000. In looking at one person with over one million of trinkets on the person my mind and heart contrasted with it the pinching poverty, wretchedness, and want of the actual necessaries of life all over this country. Our pension list may be great, but fortunes in this country are great, and I would relieve the wants of the one by paying them their dues by a tax upon the immense surplus incomes of the others.

During our late war we had 2,765,691 men in the field. This is shown by the last report from the War Department, June 29, 1879.

So you see, Mr. Chairman, it was a great war. Its magnitude startled So you see, Mr. Chairman, it was a great war. Its magnitude startled the civilized world. It involved great and grave interests. It maintained undivided and made indivisible a great nation. How was this great result accomplished? Consider the loss at Shiloh, Gettysburgh, and the dreadful campaigns against Richmond, and the sieges of Vicksburgh. Recall the fact that regiments one thousand strong were reduced to skeleton companies. Remember the list of prisoners and the necessary suffering resulting from it. Go to the Army hospital records and you will no longer be surprised at the numbers of pensioners and claimants. With the roll of killed and wounded and the disability resulting from the innumerable diseases incident to the disability resulting from the innumerable diseases incident to camp life, exposure, and fatigue, the wonder is that the list is not greater. But, great or small, justice must be done them, and that right early. The substantial merit, the real virtue of a pension in most cases consists in giving it promptly, with the least possible expense and inconvenience to the applicant

Let us imitate the spirit in which the military service was performed by these men. They often on a single day's notice promptly, cheerfully, and even enthusiastically, laid aside all business, gave up the endearments of home, left wife, parents, children, and friends, turned their backs upon the comforts of the family fireside, many leaving dependent parents or wife and children, and thus hazarding life and health and enduring hardships privation and an analysis. and health, and enduring hardships, privation, and suffering unpar-alleled in the history of wars. When the marches, battles, and im-prisonments, with all the suffering incident to them, are over the survivors return to their homes with physical constitutions broken, and many of them leaving on the hillsides and valleys of southern soil a leg or an arm. The value of such sacrifices cannot be estimated, measured either by what they lost or what the country gained. What, then, is our duty? It is plain, clear, and unavoidable. We must do them justice, or the very stones of the earth would cry out

Must do them justice, which against us.

Mr. Chairman, I know there is great difference of opinion as to the propriety, expediency, and even justice, of all our pension laws. The arrears of pension act I have heard criticised and condemned on this floor, but that is not now an open question. Through the liberality, and sense of instice of Congress it became a law, and in magnanimity, and sense of justice of Congress it became a law, and in thousands of cases has been executed. The recipients of these pensions will forever bless God that this Government appreciated and rewarded their services. Now, others equally meritorious must not be repelled, or their applications unnecessarily delayed, or they permitted to go unrewarded.

Let us, then, pass this bill, and thus provide for the country and grant to the soldier protection, and from thousands of humble firesides all over this land there will ascend morning and evening a sincere and earnest prayer that heaven's choicest blessings may forever rest upon this Courses, and shows all mon this country, the blood-bought earnest prayer that heaven's choicest blessings may forever rest upon this Congress, and above all, upon this country, the blood-bought heritage so dear to every American heart.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in some suggestions that were made it was thought advisable, so far as I had any consultation with gentlemen of the committee, that these gentleman who have charge of the minority bill, which does not antagonize the main and substantial features of this bill, but does present additional machinery in connection with it that would be proper and right for the organization of the court, should have at least a portion of this time, and therefore I am willing so far as I am generated to yield to those gentlemen such willing, so far as I am concerned, to yield to those gentlemen such willing, so lar as I am concerned, to yield to those gentlemen such time as they may desire.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman from Ohio allow me to ask him a question before he sits down?

Mr. GEDDES. Certainly.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I observe in this bill about the ninth line of the sixth section on the third page it is provided that it shall be competent for the claimant and the Government to take additional testimony by affidavit for or against any claim pending in said court. Now, I understand the purpose of the committee is to practice as may be necessary. But what I desire specially to call the attention of the gentleman to, bearing on that subject, is this, that it repeals no law now in force regulating the preparation and investigation of pension cases, so that all laws which are now in force would continue so in that respect.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. If the soldier could be examined for one minute by the proper authority, his claim might be established. Now, what I want is to leave to the soldier the right to go into the court and submit himself to the court for examination, and leave to the Government the right to call him for that purpose, and that I think the bill the not do. I think the bill does not do.

Mr. McMAHON. He would not be denied that privilege under the terms of this bill.

Mr. GEDDES. That is certainly not the purpose of the bill.
Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I do not wish to antagonize the bill; but it appears to me that it is not sufficiently guarded in that Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GEDDES. Before we proceed to a promiscuous discussion, I think we should hear from the other side of the House about the de-think we should hear from the other side of the House about the debate which is to take place upon the bill itself.

Mr. FINLEY. I wish to ask only one question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois as entitled to the floor.

Mr. MARSH. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. GEDDES. I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MARSH. Is there any provision in this bill which looks to a more speedy adjudication of the thousands of cases now "dragging their slow length along" in the Pension Office. It seemed to me, Mr. Chairman, this Congress ought to devise some mode or means by which cases, thousands and tens of thousands of them that have been hanging in the Pension Department for years, could be more speedily hanging in the Pension Department for years, could be more speedily adjudicated.

Mr. McMAHON. If the gentleman will allow me to say to him— Mr. MARSH. I should like to have an answer from the gentleman in charge of this bill on that subject. Then I will be glad to hear from the other gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GEDDES. You shall have an answer.

Mr. McMAHON. I can tell the gentleman from Illinois

Mr. MARSH. I wish an answer from the gentleman in charge of

Mr. McMAHON. I was endeavoring to answer, but if the gentleman is not seeking for information I have nothing further to say.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Thomas.]

Mr. BREWER. And I object to this miscellaneous debate.
Mr. FINLEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me for a question?

Mr. THOMAS. I will for a mere question.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I rise to a point of order. The hour of the gentleman from Ohio has not yet expired.
The CHAIRMAN. It has expired; and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. THOMAS.]
Mr. THOMAS. I will yield for two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio to answer the question of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. Marsh.]
Mr. GEDDES. I stated to the House in the course of my remarks that the main object of this bill is to organize a court of pensions. It was not thought best to encumber this bill with provisions regulating the conduct and the management of the Pension Bureau as it now is, or to provide additional force to facilitate the investigation now is, or to provide additional force to facilitate the investigation now is, or to provide additional force to facilitate the investigation and preparation of cases there.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. It is independent of that.

Mr. GEDDES. This is wholly independent of that, by other acts which have passed and may be passed, and are proper to be passed, wholly independent of this bill.

Mr. MARSH. I was in hopes, Mr. Chairman, there was something in this bill which would furnish a more speedy and surer mode of dein this bill which would furnish a more speedy and surer mode of determining these cases which have been hanging for years in the Department. I am sorry there is no such provision in this bill. It seems this provides machinery only for determining those cases which have been rejected by the Department, and provides no means to expedite the consideration and adjudication of the hundred or two hundred thousand cases which are now pending there.

Mr. GEDDES. The gentleman entirely overlooks the three or four thousand cases already pending before this body, and he seems to have entirely overlooked the fact we have spent many night sessions here in the consideration of pension cases. He seems, too, to have overlooked the fact it will take out of this body this class of business besides other work it will accomplish.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield to me.

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr.

CASWELL] for twenty minutes.

Mr. O'NEILL. How long does the general debate continue?

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no order closing debate.

Mr. CASWELL. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio for a

Mr. FINLEY. I find on page 2 of the bill reported by the majority of the committee the following provision: And when, in the judgment of said court, the claimant has an equitable right to relief, but which the law does not make provision for, said court shall recommend the allowance of the same by Congress, and thereupon such cases, including the exhibits and testimony therein, with the equitable reasons therefor, shall be certified by said court to Congress; and from and after the passage of this act only cases so certified shall be passed upon by Congress.

The point I desire to direct attention to is this: whether the commitee were of the opinion that this Congress could by an act of this kind tee were of the opinion that this Congress could by an act of this kind limit the powers of any subsequent Congress on any bill or claim that might be brought before it.

Mr. CASWELL. I will say in reply to the gentleman from Ohio, the committee had no such idea whatever. No act of this Congress could bind future Congresses in any respect, and the object of that portion of the bill was only to give to the court power to examine such cases as did not come within the law, with a view to aid Congress the contribute of the factors. such cases as did not come within the law, with a view to aid Congress by certifying a list accompanied by a statement of the facts so Congress, it was supposed, might act with greater facility on such cases. But no step, Mr. Chairman, can be taken by this Congress, in the opinion of that committee, (and I believe there is no disagreement about it,) which would bind any future Congress. It is utterly impossible for us to pass any law here that would strike down these cases and keep them from our doors. Just so long as members of Congress will introduce those bills, just so long they must be before the House.

the House.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire for a few minutes to express, so far as I may be able to do it, the views of the minority on these questions. I agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] that the country is much excited on the question of granting pensions. I think this excitement is unnecessarily stimulated. Claimants are led to believe, to a great extent, that they may present their claims or that they should present their claims, and that they should be passed upon and allowed in a very few months. If they understood the situation of the Pension Bureau, and would exercise some reason, which they should do, they would make up their minds that they must wait. should do, they would make up their minds that they must wait.

When we stop and consider that there have been over six hundred thousand original claims presented to the Pension Bureau since the passage of the act in 1862 we see the enormous work that has been laid out for that bureau to act upon. Of these six hundred thousand there have been three hundred and fifty thousand cases adjudicated. There are to-day two hundred and fifty thousand original cases unadjusted pending in the Pension Office. One hundred and seventy-five thousand of these cases have never been acted upon at all. Now it is a great task for that hursen to reason proceed the control of the he thousand of these cases have never been acted upon at all. Now it is a great task for that bureau to pass upon thirty or forty thousand cases in a year. Even if they could examine and dispose of fifty thousand a year it would take five years' constant labor to audit and dispose of the claims now pending in the Pension Bureau.

Then what is the remedy? Why, these bills provide none. These bills do not contemplate any action whatever until after the Pension Bureau has decided the case. It as that the Compiler the Pension Bureau has decided the case. I see that the Committee on Invalid Pensions in the Senate have reported a bill which proposes to organize in every congressional district a commission consisting of one lawyer and one surgeon to commence the trial of these cases in the locality where the pensioner resides. Now, if that be a good remedy we can see at once that we bring three hundred tribunals at work upon these two hundred and fifty thousand cases, and they might perhaps facilitate the passage of these claims through the bureau. But haps facilitate the passage of these claims through the bureau. But these bills here embody no such remedy. One of them, that presented by the majority, proposes to organize a court of pensions independent of every branch of the Government, to stand upon its own basis, into which these cases after rejection may be taken to be tried there de novo. Now, there have been sixty thousand cases rejected which are lying in the Pension Bureau. All of those are liable to be taken by appeal into that court. It is reasonable to suppose that one-half of them would be, because a large portion of those claims are represented by attorneys who would take them up from the place where they now slumber and put them into that court.

Suppose then, Mr. Chairman, one-half of these rejected cases should be taken there for trial, and trial de novo, with additional evidence, ex parte affidavits, and witnesses sworn in court, or re-examination of record evidence. Why, it would be a large day's work for that court to try ten cases a day. And if that were so it would take ten years' work, three hundred days in a year, to dispose of those thirty thousand cases, and they are to be augmented every day by twenty-five or thirty new cases.

or thirty new cases

or thirty new cases.

Is there a remedy there for the applicant for a pension? Is that a speedy remedy? Let me tell you that if you organize that court you place the entire business in the hands of lawyers who must practice at that bar, because no claimant would think of going to court without an attorney, and it would be expensive, slow, ponderous work. If the applicant secured a hearing in five or six or seven years he would do very well. The delay in the Supreme Court would bear no comparison with it whatever. Besides, if a practitioner was not in harmony with the Pension Office, he could retain his evidence, procure a rejection before the Commissioner, take his evidence, in entirely cure a rejection before the Commissioner, take his evidence in entirely anew, and submit it to the court for the first time. Consequently, you see that this court would not furnish a speedy remedy. It may be seriously questioned whether we should depart from the ordinary channels of auditing claims within the department of the Government. If we are to do so, we should act with great caution. Now, the minority propose by the bill which they submit to organize a board of review, consisting of two lawyers of equal ability to those who shall constitute this court, and one surgeon, also skilled, to sit in review of the record as it may be passed from the Commissioner to that board of review. They are to be independent of the Pension Office, but subjected to the Department of the Interior, to whom they shall make

Mr. GEDDES. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question in that connection because I feel it to be important?

in that connection because I feel it to be important?

Mr. CASWELL. Certainly.

Mr. GEDDES. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin to refer to the court that is provided for by the Senate bill as an argument against the creation of this court.

Mr. CASWELL. Oh,no; the gentleman misunderstands me. I say that has nothing to do with these bills here.

Mr. GEDDES. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. CASWELL. The bill before the Senate would facilitate the adjudication of the cases now pending in the bureau, but would have

Mr. CASWELL. The bill before the Senate would facilitate the adjudication of the cases now pending in the bureau, but would have nothing to do with those after an appeal had been taken.

Mr. ROTHWELL. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CASWELL. Certainly; although the remarks I had intended to submit will be distorted by interruptions.

Mr. ROTHWELL. Is it not a fact that the objections suggested against this court will lie with equal force against the board of review as suggested by the minority report?

Mr. CASWELL. I thank the gentleman from Missouri for calling my attention to that question. Any one who has practiced in courts knows something of the delays which surround any case that is pend-

It has a docket; it has ponderous weight of machinery. All three of the judges must sit in examining any one case. You cannot well divide the court and place one judge here and one there to commence the hearing of testimony and the argument of cases before the court. But if you have a board of review it will take the record as made up and returned to that board by the Commissioner of Pensions, like a certiorari in court, and each one of the board can take his case and examine it, and if the Commissioner has made an error he can cor-

Mr. GEDDES. Wherein would that be superior to the report of any single member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House?

Mr. CASWELL. If there were three men constituting a board of review, who gave their entire time and attention to the examining of these cases until they became learned in them, with a line of decisions and rulings which would govern their action, they would soon fall into a channel in which they could audit these claims with great rapidity; and their rulings would go to the examiners in the Pension Bureau for their guidance, and errors would be less frequent.

Bureau for their guidance, and errors would be less requent.

Now, this proposed court of pensions would take these cases without form, without any certificate or ceremony, take them up by the bushel, if you please, and examine them and return them without any form or ceremony. This bill provides that if they find the evidence insufficient to pass a claim, if, in other words, they affirm the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions in rejecting the claim, they may return the case to the Pension Bureau, where it is to be opened for further and additional evidence before the Commissioner. I think that every claimant should be compelled to make out his case before the Commissioner, to submit all his evidence there, and give the Commissioner an opportunity to pass upon it.

These are only the essential differences between the two bills presented by the committee. One proposes to create a court, the other to establish a board of review. Before the one tribunal a new trial may be had; the case would be gone all ever from the beginning; the evidence would be examined from the beginning. In the other case the board of review would be confined to the record as made up before the Commissioner; that record would be examined and the decision of the Commissioner either affirmed or disaffirmed.

Let me say to gentlemen that we do not differ in respect to the desirability of keeping these pension bills out of Congress. Both the bills now presented provide that equitable cases may be certified to Congress and there passed upon.

We examined the question whether we could vest this court or this board of review with power to pass upon equitable cases and grant relief. A little thought will satisfy gentlemen that that could not be done. To do that would be to vest legislative authority in this tribunal, and they would be allowed to legislate or to decide or to debunal, and they would be allowed to legislate or to decide or to determine what man should have a pension and what man should not have any, without any law to govern them in their decisions. Consequently they cannot be allowed to do more than to recommend to Congress such equitable cases as they may deem proper.

Mr. WILLITS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLITS. I would inquire of the gentleman what he means by equitable cases?

Mr. CASWELL. I mean such cases as now come to this House. I understand these cases do not come within any general law, or they would not be here, but would be pending in the Pension Bureau instead of being before Congress.

Mr. WILLITS. Is it not true that more than three-fourths of all the cases that come here are cases which have been rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions for the reason that it is impossible for the claimants to make perfect proof; and if they could make the proof they would be covered by existing law?

Mr. CASWELL. I am not familiar enough with them to answer the gentleman. I suppose they come here because the claimants cannot make out a case before the Commissioner of Pensions; they fail to establish by proper evidence the fact of disability or the fact that the disability, if it exists, was incurred while in the line of duty, or some other requirement that is necessary to bring the case within the general law. I suppose it is that class of cases that comes

Before I conclude I desire to submit a table which I think gentlemen will be interested in examining. It is a table showing the work men will be interested in examining. It is a table showing the work of the Pension Office during nine months of the present fiscal year, from July 1, 1879, to March 31, 1880, together with the work done in the office for the corresponding nine months of the preceding fiscal year. I submit that table for the purpose of showing that there is a gradual improvement in the working of that office.

Mr. MYERS. Will the gentleman state whether that table was prepared by Mr. Bentley, and prepared by him since the organization of the select committee.

of the select committee?

Mr. CASWELL. Mr. Bentley prepared the table to-day at my request, so that I might have it here this evening for the purpose of showing the amount of labor performed in that office, and the number of cases acted upon. This is the table:

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to my colleague [Mr. Davis, of Illinois] for ten minutes.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this committee, this select committee which was appointed by this House for the special purpose of devising some means whereby the mass of claims pending in the Pension Office might be more rapidly adjudicated, it seems to me have not been happy in their results, and this bill which is reported by the majority of the committee as a panacea of all the evils existing does not, in my opinion, give the relief sought and should not pass. It provides for a court of three judges, and requires the concurrence of a majority to give validity to its decisions. Jurisdiction is conferred in all cases appealed to it from the Commissioner of Pensions. The appeal lies in pending cases in which requirements of additional evi-appeal lies in pending cases in which requirements of additional evidence have been made, as well as in rejected claims.

The bill directs that all claims now before Congress shall be referred to the court for consideration. These number about six thousand in both Houses. The Pension Office has in its files about forty there are that here here formally rejected and all the court for the pension of the pensio sand in both Houses. The Pension Office has in its files about forty thousand claims that have been formally rejected, and which are still contested by the claimants, and in which the adverse action is but seldom reversed. There will be, then, forty-six thousand claims in which we may reasonably expect appeals to this court will be taken. They undoubtedly will be taken in nearly all these cases, as they have everything to gain and nothing to lose by such a course. The pensions denied them by the one tribunal may be granted by the other.

The judges are to be learned in the law—lawyers. With their professional training, and from the very necessities of the case, they must fully ascertain the facts in each case before them by a careful examination of all the papers. The class of claims in question having been long and strongly contested are the most voluminous in the files of the Pension Office. The judge who will examine and decide in two such cases per diem will fully discharge his duty. The two cases examined any day by one judge must be examined another day by a second member of the court; so that they will not dispose of but six cases per diem; and estimating at that number for three hundred days in the year gives eighteen hundred claims as the number in which we may expect decisions to be given in the period named. which we may expect decisions to be given in the period named. Double it, or quadruple it, and how long are anxious claimants to be made to wait for decision or judgment. Nor is this all; in thousands of claims pending before the Pension Office the claimants have filed all the testimony they can produce, but not sufficient in the judgment of that office to justify the allowance of their pensions, and it insists upon the requirements of additional evidence made by it.

This refusal to allow the pension upon the best evidence the claimant can furnish is equivalent to a formal rejection. In many claims for increase and arrears of pension the rates fixed by the Pension Of-fice are unsatisfactory to the parties in interest. The bill also pro-vides for the consideration by the proposed court of equitable claims— those not within the provisions of the general law and which, as a rule, have never been filed with the Commissioner of Pensions because clearly not within his power to allow. No one may state the number of claims falling within these classes, but they will run far up in the of claims falling within these classes, but they will run far up in the thousands, quite enough in themselves to give employment to a dozen such courts for years to come. Add to these the current rejections, which numbered 12,780 original claims during the last fiscal year, and the absurdity of the bill is apparent.

I need say no more to show the entire inadequacy of the proposed court to handle the work that will come before it. Instead of the chief clerk and two assistants provided in the bill, they will need, and be compelled to have, not less than thirty clerks to care for and correspond in the thousands of claims that will reach their files. There are serious objections to the measure in other respects. The There are serious objections to the measure in other respects. The members of the court are charged with the exercise of judicial functions, and at the same time are the sole representatives of the interests of the Government. They are called upon to give impartial judgment while at the same time it will become their duty to meet and ment while at the same time it will become their duty to meet and answer, in behalf of the Government, the interested statement of the law and the facts, made by counsel for the claimants. Their decisions, while professing to be upon appeals from the action of the Commissioner of Pensions, may be founded upon testimony never before him. It inhibits any future Congress from passing special acts granting pensions except they shall have been certified by the court to be equitable cases, an inhibition which will amount to nothing more than declaration of progress by the Congress which was ness the bill a declaration of purpose by the Congress which may pass the bill, and cannot bind the conscience nor the acts of any Congress that may

It confers jurisdiction upon the court to hear and determine whether It confers jurisdiction upon the court to hear and determine whether a record of desertion in the War Department should be removed, and if so, "then the claim for pension shall be considered the same as if said record did not exist." It does not authorize the removal of the charge, and if it did or not is immaterial, inasmuch as I understand that claims for pension are now under existing law considered just the "same as if said record did not exist." Desertion is a fact to be considered as other facts in determining if the soldier was or was not in the line of duty when he became disabled, and the fact of desertion must still be weighed in that connection, even though the record of desertion is obliterated.

In my judgment, and in the light of the experience gained in Com-

In my judgment, and in the light of the experience gained in Committee on Invalid Pensions, this bill is radically wrong, in that it is intended to aid the least deserving class of claimants, and makes no provision to expedite the settlement of meritorious claims. The bill is intended to throw a protecting arm around these claims, and entirely neglects to provide for the meritorious ones which are crowding upon the Pension Office by hundreds of thousands.

Taken all in all, and much more might be said about it, the measure is crude, and manifestly drawn from the heart rather than from the head.

It is obvious that its framer gave but little study to the subject, and had mainly in view the relief of the grievous burden imposed upon the pension committees of this Congress, and not for the relief of meritorious cases pending in the Pension Office. The substitute offered by the minority of the select committee is better in some of its features but open to the full force of the figures I have given as to the number of claims that have been formally rejected by the Pension Office, and the inadequacy of a court of the character provided to handle the subject. handle the subject.

Mr. THOMAS. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from

In the minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Thompson.]

Mr. Thompson.]

Mr. Thompson, of Iowa. I thank my friend from Illinois for the opportunity of placing myself on record in regard to this very important measure. I think it is conceded by every man that so long as the Government grants pensions, whatever relief is given in that direction should be granted as speedily as possible, and in a manner to meet the necessities of the case.

It is a notorious fact that complaints have gone throughout the length and breadth of the land against the Commissioner of Pensions; charges are made that he has been dereliet in the performance of his official duty. Now, while I have no question that there may have been some unnecessary delay in action upon these cases, yet I do think that many of these complaints are altogether unfounded. Parties who have placed their claims in the hands of the Commissioner for adjudication months or years ago have become impatient; comfor adjudication months or years ago have become impatient; complaints of such parties have found their way into the public prints in every State of the Union, until it has become almost a fixed and absolute belief in the minds of a great portion of the community that the fault lies with the Commissioner of Pensions. I have no such idea; for when we come to contemplate the number of pension claims that have been pushed through that office during the last five years and the number pending there to-day, it is utterly unreasonable to expect a speedy adjudication of such claims in that office with a single head and with the limited amount of clerical force at his disposal.

There is one matter, however, in regard to which I agree emphatically with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. Geddes.] I concur with him in his denunciation of the spy system, which has called forth condemnation all over the country. I do not wish to be understood as saying that it is improper for an officer of the Government to emas saying that it is improper for an omicer of the Government to employ detectives for the purpose of ascertaining facts; for it is a truth that unworthy persons have been placed upon the pension-rolls through fraud and perjury. It is perfectly right, therefore, that Government officers having charge of the matter should take such means as may be best calculated, in their belief, to get at the facts in these cases. But I do denounce the system by which testimony brought into the Pension Office is placed under lock and key; and when a member of Congress or an investigating committee seeks access to that testimony in any case even the name of the accuser who has placed that evidence on record is denied. I say that such a system is at war with all our notions of justice and right.

Mr. MARSH. Does the gentleman affirm it to be a fact that the Commissioner of Pensions has refused to permit members of Congress.

to see evidence collected by these detectives or special agents? Several Members. Yes.

Mr. MARSH. I want to say that so far as my experience is concerned I have never been refused access to any evidence of that kind in cases which I desired to investigate.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. I am very glad to hear it; I have been.
Mr. ATHERTON. The office, if it permits you to see the evidence, will not let you disclose who the witnesses are; you are not allowed to see the evidence except upon a pledge of secrecy.
Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. It is doubtless the fault of the law rather than of the Commissioner that he is obliged to resort to this kind of testimony for the purpose of establishing the facts in pension cases. But it is not right that parties accused in this way are not permitted to be confronted with the witnesses against them, or not permitted to be confronted with the witnesses against them, or to rebut their testimony in any way whatever.

When we come to look over the records we must be satisfied that there is something wrong which needs to be remedied; and I think the bill reported by the minority of the committee would meet the evil fairly and with justice. By turning to the report of the Commissioner of Pensions we find that on the 20th of June, 1879, there were 242,755 pension applications pending in that office; that during the year there were 31,346 new names added to the list; 908 formerly dropped were restored, and 13,497 were dropped from the pensionrolls. Now, when we take into consideration the fact that there are these 13,497 soldiers across whose names has been drawn a black line of dishonor, upon testimony which is hidden from the eyes of the of dishonor, upon testimony which is hidden from the eyes of the world, and to which, so far as I am aware, no man has been allowed access for a single moment—and in any case the name of the accuser is kept from the party who is thus placed under ban—I say that such a system is at war with all our preconceived notions of justice. and right.

I submit that the bill reported by the minority of the committee brings this matter properly within the jurisdiction of a court. When-ever a demand is made for the testimony which will show the reason why any pensioner has been dropped, that evidence comes into the why any pensioner has been dropped, that evidence comes into the broad glare of day, and the accused can confront the witness against him and show the falsity of that testimony.

I know there is objection made in the bill simply because this is made subject to the Interior Department. If that is a defect, how easily that objection can be met by striking out "as a subordinate branch of the Interior Department;" so it will read:

That there is hereby established a board of appeals and review, to be composed

Mr. ROBINSON. What is the objection to making it subordinate to the Interior Department?

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa. The objection is, that it keeps it, as it were, in a circumlocution office. But, sir, I believe it ought not to be subordinate to anything except Congress, the power which created it. It should act independently. I know I have heard frequently the argument made on this floor that the objection to bringing these cases into Congress was that we could not give them proper attention; that the Calendar is loaded down with such a number they cannot possibly be reached and disposed of during the term of this Congress, and consequently, however anxious Congress might be to grant relief, it is impossible for it to dispose of all these cases. And from evidence we have here there are over three thousand cases now in the hands of the committee. Out of the whole number we have passed probably fifty; I think not to exceed that number.

am opposed, Mr. Chairman, to making the decision in the first instance final, as provided for in the bill reported by the gentleman from Ohio. You say you are opposed to making Congress a court of appeal. So am I. But heretofore, Mr. Chairman, when we looked into the fact, there was no other place provided. The moment the law was passed you placed the Commissioner of Pensions in a straightjacket. He was the creature of Congress, and out of that straight-jacket he could not move. When, under the law, cases were rejected, you say do not come to Congress and make it a court of appeal. In the name of Heaven, where was the man whose case was rejected to come for his rights unless the doors of Congress were open to him so come for his rights unless the doors of Congress were open to him so he could come in and at any time appeal to you on the ground that injustice had been done him, not through the fault of the Commissioner of Pensions, but because of the inadequacy of the law, that no human foresight could see or provide for. Congress has been generous. I believe it is willing yet to be generous to the defenders of the old flag and the country, but I say at the same time human wisdom and foresight could not foresee every emergency which could arise, and the Commissioner did right in rejecting these claims. Do not let us throw all the blame upon the Commissioner in the absence of a court of this kind. There should be such a court which should be court of this kind. There should be such a court, which should be made a soldiers' court, so the claimant whose case was rejected might be able to come in and place all his testimony on record and so he might bring forward his witnesses to show why he is entitled to the might bring forward his witnesses to show why he is entitled to the pension which he claims notwithstanding that under the law the Commissioner could not give it to him.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Chairman, the committee in looking over the great field of pensions—for the field is indeed an extended one and the burden is one of no little weight—have attempted to find a means whereby claimants who have come to Congress for relief may have their cases considered and disposed of, and whereby Congress can be relieved from this great and onerous burden. I suppose there is not a member of this House but realizes the utter impossibility of passing all the private pension bills which may be reported by the Committee. a member of this House but realizes the utter impossibility of passing all the private pension bills which may be reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to say nothing of the hundreds and thousands of cases which cannot be considered even by that committee. Realizing that some relief was needed, the committee set to work to find a remedy, and looking to that end of the line which came to the door of Congress we found it was hitched on to cases which had been rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions. We began to follow that line, and following it found a remedy was needed. Hence we have proposed a remedy for that class of cases and not for the cases which are pending and undetermined in the Pension Office.

The committee in discussing this question, which was brought before it by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. Coffroth,] chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, agreed that some tribunal ought to be organized with authority to investigate the sixty thousand rejected cases, in most of which the claimants feel aggrieved at the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions and come to Congress for relief by special act.

So far the whole committee were agreed, but the committee were not agreed as to what sort of tribunal should be organized, nor were they agreed as to what jurisdiction should be accorded to it by Congress. The majority, crystallizing their views into the shape of a bill, gress. The majority, crystallizing their views into the shape of a bill, propose to organize a court to be composed of three judges, to have jurisdiction, on appeal, in all cases rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions. In addition to that it is provided that they shall have original jurisdiction to try cases de novo by allowing additional evidence. The bill involves all the complicated and expensive machinery of a court, with three judges, three clerks, and a bailiff, with trials the same as in any other court.

The minority proposes a different plan or system, which is the organization of a board to be called a board of appeals or review, which shall be composed of two men learned in the law, and one of whom shall be learned in medicine and surgery, which shall have jurisdiction to try and determine all cases adversely decided upon by the Commissioners of Pensions. It shall be, however, strictly a board of review and shall pass upon the question as to whether the Commissioner's decision was constant as the criderocal decision. sioner's decision was correct or incorrect upon the evidence which was submitted to him, and in order that the views of the minority may be understood I shall ask that this bill which is proposed as a substitute be read as a part of my remarks.

Mr. FINLEY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question in this connection.

Mr. THOMAS. I will yield with pleasure.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman has referred to the necessity of two members of this board to be learned in the law, and one of whom shall be learned in the science of medicine and surgery. I should be glad if he would state the reason for the requirement of one of this board at least shall be learned in the science of medicine and surgery.

at least shall be learned in the science of medicine and surgery.

Mr. THOMAS. I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to that, and has asked me the question why the minority have provided for the appointment of a member of this board who shall be learned in the science of medicine and surgery. Briefly, I will state the reason. It is this: it has been urged by many persons that the board of surgeons at the Pension Office, when the evidence shows a man is entitled to a pension, grades and cuts down the rate of pension, without regard to the evidence. In order that there may be no grinding down or cutting under, it is provided that a member of this board shall be learned in the science of medicine and surgery, and will be able to determine from the evidence before him what the degree of disability is, and what rate of pension should be granted. degree of disability is, and what rate of pension should be granted to the applicant. Heretofore it has been referred to a board of physicians, as I have stated. This will do away with the necessity of that reference and simplify the matter in that respect.

Now, I ask that the bill proposed by the minority of the committee be read.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the reading of the bill. Every member of the committee has a copy of it and the reading of it can hardly be necessary.

Mr. THOMAS. The reading of it will come out of my own time. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to establish a board of appeals to review cases where claims for pension, claims for increase of pension, claims for arrears of pension, and application for restoration to the pension-roll have been or shall hereafter be rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be, and is hereby, established as a subordinate branch of the Interior Department a board of appeals and review, to be composed of three members, two of whom shall be learned in the law, and one who shall be learned in the sciences of medicine and surgery.

SEC. 2. That the members of said board shall be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold their office for the term of three years, or until their successor or successors are appointed and qualified, and shall each receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, payable quarterly on the first days of July, October, January, and April of each year.

SEC. 3. That before entering upon the duties of their office, the members of said board shall take and subscribe to a solemn oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to discharge their duties according to law and to the best of their ability.

Sec. 3. That before entering upon the duties of their office, the members of said board shall take and subscribe to a solemn eath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to discharge their duties according to law and to the best of their ability.

Sec. 4. That said board shall be subordinate to and under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, but independent of, and in no way under the control of, the Commissioner of Pensions.

Sec. 5. That said board shall appoint a clerk, whose duty it shall be to keep a complete record of the proceedings of said board, and who shall receive a salary of $1,800 per annum, payable quarterly, on the first days of July, October, January, and April, respectively. Before entering upon the duties of his office said clerk shall take and subscribe to a solemn eath to support the Constitution of the United States, and to discharge his duties according to law to the best of his ability.

Sec. 6. That said board shall keep a docket, to be properly prepared under the direction of its members, upon which shall be entered each case which may come before the board for its action.

Sec. 7. That said board is hereby authorized to, and shall, adopt rules of practice regulating proceedings before it, and shall have power to maintain order during its sessions, and punish for contempt.

Sec. 8. That said board shall have jurisdiction on appeal to review and determine all cases where claims for pension, claims for increase of pension, and applications for restoration to the pension-roll have been or shall hereafter be decided adversely to the claimant, either in whole or in part, by the Commissioner of Pensions, including all cases pending and undetermined in Congress, and including also all cases where the name of a pensioner has been, or shall be hereafter, dropped from the pension-roll.

SEC. 15. That said board shall, in determining such cases as come before it, give the pension laws a liberal construction with a view to do complete justice to claimants.

SEC. 16. That if said board shall find that the claimant is legally entitled to a pension, they shall also find and fix the rate of pension claimant should receive, whereupon the Secretary of the Interior shall cause the name of the claimant, in whose favor decision has been rendered, to be placed upon the pension-rolls, and he shall receive pension at the rate fixed by said board.

SEC. 17. That if said board shall find that the claimant is not entitled to a pension under the strict letter of the law, but is equitably entitled thereto, they shall so decide and shall fix the rate at which claimant should be pensioned, and shall submit a copy of such decision with the reason and grounds upon which it is based, together with a synopsis of the evidence in the case, to the Secretary of the Interior, who shall transmit the same to the Speaker of the House of Representatives for legislative action thereon.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to make a few further remarks in reference to this matter for the purpose of showing the reason why it is proposed to make this tribunal subordinate to the Interior Department. The majority of the committee propose to organize an independent establishment, to belong neither to the Department of Justice, to the Department of State, nor to the Interior, but to be wholly independent. The minority of the committee believe that this board of review or court of appeals, if a court shall be stablished enother to the later of the section. leve that this board of review of court of appeals, if a court shall be established, ought to be in harmony and accord with one of the several branches of the Government, and inasmuch as pension matters have always been under the jurisdiction of the Interior Department, it was believed by the members constituting the minority that this board or court should remain subordinate to that Department, but wholly independent of, and in no way under the control of, the Commissioner of Pensions. That is the reason for this feature in the bill. Another reason why the minority of the committee have submitted this bill in preference to the majority report is that cases can be rethis bill in preference to the majority report is that cases can be reviewed much more rapidly where the decision depends alone on the written evidence now on file in the Pension Office and War and Navy Departments.

The bill provides that if the board of review find that the claimant is not entitled to a pension under the strict letter of the law but is equitably entitled thereto, and so find, they submit the grounds upon which they base the decision with a synopsis of the evidence to the Secretary of the Interior, who sends it here for the action of Congress. We were opposed to the establishment of an institution which would have the power to make and enforce the laws. We believed that the law-making power should remain in the hands of Congress and should not be delegated by them to any inferior tribunal. And where parties are not entitled to pension under the strict letter of the law it ought to be granted by the legislative authority of this Government. Hence this report.

Mr. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. STONE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. STONE. I wish to know what is meant by the term "that this board shall be subordinate to the Interior Department." Do you mean by that that the decision of the board shall be subjected to review by the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. THOMAS. Not at all. It is not intended to be subjected to his review. It is intended that it shall be simply a part of the Bureau of Pensions, and under the Interior Department.

Mr. STONE. But wholly independent in its rulings?

Mr. THOMAS. Its rulings will be wholly independent. Another reason for this is that we were opposed to two heads to one bureau of the same Department, and hence we propose to confine this to the one Bureau of Pensions.

Mr. BARBER. What may the Secretary of the Interior have to consider in connection with it ?

Mr. THOMAS. He will cause the name of the successful applicant to be placed on the pension-roll. It is his duty to transmit the result and finding of the court to the legislative branch of the Government, after they find the man is equitably entitled to a pension.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. May I ask the gentleman from Illinois what is the objection to this board of appeals being in itself independent of any Department as a court of claims? Under this bill, is it not simply being subordinated to the Interior Department? Is it not, in other words, merely the Interior Department reviewing the Interior Department?

It not, in other words, merely the interior Department reviewing the Interior Department?

Mr. THOMAS. This plan is proposed because this pension business should belong, as now, to the Interior Department, and because, as I have stated, we were opposed to having two heads to the Pension Bureau in the Interior Department.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McMAHON was recognized.

Mr. URNER. Before the gentleman from Illinois takes his seat, I desire to ask him a question.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask permission of the committee to answer the question of the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon]

Mr. McMAHON. Certainly.
Mr. URNER. I understood the gentleman from Illinois to say that the bill of the minority of the committee proposes when this board of review shall have admitted a name to the roll it shall report the same to the Secretary of the Interior, and that in that sense it is subordinate to the Interior Department. Is there any difference between the bill reported by the majority and the bill reported by the tween the bill reported by the majority and the bill reported by the minority in that particular?

Mr. THOMAS. There is. The bill of the majority propose to establish a court independent of the Interior Department and of every other Department of the Government.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not know whether we will be able to get another evening for the consideration of this bill, and it certainly will not get a chance in the ordinary transaction of business on the floor of the House.

Mr. DUNNELL. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] intend now to address the committee?

Mr. McMAHON. I was about to make a proposition to the committee. It is this: If there is any disposition to proceed at once to consider the bill under the five-minute rule—I repeat in the hearing of all the gentlemen around me, so that any one who dissents from of an the gentlemen around me, so that any one who dissents from that idea may express himself now—if there is any disposition to proceed to the discussion of this bill under the five-minute rule I will waive my right to the floor for the purpose of proceeding with the consideration of the bill by sections. I think I never knew any subject of this kind upon which a man could not express all he wanted to say in two or three consecutive five minute speeches to an intelliging to say in two or three consecutive five-minute speeches to an intelligent body of men. But if I yield the floor only for somebody else to occupy it for an hour there would be nothing gained by that.

Mr. THOMAS. Let us have the discussion under the five-minute

Mr. CASWELL. I will say to the gentleman from Ohio that I think those on this side of the House would be willing to have the arrangement made which he suggests.

Mr. GEDDES. To meet the sentiment manifested all around me, I move that the committee rise, with a view to limiting general debate.

Mr. McMAHON. I only made the proposition for the purpose of discovering whether unanimous consent could be had.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. What is the proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the proposition of the gentleman from Ohio. It is that by unanimous consent the general debate on this bill be now closed. Is there objection?

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not yield the floor, then, because it would not be worth while to rise to limit debate with the limited number of members here to-night.

members here to-night.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is entitled to one

Mr. McMAHON. Before yielding the floor, as I propose to do, to some other gentlemen here, I desire to make a few remarks in the opening of my hour, as I may not have an opportunity to make them at any other time.

I live in a district which, in addition to the disabled soldiers who

I live in a district which, in addition to the disabled soldiers who are residents of that district in the ordinary sense, has in it at least four thousand disabled Union soldiers from the different parts of the United States, from the State of Maine to the State of California.

I would not like to state how many cases of applications for pensions I represent upon this floor; something over two hundred. Anybody can see at once if I do justice to those cases I am unfit for the performance of any other duty whatever. It is impossible for a member of Congress to attend to all these cases in a proper way and to attend to his legislative duties as well. And it is impossible for a committee to give that attention to all the cases that are brought here that a committee ought to give in order to insure that confidence in the House which is necessary in order to its taking for granted the result of the committee's investigation.

I have not thoroughly made up my mind as to the two bills, or three

I have not thoroughly made up my mind as to the two bills, or three bills, which are before the House. But I am satisfied of one thing, that the business ought to be expedited through the different Departments of the Government. And not only ought it to be expedited, but it ought to be properly and carefully expedited. I make no complaint against the Commissioner of Pensions when I say that many cases are rejected in his office that ought not to be rejected, because he does not personally pass upon them and cannot.

he does not personally pass upon them and cannot.

Nor do I make any complaint against him that he does not permit a member of Congress to see the papers. I do not know that I have ever made any request of him which he has refused. I have not made a great many, but I have no recollection of any being refused. But I go beyond the proposition of his allowing a member of Congress the right to see papers filed in his office. I do not believe that the Commissioner of Pensions or any other officer of this Government has a right to treat any claimant who comes before his Department as though he were a convicted man in advance. I do not believe he has got any right to act upon the supposition that a person who is the attorney for a claimant is necessarily engaged in a scheme to defraud the Government. I do not understand why the Commissioner of Pensions should not furnish not only to a member of Congress, but to every reputable attorney who practices before his Department—and I believe they exclude those who are not reputable—not only the reason in the abstract of his refusal to grant a pension, but the names of the witnesses upon whose testimony he has refused to consider the case

Is the Government of the United States to stand in the position of refusing a fair hearing to a man who comes before it as a disabled soldier? Shall it avail itself of simply the privilege of the power that it has, and say to the soldier: "I have these affidavits in my possession, and I am-going to render judgment upon these affidavits, for they are good enough for me; but you cannot see them?" Now, that is not right.

I do not care that the Commissioner of Pensions in his zeal for the interests of the Government says that it will not do to allow the attorneys of these claimants to know what the testimony against the claimants is, for he may go to work and get up testimony on the other side. Such a course would be followed in any court, in any trial; and there is no reason why the United States should have one rule in such matters and there should be a different rule in the courts for private individuals.

In the last Congress I undertook to correct this evil, and I did get something done in the way of an amendment upon an appropriation bill during the extra session in regard to the inspection of testimony and the introduction of proof. What I there succeeded in obtaining was a correction in part of this evil. At first, when I offered my amendment in the last session of the last Congress, I proposed to provide that all the testimony should be open to inspection. I yielded that point at the solicitation of some gentlemen on the floor of the House. But I afterward succeeded in getting in a proviso that the Commissioner of Pensions should have no right to withhold or refuse a pension except upon notice to the pensioner and a hearing upon sworn testimony other than the certificate of the examining surgeon. Of course that applies only to one class of cases; that is, where a man who has already received a pension is about to have it reduced or taken away from him altogether.

But I put my proposition upon a broader basis—that whenever a man applies to this Government for a pension, whatever proof the Government has against his claim ought to be as open to the inspection of the pensioner or of his attorney as gentlemen say it now is to the inspection of members of Congress. Why should I as a representative in Congress have a right to go to the Pension Bureau and inspect the testimony in that bureau in any particular case, and why should not the disabled soldier or his attorney have the same right? should not the disabled soldier or his attorney have the same right? Where do I get any superior right or power as the representative of that disabled soldier to have access to the records of the Pension Bureau that he as an individual against the Government should not have? It is his interest that is in controversy, not mine. He is the person to be wronged, and not me, if any wrong is to be done. But if I am to go there every time it is needed to examine the testimony in his case, it is but an additional burden imposed upon me, and I claim imposed unnecessarily. The whole testimony should be laid before the pensioner himself.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would ask the gentleman if the custom to which he now refers does not prevail in all the Departments of the Government, of extending to a Representative the courtesy of allowing him ment, of extending to a Representative the courtesy of allowing him to see all the papers in any case which he desires to examine?

Mr. McMAHON. I suppose that to be true, though I have no recollection of ever having pushed any claim against this Government except a pension claim or a claim for back pay. One reason why I oppose the proposition presented by the minority bill here is that, according to that bill, when these cases shall go to the court or the board which it provides, they are to go there to be tried upon the testimony that has already been filed before the Commissioner of Pensions. I am not willing that the applicant for a pension shall be taken by surprise. I do not want him to be sent to a court, and when he gets there to find that the Government has made up a case against him and has obtained a pile of affidavits which he has never had an opportunity to see, affidavits made by Tom, Dick, and Harry, perhaps by his personal enemies, perhaps men of such personal disrepute that they would not be believed anywhere.

I do not want, when his appeal is taken, and he at last ascertains

I do not want, when his appeal is taken, and he at last ascertains who are the persons who have prevented him from obtaining justice from the Government, that he shall be cut off from filing any other proof in the case for the purpose of obtaining what is his right.

I, therefore, prefer the bill of my friend from Ohio, [Mr. GEDDES,] which proposes to send these cases to a court. But, is it not a strange commentary may the meant are the definition of the proposes.

commentary upon the present method of transacting this business of pensions that the moment such a case gets before this court, composed of three members, the attorney of the pensioner will be able to walk right into the court and to examine all the papers on either side, to see everything that can influence the judgment of that court in granting or in refusing a pension; but so long as the case is in the hands of a mere executive officer of the Government nothing can be seen the minority bill, which provides that if the application for a pension is decided adversely "the claimant shall have the right, if he or she so elect, to submit to the Commissioner of Pensions other and further evidence in support of said claim."

Mr. McMAHON. And thereupon you open the case before the Commissioner of Pensions, who makes another call upon the Adjutant-General, and the matter lies there for months; then he makes another call upon the Surgeon-General, and under the red-tape system running through all the different Departments the matter lies there for months; and after a while the applicant dies while the Government is determining the question whether the man was actually disabled in the

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. If this court is to be established, I desire to know whether the witnesses are to be produced in court to be examined orally or whether their testimony is to be taken by deposition, or in what manner the applicant for a pension is to get relief from the court? If you compel the poor applicant for a pension to employ a lawyer in order to present his testimony, either by producing witnesses to be orally examined in court or by taking depositions, will you not subject applicants to heavy expenses which a very large number of them will never be able to meet?

Mr. McMAHON. I do not think there is a suggestion in either the Mr. McMAHON. I do not think there is a suggestion in either the minority or the majority bill that the party is to be compelled to attend in person or to take depositions. It would be a very great outrage if such a provision were made, for the reason that the great mass of men who apply for pensions are poor men; many of them never apply until their necessities compel them to do so; and that is the reason why so many of these applications have come in recently. These applications are decided now by the Commissioner of Pensions upon exparte testimony; that is, the applicant furnishes affidavits and the Government probably takes testimony; I do not know whether it does or not, but I suppose it does in certain cases. I do not understand that either of the bills emanating from this committee provides that the applicant shall make a journey to attend this court not understand that either of the bills emanating from this committee provides that the applicant shall make a journey to attend this court in person or shall be compelled to employ a lawyer for the purpose of taking depositions. To require the applicant to present his testimony in the shape of depositions would be substantially a denial of justice except as to a class of men who would not need pensions. Therefore, the bill of my colleague [Mr. GEDDES] provides that these cases shall be heard upon affidavit; and I stand strictly upon that proposition. Of course, if the pensioner should desire to produce a witness or to present himself in person, as was suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] for inspection and examination, the right would be reserved for him to do so. But there cannot be in general any other method of proceeding than by afficannot be in general any other method of proceeding than by affi-

Mr. ROBINSON. Before the gentleman leaves this question of affidavits, I want to call his attention to a provision in the sixth section that the Government may take additional testimony by affi-

Mr. McMAHON. Does the gentleman refer to this provision?

And it shall be competent for the claimant and the Government to take additional testimony by affidavit for or against any claim pending in said court, which shall be considered by said court in its adjudication.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the point. I ask the gentleman whether he discovers there a sufficient power given to the Government to take affidavits? Is there any provision for the expense of taking such affidavits or for the examination of witnesses in remote parts of the country? Somebody must attend to this matter in the interest of the Government.

Mr. McMAHON. I presume the Commissioner of Pensions would be called upon to forward all the papers and to forward also probably a statement of the adjudication of the case. We are in the habit of making appropriations of $25,000 or $50,000 to be expended by the Commissioner of Pensions for the investigation or detection of fraud; we give him so many special agents whom he may send all over the country. I presume that this appropriation might cover also the expense of procuring testimony in these cases. The omission can be easily remedied if there is any trouble.

Mr. ROBINSON. It seemed to me that the provision of the bill was not sufficient.

Mr. McMAHON. Of course, everything the Government does must be expected to be covered by some appropriation of money to the proper officer to enable him to carry it out.

Mr. ROBINSON. There is one suggestion right there, if the gentleman pleases, whether or not he deems it at all material or important before this court in examination of this case the Government should have any representative; that is to say, whether you will put the judges in the attitude of defenders of the Government, as the Commissioner now undertakes to be, or whether you will have the judicial ing or in refusing a pension; but so long as the case is in the hands of a mere executive officer of the Government nothing can be seen except what that officer may by courtesy choose to show a representative?

Mr. THOMAS. Under the provisions of the minority bill the attorney would have access to the records, would he not, in the same way as under the majority bill?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish also to call attention to the last section of put in the position it was compelled to submit to a bad one. I do not want to see a man pensioned who is not entitled to a pension; and on the other hand I think it a very solemn duty of this Government to pension every man who is entitled to it. And I concur with the remark made by my colleague from the State of Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] that it is a great deal better that here and there an improper claim should slip in, to be weeded out by subsequent investigation, than that the Government should adopt a policy which would make it so onerous for the most worthy and deserving class of pensioners—and onerous for the most worthy and deserving class of persons—and I speak now of the poorer class of persons—make it so onerous for them they would be unable to bear it. Let me put an instance; let me take a case now where the Government employs counsel and pays him $5,000 a year—keeps a good lawyer and he has nothing to do but to fight these persons, and he comes into the pension court. Then the ordinary claim agent would have to meet and fight each case. It might have to be tried. The compensation that is now paid to the claim agent would not pay him in that shape for that work. It is for us to consider now whether in protecting the Government, if protection is necessary in this way, we do not lay too heavy a hand on that class of people who heretofore have had to rely on the Commissioner of Pensions as the representative of the Government and their own claim agent.

I will not repeat what has been said by many persons, that there are certain courts which have been organized, and I will not designate them, that have been as much the attorney for the Government as any attorney who ever appeared before it. I expect if no attorney were allowed to appear before that commission for the Government, and there was no provision for one, the natural tendency of the judicial mind would be to side with that party which had no person to represent him, to fight the claim agent; and whether, in the long run, it will not amount to the same thing whether the Government is represented or not, I do not now undertake to say.

Mr. ROBINSON. That was exactly what I wanted to bring out, whether the gentleman thought, in order to do exact justice to claimants, it is not better to have an entirely independent court, or board, whatever you call it, which is not charged in any way with the duty or responsibility of finding or searching for evidence to meet what they think are not good claims. Here are your judges, who sit back and say, "This looks like a good case, but if we send out a detective into the city, town, or county where this man comes from, we can defeat his claim." I think that is an uncomfortable attitude for the court to be put in and unjust to the claimant. I think it is a point worthy of consideration.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the court would run into counsel for the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it is much like the justice who receives a complaint and hears everything, and has his mind preoccupied by the complaint, and who sits down to try the criminal afterward.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not like one provision in the minority bill, and that is this court should be in the bowels, as it were, of the Interior Department; that it should be there a sort of judicial excrescence or tumor growing between the Commissioner of Pensions and the Secretary of the Interior, on top of the Commissioner of Pensions the Secretary of the Interior, on top of the Commissioner of Pensions and under the Secretary of the Interior. I do not like that. I have no idea of a court that is not independent of everything and everybody except in the regular line of appeal on writ of error. I do not like the idea of a court that is sitting in a department as an adjunct of that department; and this remark becomes eminently proper in view of what the gentleman has said. Being there, as it were subordinate to the Secretary of the Interior, there would not be that judicial independence and there would be that leaning toward the Government a salary of $3,500 might produce. The salary is not large, and will not command the first-class and best talent.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will not the gentleman from Ohio yield to a motion that the committee now rise? It is evident we cannot get through with this bill to-night.

Mr. McMahon. I will in ten minutes. I wanted to say something in answer to my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Marsh.,] who put a question to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Geddes] as to expediting the business which is all ready.

Now, this bill, as my colleague from Ohio has well said, only proadjunct of that department; and this remark becomes eminently

Now, this bill, as my colleague from Ohio has well said, only proposes to do justice in the cases that are pending and that are reached; and in the second place to relieve Congress of the enormous amount of work imposed upon it in the consideration of these claims. If we estimate the cost of these night sessions, and take into consideration the cost of Friday's sessions, when we are considering private business, and compute the cost to the Government which has been imposed by the present Congress; in the consideration of these propries. posed by the present Congress in the consideration of these pension claims alone, I venture to say that I can show you an array of figures that would sustain this court of pensions for three years. And what have we done? We have passed a few pension claims—a very few on our Calendars, without knowing how the few that have been passed are ever to be enabled to go safely through the shoals and breakers to which they will be subjected in the Senate before they become laws.

Mr. CASWELL. Does the gentleman see any remedy in either of Mr. CASWELL. Does the gentleman see any tender in the bills for that difficulty?

Mr. McMAHON. I do. I thoroughly appreciate the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin that no law that Congress can pass can prevent any claimant from presenting a claim for relief to another Congress. But I do say this: that when we provide the claimants with an independent, a special court, to which they may present their rejected claims if the Commissioner of Pensions fails to do them justice; and when we place in that court the power to pass upon the equity of the claims when they do not come within the strict letter or the language of the law; when we say to these pensioners that unless this court pass upon the claim as legal and recognize it as equitable we cannot consider it, and that you cannot impress the committee more favorably than you can impress this court, then we will have relieved this House of a pressure of 90 per cents of this private business.

Mr. CASWELL. But the same defect is in the other bill—the substitute—as well as in the bill presented by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. McMAHON. I do not wish the gentleman to understand that I am making any argument against the minority bill.

Mr. CASWELL. The only difference is that one constitutes a court of pensions; the other, a board of review.

Mr. McMAHON. I was not discriminating between the bills, but only answering the point which was nread.

Mr. McMAHON. I was not discriminating between the bills, but only answering the point which was urged.

Now, to come back to the proposition to which I was about to address myself when I was interrupted. We are not only anxious here to do justice to the claimants whose claims are either properly or improperly rejected, but we are anxious to expedite the public business. That is the main object.

Mr. MARSH. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McMAHON. If my friend hears what I have to say perhaps it will suggest a modification of his question. I was about to say that this Congress about a month ago or a little over a month ago passed this Congress about a month ago or a little over a month ago passed a bill through both Houses, which was approved on the 16th of March, a bilt through both Houses, which was approved on the found match, providing about seventy or may be eighty additional clerks in the Pension Office. We provided for forty additional clerks in the office of the Surgeon-General. We provided thirty additional clerks in the Adjutant-General's Office and twelve in the Second Auditor's Office. Now, in the name of God what more are we to do? A new we never to

Now, in the name of God what more are we to do? Are we never to get along any faster with the public business? Must we detail men by the regiment to take care of the cases of the pensioners on file? Mr. FARR. These were temporary clerks, as I understand. Mr. McMAHON. Yes, provided for the present fiscal year. Mr. MARSH. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit me I will answer his question as to the details of clerks "by the regiment." The object of such detail is to dispose of the two hundred and fifty thousand cases that are now pending before the Commissioner of Pensions and have been there pending for three forms. sions, and have been there pending for three, four, or five yearsof them

Mr. McMAHON. I will give the gentleman a better rule for disposing of them, and that is get rid of the red-tape system. If you inaugurate a reform in the pension system, and transfer the whole machinery to the War Department, then you will not have so much red tape.

Mr. MARSH. I would like to ask the gentleman if he was in the Army †

Mr. McMAHON. No, sir.

Mr. MARSH. Then probably the gentleman does not know as much about red tape in the War Department as some other persons.

Mr. McMAHON. There would be no red tape if all this business was in the same Department. But when the Pension Office comes to consider a pension claim, and has occasion to send to the Adjutant-General's Office for the record of the soldier, it may slumber there three, six, or nine months before it gets back to the Pension Office. Something is needed from the Surgeon-General's Office. This meets the same delay; the application is put on file, and there it may re-main for months before any response is given. If all these were consolidated into one Department, with necessary power to act, then when a pension claim is pending there could be some degree of expedition; we would have a very different state of affairs, and Congress would get rid of a long list of these claims which now involve so large a portion of our time. As it is now you have, in the very nature of things, unnecessary and vexatious delays. You provide men in these Departments who are in each other's way, who are stumbling over each other to do the work.

Mr. CASWELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir.
Mr. CASWELL. Does the gentleman realize the fact that we receive now over five thousand original applications a month, and have done so for the last fourteen or fifteen months, while two or three or four years ago we received only about ten thousand per year

Mr. McMAHON. I understand that. But I understand also that in a very short time all that will stop, and that in order to meet this increase of applications we have given all the additional help that narease of applications we have given all the additional help that has been asked. Now, my answer to the gentleman from Illinois is that this House and the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Pensions ought not to be expected to do more than is asked by the Department having this matter in charge.

Mr. CASWELL. I am making no complaint. I said some time ago that these applicants must wait and be patient.

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. And after they have waited four or five years their claims are refused because they are old.

Mr. WILBER. Will the gentleman from Ohio yield to me for a question?

question?

state what that is?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir.
Mr. WILBER. How many of these rejected claims are to be acted on by this court which it is proposed to establish?
Mr. McMAHON. I am told there are from forty thousand to sixty thousand of these rejected claims.

Mr. WILBER. How many would that court examine in one day

Mr. McMAHON. If you will tell me the size of a piece of chalk I will answer your question, but not otherwise. Some cases would take much longer time than others.

Mr. WILBER. It seems to me it would take as long to get a decision there as in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. McMAHON. The court is not to expedite the work of the Pension Office, but to make it more complete and perfect. The expedition of the work in the Pension Office is to be brought about by the bill we have already passed and by continuing the same policy, which I understand is the intention of the Committee on Appropriations for the next fiscal year.

Mr. WILBER. Then this court is only to dispose of rejected cases.
Mr. WARNER. And it is not to be supposed that all those sixty thousand cases are to come before this court. A large proportion of the claimants will be satisfied by the decision of the Commissioner.

Mr. McMAHON. I would not like that this committee should do anything to dishearten the claimants. I have a great many claimants who applied years ago, and they are now as vigorous and full of hope as they were when they first made their applications. It will come all right after a while.

Mr. WILBER. Does not the Pension Office allow any case to be reopened when additional testimony is presented which it is thought should secure a favorable decision?

Mr. McMAHON. I have always sions exceedingly liberal as to that.
Mr. WILBER. And so have I. I have always found the Commissioner of Pen-

Mr. WILBER. And so have I.

Mr. McMAHON. In this connection I desire to refer to the question of having the sealed report of some spy or detective or special agent lie perdu in this Department. What good will it do a man to have his case opened and reopened without his knowing where the disease is to which the knife should be put?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I understood the gentleman to say, in making his statement, that if we removed the red tape we could then go forward and have those cases adjusted.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the red tape is only one little element of the trouble.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I ask the gentleman from Ohio this question, whether the special committee which has reported this bill was not specially instructed to report a remedy for this evil?

Mr. McMAHON. Yes; and they are now specially at work upon

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. But instead of reporting a bill for the adjustment of the meritorious cases in the Pension Office they are paying special attention to bills before this House and those that have been rejected.

Mr. GEDDES. Perhaps I may be permitted a word of explanation upon that point. That committee has not given special attention to this bill. It is a mere incident. They are giving special attention to the duties assigned them by the resolution creating them, and they are now actively engaged in that work; and in due season they hope to bring forth other measures in addition to this. But this House saw proper to refer to that committee this bill, and we have reported a substitute for it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Then I was under a misapprehension. I thought this bill originated with the committee.

Mr. McMAHON. The committee did not neglect either branch of its work. It reported the bill providing additional clerks.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That came from the Committee on Invalid

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Coffrorh] is chairman of both committees. It does not matter much where that bill came from. If it came from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, it did satisfactorily what had to be done. They have given all the clerical force asked for in the Departments. And now the committee report this bill for the purpose of doing justice to the rejected

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to state on behalf of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the bill which provided additional employés was reported by that committee, and not by this special committee. Mr. McMAHON. My question is what more is necessary?

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. That has been referred especially to this Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman is making an insinuation against consider it inadequate for the purpose for which it was designed; and the select committee was especially charged to ascertain what was required to be done. Mr. THOMAS. If the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] will allow me, I will call the attention of my colleague [Mr. Davis] to the committee of which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GEDDES] is a member, stating it has not done something or insinuating that it has not done something it ought to have done. Will the gentleman please

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I wish to say to the gentleman from Ohio

[Mr. McMahon] that I make no insinuations against the select committee. I simply said that I did not believe in this bill, because I

Mr. McMAHON. I hope my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Davis,] who is a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, will not undertake now to detract even by the remotest insinuation from the merits of the select committee. If he, being a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, is unable to answer my question and to indicate what is wanting, that ought to be a justification of the select committee; and I accept it as such, and desire it to go on the record as

Mr. VAN VOORHIS. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few minutes ?

Mr. McMAHON. As it is now pretty late, at the request of many members, (without yielding the floor, as I expect to yield to other gentlemen portions of my time,) I will move that the committee now rise. Before doing so I would inquire of the Chair how much of my time is left ?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has thirty-five minutes remaining.

Mr. CONGER. Before the committee rises, I would inquire if there were two nights set apart this week for the consideration of this bill? The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that to-night only was set apart for the consideration of this bill.

Mr. McMAHON. We will have to go into the House and obtain consent for another evening session, with the understanding that the consideration of this bill shall be finished at that session.

Mr. CASWELL. I hope that gentlemen will agree to help us to obtain another evening session next week.

Mr. McMAHON. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Blackburn having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. STEVENSON reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5394) to organize a court of pensions, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session this evening having been assigned for a special purpose, in the judgment of the Chair it is not competent for the House at this session to fix a time for the further consideration of this bill.

The question recurred upon the motion of Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio, that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

be granted to Martin Price, with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the petitions. I think it proper to say in regard to this matter that the evidence before the committee renders it somewhat probable that the man may be entitled to a pension, but the testimony is so confused and contra-dictory in some respects, and so uncertain, that the committee did not feel at liberty to recommend the granting of a pension in this

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I also report from the Committee on Pensions the bill (S. No. 1046) granting an increase of pension to the widow of Major Thomas T. Thornburgh, late of the United States Army. The bill was once reported from the committee adversely and recommitted, and it is now reported back with the same recommendation that accompanied it before, that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was going to ask whether we might not consider the bill at this time. This bill was recommited to the committee, with notice at the time that whenever it was taken up in the Senate I should propose to insert a less amount than is named in the bill. If the Senate will have time to take action upon it, I should be glad to have it considered now. If there is other business of more glad to have it considered now. If there is other business of more importance, then I will follow my friend, the Senator from Tennessee, in asking that the bill go upon the Calendar, and I give notice that as soon as possible I shall call it up, because it is a very meritorious case, and one I understand the committee did not want to set any precedent for the future by a favorable report, and therefore it will bear investigation. I hope the bill will be called up at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. PENDLETON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1254) for the relief of Henry Warren, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which as ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of George J. Webb, praying for an increase of pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1698) granting an increase of pension to George J. Webb.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to

SENATE CONTINGENT FUND.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of this joint resolution?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before I consent I should like to hear an explana-

Mr. EDMUNDS. I said I should like an explanation of now it has happened that this large deficiency apparently has been created.

Mr. EATON. I will say to my friend from Vermont that I have no information beyond the fact that the contingent fund of the Senate is exhausted and this amount of money is required. Therefore I should be very glad to have immediate action upon the joint resolution by the Senate. I cannot give the reasons why the money has tion by the Senate. I cannot give the reasons why the money has been expended heretofore. I only know that there is now a want of this fund in the Senate.

I should think that we ought to know something more about this than the general fact that the money is gone. think that this would be the very best occasion possible to ascertain think that this would be the very best occasion possible to ascertain how the fund has been administered, and to what uses it has been applied, and how it has come to have run short. I know that used to be the way before the Senate was reformed, in ascertaining about the propriety of further appropriations to the contingent fund and other funds, and I had hoped that it had not gone out of fashion. I think the joint resolution had better lie over and we can look at it.

Mr. EATON. I give notice that I shall call up the joint resolution on Monday.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BAILEY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1699) for the relief of Henry S. French, of Nashville, Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BOOTH (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1700) for the relief of John A. Sutter; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) to authorize the loaning of certain tents and artillery to the Union Veteran Corps, composed of ex-Union soldiers, for the purpose of a reunion to be held at Wichita, Kansas, in the month of October, 1880; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TOWN SITES ON MINERAL LAND.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate if changes of rulings and construction of statutes concerning entries of town sites upon mineral land have recently been made in his Department; whether such changes of ruling and construction have affected the substantial rights of parties who have settled upon the public lands, and, if so, what legislation, if any, is in his judgment necessary to protect the equitable rights of such parties; and the Secretary is requested to suspend action upon causes affected by said rulings until action by Congress.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

DETAILS OF OFFICERS AS PROFESSORS.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I ask the Senate now to take up the joint resolution (S. R. No. 70) to increase the number of officers of the Army allowed to be detailed as professors of military science at colleges and universities.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state what it is, because any Senator I think after resolutions are called might object, although that is not the practice. RETIRED LIST OF NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The pending bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 1331) to authorize a retired list for non-commissioned officers of the United States Army who have served therein continuously, honorably, and faithfully for a period of thirty years or upward, the consideration of which is resumed as in Committee of the Whole. The pending question is on the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. Allison,] on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as an additional section:

SEC. —. That in addition to the number of cadets at West Point Military. Academy now authorized by law, the President shall each year appoint two colored cadets at large.

Mr. BURNSIDE. Mr. President, when the Senator from Iowa introduced the amendment now under consideration providing for the annual appointment at large by the President of two colored cadets, I determined to vote against it, firstly, because I thought the amendment was not germane to the bill; secondly and mainly, because I am opposed to all legislation which recognizes distinction of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. It will be remembered that I made something of an effort during the last Congress to have the Senate repeal sections 1104 and 1108 of the Revised Statutes authorizing colored regiments. The reasons for the formation of this opinion on my part were so intelligently and elaborately given by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] yesterday as to render it unnecessary for me to give them in less intelligent language to-day. I am not violating a confidence, I am sure, when I say that this amendment does not meet with the approval of the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Bruce,] and I am quite sure that it will not meet with the approval of the leading men of the colored race in the country.

I have given the subject of the amendment much thought since its introduction, and have changed my mind so far as to determine to give it an affirmative vote without in the least degree relinquishing give it an affirmative vote without in the least degree relinquishing my faith in the principle, or theory, if you please, that, as a rule, such legislation on the part of Congress should not be had.

Recent events at the United States Military Academy have occupied and exercised the public mind in a remarkable degree; and as I am a graduate of that institution, and as its welfare and prosperity are wished for by me heartily and ardently, I have given them much consideration.

This academy is a national institution, and should in all its operations and teachings bear national characteristics. The students there are national beneficiaries, and as a body ought to represent the national sentiment. With the exception of ten, who are appointed at tional sentiment. With the exception of ten, who are appointed at large by the President, they are the representatives, in that school, of all the congressional districts of the nation. They are selected by the members of the popular branch of the National Congress. Now, if in the administration of its affairs any system of scholastic, military, or social teaching has crept in, by which any one or more of these national beneficiaries are deprived of the rights and privileges which are justly their due, that system should be changed at any cost.

We cannot reasonably expect, at so early a day after the emancipation of the colored race, that all the people of this country should absolutely recognize and become reconciled to the changed condition of affairs in this respect; but in a national institution, organized as the West Point Military Academy is, it should be recognized, and it is the duty of Congress to see that it is recognized. Without the authority of Congress the Military Academy has no existence. It was organized by Congress, its students are clad, fed, and educated at the expense of the Republic, and are entirely within its control and justicial in the control and property of the response of the Republic and are entirely within its control and justicial in the control and property of the recognized within its control and justicial in the control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the west control and property of the recognized as the reco risdiction. Congress to-day, by its own action, can put it out of ex-

Now, Mr. President, there seems to be a practical difficulty in the way of sending to West Point, under the present law, anything like a fair representation of the colored people of the country. Members of Congress do not appoint them, and thus far the Executive has not seen fit to appoint them. I recognize the fact that the difficulties in the way of these appointments, except in rare cases, are almost insurmountable. The President in selecting the ten cadets at large whom he has the authority to keep there, as a matter of precedent, appoints the sons of retired or deceased officers and of distinguished citizens who have given so much of their time to public affairs as to deprive them of the opportunities of looking after the education of their children. As I before said, all the other cadets are appointed by members of the House of Representatives. The members from the northern districts now appoint to a considerable extent upon competitive examination. It will be understood that the percentage of young men of the colored race of the North is very small, and but very few of them are sufficiently cultivated to present themselves as competitive candidates; but I am quite sure that, in either of the districts of Rhode Island, if a colored youth should present himself for this competition and prove himself the superior of the other competitors, he would receive the appointment; and I am inclined to think that if any favors were shown to any of the competitors, it would be to him, and doubtless this would be the case in almost all the districts wherein the competitive system obtains. In the southern districts, where a large proportion of the colored race of this country are living, there are more reasons than one why members do not nominate colored cadets. The first is that but a small proportion of the colored boys are sufficiently educated to obtain a footing at the academy, even if they were appointed; and in the second place, it is I believe a fact that the Representatives of the South, as a rule, do not think it wise to send colored cadets to West Point. These two reasons operating together, make it next to impossible that, for the present, the colored youths of the South can have a representation at the national school.

Now Mr. President, in view of these facts, I am willing to depart from my general rule of action in like cases, and vote for a law which authorizes the President of the United States to appoint annually a given number of colored cadets. I think this action on the part of Congress will have a good effect in several respects. It will show to the authorities at the Academy that the power which has created it is determined to make it a national institution in all senses of the term; that that power is determined to see that all cadets, no matter of what race, who are sent there by the authority of the Government, shall enjoy equal privileges and equal benefits; that merit alone shall be the rule of gradation, and that social ostracism shall not be encouraged; that certain classes of men, who are the beneficiaries of the Government, shall not slight or oppress other beneficiaries who occupy the same ground that they do.

Mr. President, I will say that it is my earnest and longing hope that the investigation which is now going on at West Point will demonstrate that that corps of national students, which is organized for the purpose or supplying officers for our Army, is not tainted with a narrow, degrading exclusiveness and prejudice. But, sir, loving that institution, as I do, and as all alumni love their alma mater, I say that it is the duty of Congress to use the most radical measures to make the institution national; and, if it is found impossible to make it so, then to strike it from existence. It is not my belief that the latter extreme measure will be necessary, and I hope that the officers who are in charge of the institution and the cadets that are now there will now set a creditable example which will be followed in future time by their successors.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment by striking out "two colored cadets at large" and inserting "five cadets at large."

When this amendment of the Senator from Iowa was offered, I felt very much inclined to vote for it, knowing the spirit which prompted it, the desire on the part of the mover to correct what seemed to be a necessary evil existing in the administration of affairs at West Point. But further reflection upon the question has satisfied me that the proposed legislation is very far from meeting the evil. It is a question of administration and not a question of legislation. It grows out of the manner in which West Point is administered, and not out of any defect in the law, and it cannot be met by a statute beyond some such amendment as that which I suggest.

On the other hand, I think that a colored cadet sent to West Point On the other hand, I think that a colored cadet sent to West Point by force of an enactment because it cannot be helped, does not help the case at all, but on the other hand makes it worse. The poor fellow who goes there because the law requires that he shall be there, goes there under very much worse circumstances than poor Whittaker is there. He is there as the voluntary appointment of the Government, and the Government ought to multiply such appointments. They are with the Government; they are in point of fact with the President of the United States, although usage almost equivalent to law has made the appointment of the President depend upon the recommendation of members of Congress.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Hereford] made what he thought a very powerful argument against my colleague a day or two ago because members of Congress from Massachusetts had never sent a colored cadet to West Point. I want to say in reply that for the last fifteen years every cadet that has been appointed from the State of Massachusetts has been appointed in a manner which gave to the colored boy precisely the same opportunities as any white boy in that State. The cadets have been selected, so far as I know, from every congressional district in Massachusetts for the last fifteen years upon a competitive examination, and no Representative from Massachusetts would dare to hesitate for a moment to give his recommendation under the statute to that boy who succeeded in winning the dation under the statute to that boy who succeeded in winning the place upon a fair competitive examination by a competent board appointed for the purpose. But it has so resulted in practice that though two or three colored boys have succeeded in Massachusetts in getting a recommendation and presentation at West Point during the last fifteen years, somehow or other they could not get beyond that, and it is very obvious why. The colored boys of Massachusetts and of all the States of the beautiful the States of the beautiful the States of the states. the States, as has been said by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. the States, as has been said by the Senator from Khode Island, [Mr. Burnside,] have not as a rule such education and fitness and training as would give them success in an examination at West Point. It do not speak of the failure of these colored boys now as owing to maladministration at West Point. It results from the fact that they belong to a race that for two hundred years as a race in this country it has been largely made a penal offense to educate, not in Massachusetts, but they belong to a race most of which were in States where until within a few years they could not be educated except in violation of the law.

Now, the law is that the President of the United States cannot appoint any more cadets to West Point for several years except those that come from the several districts. Those are in point of law ap-that come from the several districts. Those are in point of law appointed by the President, though really by the Representatives.

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand there will be vacancies in the ten at large in 1882, to be filled in 1881.

Mr. DAWES. Possibly. I do not know how that is. But I want to authorize the President to appoint five additional cadets, and trust to the effect of public sentiment upon him, which is more powerful than any attempt to enact by law that he shall disregard the color line in these encictored.

line in these appointments.

Mr. President, if the administration of this Government shall do its Mr. President, if the administration of this Government shall do its duty at West Point there will be no occasion for the Senator from Iowa or any other Senator to seek to do away with the existing state of things by a statute, and you cannot accomplish it in that way. You put the poor fellow who goes there in a worse position if he goes there because you cannot help sending him there, than he would occupy if you merely authorized the President to appoint five additional cadets. Neither the President nor any other person can face the determined public opinion of the United States that there shall be no distinction in the law or in the administration of the law in any of distinction in the law or in the administration of the law in any of its branches or in any of our institutions on account of race or color, but that the colored man, as well as the white man, shall have opened unto him all the avenues that the Government of the United States opens to the youths of this country for usefulness and distinction and opens to the youths of this country for usefulness and distinction and honor in the public service.

That should be the purpose of the Government; it should result from the method of administration; and I cannot understand what good will come from attempting to declare by a statute that the colored man shall have justice done him. It will come only by administration. If you put one there by the side of poor Whittaker, there will only be two of them, toward whom that same spirit that now prevails there will be extended and exerted; that malign influence, that teaching the young men in a national institution to hold a dis-tinction of color that the Constitution and laws of the United States do not recognize, will still exist there until those who administer, those who carry on that institution, shall be taught by the power that puts them there that a distinction of race and color shall find no rec-puts them there that a distinction of race and color shall find no recognition in the administration of the laws of this country.

Therefore, sir, for the very purpose of reaching what the Senator from Iowa so much desires and I so much desire to reach, I am opposed to attempting to do it by an act of Congress, but I desire to give the President of the United States an opportunity to appoint five more cadets, and let them go to that institution as the response of the United States to the late manifestations that have so awakened public indigation toward the officers who have brought about that condition of things there.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, I shall vote against this amendment, and as I may do it for reasons which I have not heard stated, I propose to state them.

I am for the bill precisely as it was reported by the committee. I deem it a wise one. I would not embarrass it with an amendment like this, and I would be opposed to the amendment for that reason;

In all my public life I have been the firm and decided supporter of the school at West Point. I have sustained it on all occasions by my the school at West Point. I have sustained it on all occasions by my vote. It presents a strange condition of things to day, and it is time for me to halt. I am disposed not to create the power to appoint any additional cadet, either white or colored, at present to that school. While I shall be very careful to do no act of injustice to it or injustice to those who have it in charge, I think the condition of things is such that we may well examine into it before we adopt any legislation looking to additional cadets to be sent there.

I think the very first intimation which I have seen that this cadet Whittaker was guilty of the crime of mutilating himself came from a suggestion of the officer who has that school in charge; and the first steps in the progress of the investigation were to examine Whita suggestion of the officer who has that school in charge; and the first steps in the progress of the investigation were to examine Whittaker in pursuance of the suggestion of the principal of the school. As I read the investigation in its progress as published in the papers, I read that one of the instructors there, as testified to by a cadet, stated distinctly that he should have no relations with the colored cadet as it would be injurious to him.

If that school is to be thus controlled, and if those are the principles by which it is to be governed and directed, I say it is time for the Senate to halt; and if it shall prove as it appears upon the surface—and I would not prejudge that; I would wait until the thing is through—if what appears to be the condition of things at present shall be corroborated, I think the first step incumbent upon us is to investigate that school and to apply remedies that shall put it under a different direction, under a different control.

While I agree with all that has been said by both the Senators

While I agree with all that has been said by both the Senators from Massachusetts in relation to giving all men a fair chance in life and an equal right and privilege before the law; while I indorse every word they have said in that regard, yet for the reasons I have stated I am unwilling to seek to accomplish on this bill that reform which I am unwilling to seek to accomplish on this bill that reform which may be necessary and will be necessary if what is now foreshadowed shall prove to be correct. The officer in charge at that institution, while the very investigation is going on, has published what I suppose is called a military order commending all his cadets—the language of it I do not recollect; other Senators will recollect it better than I—commending them for their high conduct, which I think is about equivalent to saying "We have got a board to take care of you, and will proclaim your high standing while you are on trial!" If this kind of government of that institution is to be had, I think it will be time enough to appoint new cadets to it when it shall have will be time enough to appoint new cadets to it when it shall have been thoroughly reformed, and when every cadet who is sent there shall have equal and exact protection alike. That will be the reason which will control my vote in this case. I shall therefore vote against the amendment, and for the bill as it was originally reported.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, the trouble that lies at the bottom of this matter is that this amendment is an attempt to do a thing that can never be done. It is to enforce by legislation social equality.

Now, what are the facts? One Senator, the other day, on the opposite side of the Chamber—I believe the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]—said that his object was to afford to poor Whittaker there a companion or more, somebody to associate with him in that school. The State of Massachusetts has, I believe, eleven Representatives in the lower branch of Congress; consequently she has, or ought to have, eleven cadets there, and the same is true in proportion of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Minnesota, and Michigan. They all have their representatives there who have been appointed by republican Representatives in Congress. To illustrate what I mean: The young men that have been sent there from the State of Massachusetts refused social equality; they refuse to associate with colored persons on terms of equality. Strike at them if you want to remedy the evil; declare by law, if you can do it, that that is an act of insubordination. Do not strike at the head of the school; do not strike at the President for not appointing colored cadets; but if there be blame—and gentlemen say there is blame; they say the young men at West Point refuse to associate with the colored godds who are cent there, were some law, then do with the colored cadets who are sent there—pass some law, then, de-claring that an act of insubordination, if you choose, against which law I should vote. But if there be any trouble there, that is the trouble. The young men from Massachusetts that are sent there re-fuse to be the associates of the colored cadets who are sent there.

The Senator from Iowa, I believe it was, or some other Senator on that side of the Chamber, said that what he desired was to afford companionship to Whittaker. Mr. President, you cannot do that by law. You cannot compel the young men of Massachusetts any more than you can compel the young men from any other State, by law, to socially recognize those of a different color. You may by law give black men all political rights—and that is right, I go with the gentleman there—but you cannot confer by law social equality and social privileges

Why do the young men from Massachusetts, Connecticut, Vermont, and Maine refuse to associate, as has been charged here on this floor, on terms of equality with the colored cadets there? They but speak on terms of equality with the colored cadets there? They but speak the sentiment of the people of their own States; they but speak the sentiments of the parents who reared them. A year or two ago I was in the city of Boston, and going over the Boston Common I saw two parties playing ball or engaged in some other plays in different portions of the common, one of them composed of whites and the other of blacks—no mixture there. I drew the attention of my companion who was walking with me on that occasion to the fact. The panion who was walking with me on that occasion to the fact. The two races did not play together. You cannot force them to do it. You cannot by law force equality, and it is nonsense for the Senators on the other side of the Chamber to say that it can be done. They do not recognize it themselves, and there is not a Senator on that side of the Chamber—we might as well talk plainly about this—who will rise and say that he is willing for his daughter to marry a person of African descent; not one. If there be one I ask him to rise in his seat to-day and announce the fact. Why not? Because of a prejudice that has been implanted, right or wrong: and if he of a prejudice that has been implanted, right or wrong; and if he will not do that, give a reason for it. You have the reason. If all men are born free and equal, as is said by the Senator from Massachusetts, to the extent that he would have us believe, why is he not willing for his daughter to marry a colored man? He would not allow it if he could prevent it, and he has a reason for it, and the same reason that actuates him in that respect actuates the young same reason that actuates him in that respect actuates the young cadets from Massachusetts when they refuse to dwell on terms of social equality with the colored cadets who are sent to West Point.

Carry it out to its legitimate consequences. If you want to enforce terms of social equality upon the young men who are at West Point, enforce it in your own families, carry it out to its legitimate logical result. There is where the trouble is. You are asking the young men at West Point to do that which you will not do yourselves. Why do you not do it in your various States? You do not do it. Public sentiment will not allow you to do it.

Colored men have a right to sit upon this floor. The law gives it colored men have a right to sit upon this floor. The law gives it to them. They have the right to sit on the floor of the other House. The law gives it to them. These are great political rights; but when you come to enforce social privileges, social equality by law, you cannot do it; and every time there is a struggle made to do it, it is to the disadvantage of the colored race. As I read in the paper this morning, the marshal of this District said, "I wish they would let us alone, and we will fight the battle of life as the whites do." He said, "Let us alone," and if they will only let the colored men alone, and not be eternally bringing this question up in this Chamber and elsewhere, the conflict between the two races will naturally subside. But not be eternally bringing this question up in this Chamber and elsewhere, the conflict between the two races will naturally subside. But this thing brings up and keeps up the conflict all the time. That is the reason why you cannot enforce these terms of social equality at West Point, nor can you do it anywhere else. Strike at the root of the evil if you desire. The officer in command at West Point is not to blame, nor is anybody else to blame.

There is a reason why the young cadets from Massachusetts and Maine and other States will not associate with colored cadets. They are the appointees of republican Representatives; they are pretty much all, I take it, the sons of republicans. They refuse to recognize social equality there. By this amendment you are trying, as one of the Senators said, to make Whittaker a companion there. What good will one more companion do him? You may send half a dozen more; will one more companion do him? You may send half a dozen more; it does not compel or force or tend to force the white cadets who are it does not compel or force or tend to force the white cadets who are there to socially recognize such appointees.

I would not take away from them one of their political rights nor one of their political privileges that they have; but when it comes to terms of social equality, it is a very different thing and you cannot enforce it by law. There are certain things that the law cannot do. It can no more bring about such a state of affairs as gentlemen desire than it can change the spots of the leopard. They are placed there by the great Creator of the universe. These prejudices if prejudices you call them are placed there by the great Creator of us all and we cannot eradicate them by law, however stringent you may make it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] is to strike out the word "colored." Am I right in that?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is one effect.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I only wished to understand what the effect

Mr. HARRIS. As I understand the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, its effect is to increase the number of cadets that are to be appointed at large; that, instead of ten, as now appointed by law, the President shall have the right to appoint five additional annually

Mr. DAWES. According to the law as it now exists he is author-zed to appoint ten in four years.

Mr. HARRIS. So I understand.

Mr. DAWES. This amendment authorizes him, in addition to them,

Mr. DAWES. This amendment authorizes him, in addition to them, to appoint five each year.

Mr. HARRIS. It increases the number appointed by the President at large 100 per cent. It is twenty in four years in addition to the ten, which makes thirty in all in four years.

Mr. CONKLING. Two hundred per cent.

Mr. HARRIS. Yes; 200 per cent.

Mr. KERNAN. Are Senators willing that there should be that increase of cadets? I have heard it said that we had too many now and have no place to put them. I understand the President now can have ten there all the time. If we add five a year, the number will have ten there all the time. If we add five a year, the number will multiply very fast. If they are needed I shall vote for them; but my information is that we ought not to have as many cadets as we now

Mr. MAXEY. This subject came up some time ago, and after deliberate consideration by the Senate and investigation of the facts, it was found that there was being graduated at West Point a larger number of young men than there were places for in the Army. The Senate, so far as I now remember, without a dissenting voice, prohibited the construction which had been placed upon the law auhibited the construction which had been placed upon the law authorizing the President to appoint ten at large, and limited it down to ten within four years. Since about 1869 that was construed to allow ten annually, but it was limited by the law a few years ago so that those ten should be appointed within four years, only ten during the four years. The object was to prevent the too rapid increase of officers of the Army, the Army then being, as it now is, top-heavy. The restriction I thought wise, and this addition of five annually, as proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, it seems to me would be quite unwise. We have more cadets now at West Point than we be quite unwise. We have more cadets now at West Point than we be quite unwise. We have more cadets now at West Point than we have places for, and so far from increasing the number it would be far better for the service that it should be diminished.

Mr. INGALLS. Can the Senator tell how many unassigned graduates of West Point there are at the present time? I understood that a year or two ago we passed a law to buy them out of the service after they had graduated by giving them $750 to relinquish whatever right they might have in the Army. I should like to know before voting for any additional number of cadets, and consequently of graduates, how many unassigned graduates there are at present on the list.

Mr. MAXEY. There was a proposed statute which came to us from the House authorizing the amount of $750 to be paid to those who graduated for whom there were no places to be assigned. I do not think that law was passed, however.

graduated for whom there were no places to be assigned. I do not think that law was passed, however.

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. That provision referred to by the Senator from Kansas was in connection with a large reduction of the Army. Of course when the whole scheme for the reduction of the Army failed that failed. that failed. There are no West Point cadets now unassigned, and last year there were some appointments made from civil life because there were not cadets to fill the vacancies in the Army. This year there will be a large number appointed from civil life for the same

Mr. MAXEY. I was about to go on to make that statement if I had not been interrupted. There are, as far as I know now, I will say to the Senator from Kansas, no unassigned graduates; but the theory of the law for several years past has been, and it ought to be, strictly carried out, that there never should be as many graduates for assignment as will fill all the places, for the reason that it is designed to leave places for meritorious non-commissioned officers who may stand an examination and be recommended for promotion. We thus keep a portion of the places as an inducement to the non-commissioned officers to aspire for promotion by meritorious conduct. If there were for example seventy vacancies annually, there ought not to be seventy cadets graduated annually. If you graduate them all, there is no hope for the non-commissioned officers. Although there are no graduates of the Academy now unassigned, and there were really, I believe, about twenty-nine or thirty officers promoted from the Army or appointed from civil life last year, still there ought always to be places left for the benefit especially of meritorious non-commissioned officers. I do not think this amendment is in the interest of the sewice and it is not think this amendment is in the interest of the service, and it is an expense to the country without any corresponding benefit.

Mr. LOGAN. Without discussing this question, I wish to remark, so far as the matter of unassigned cadets is concerned, that the last class graduated at West Point failed to furnish the number needed to fill up the vacancies in the Army. I think there were twenty or twenty-one more needed.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Illinois will pardon me for sug-Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Illinois will pardon me for suggesting that I think there were ninety or ninety-one vacancies and but sixty or sixty-one graduates.

Mr. LOGAN. And the rest were filled up by competitive examina Mr. LOGAN. And the rest were filled up by competitive examina-tion of sergeants, &c., outside of the graduates of the Military Acad-emy. The case will be so again. Not enough cadets graduate at West Point to fill the vacancies there are in the Army requiring lieu-tenants to be appointed. That is so, has been so, will be so. Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator from Illinois if he does not think the public service would be improved by pursuing that course for the future, taking from the Army some men and advancing them. Is not that a good idea?

Mr. LOGAN. I have no opinion to give about it, for I do not know that that is in controversy now; but I myself find that of those persons who were appointed last year after examination, quite a number of them passed as creditable an examination as did the cadets from West Point, and I think will make as efficient officers. They may west Point, and I timik will make as emicient officers. They may not have so much discipline, as a matter of course, but so far as their education was concerned they passed as creditable an examination, at least a great portion of them. I think we might just as well fill up the Army occasionally from civil life, where we get competent persons, as to take only graduates of West Point. But this proposition that has been made now will certainly not interfere with that by producing an excess of cadet graduates. It will not interfere in that particular at all, and that being the only question power involved. that particular at all; and that being the only question now involved that particular at an; and that being the only question now invocation of the care to discuss the other question about appointments outside. I only say this will not produce in any way too many graduates.

Mr. DAWES. The manner of administering the law has been that these ten appointees from the United States at large have been appointed to the care of the laws of usually selected from the sons of officers of the Army. The law requires that the appointees from the several States shall be actual residents of the district from which they are appointed. There are large numbers of officers of the Army who have no such residence as that and whose families grow up without any such residence as entitles them to appointment from a district. While it is a most natural and proper feeling that an officer of the Army has a desire to educate his son in the profession he follows himself, he has not a fair opportunity to get an appointment through the districts in the several States; and the theory has always been to make the ten appointments at large from the families of officers of the Army. Properly administered that is a very proper theory in my opinion. That would administered that is a very proper theory in my opinion. That would leave five each year to be appointed outside of any such influence or theory as that; and if it should turn out that there should be five colored cadets sent to West Point each year there would be the enormous number of twenty colored cadets there out of three hundred and fifty or thereabout.

That increase of number is what alarms some Senators. It does not alarm me at all. That would not meet the exigency suggested by the Senator from Illinois and other Senators. That would not prevent a large number of vacancies in the Army being filled, as they ought to be, from civil life or by promotion from the ranks. It would put in training each year five colored cadets. That is the purpose of the amendment. The amendment relies upon a public sentiment to carry it out and to enforce it, and that public sentiment to so operate upon the administration of the government of West Point that you will hear no more cadets testifying that their own instructor gave them the idea that it would be better to avoid a colored cadet. Public sentiment is stronger than the law, and to that for one I would lic sentiment is stronger than the law, and to that for one I would rather appeal than to the puny, impotent enactment that there shall be a colored cadet sent perforce to West Point and left to take care of himself as best he can. The fact that it adds five more to the number does not so alarm me as the idea that there now exists at this day in this Government a spirit in the administration of any of its institutions like that which tolerated the condition of things we have seen at West Point lately.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired. The unfinished business of the Senate is the resolutions reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to the seat of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate I shall Mr. EATON. Mr. President, with the consent of the Senate I shall be very glad to have the order of the day laid aside informally for the purpose of taking up the naval appropriation bill. I do not think it will elicit any debate, and it ought to be passed. I move, then, informally to lay aside the order of the day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. No such motion is known to the rules. The Senator from Connecticut asks that the pending order of business be informally laid aside in order that the naval appropriation bill may be considered. The Chair hears no objection.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. EATON. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 5626.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (H. R. No. 5626) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EATON. I will state to the Senate, and I am very happy to state, that this bill is reported without any amendment whatever; and I ought to remark further that after full consultation with the Secretary of the Navy the Committee on Appropriations are authorized to say to the Senate that he is entirely satisfied with the bill, although we give him some $100,000 less than he desired. He authorizes me to assure the Senate that, very extraordinary circumstances excepted, there shall be no deficiency, and this shall cover the entire expenses of the Department.

While I am up I might as well say that I do not think this bill will elicit any discussion. The total of the bill as passed by the House and reported to the Senate is $14,405,797.70. The total of the estimates was $14,509,147.95. The bill as reported is $103,350.25 less than the estimates. The bill as reported, however, exceeds the act for 1880 for a certain reason which Senators will discover as the bill is read, to the amount of $375,825.75. As the bill is read Senators by casting their eyes over it will see the items of increase.

The pay of the Navy is increased $196.725: the contingent expenses

The pay of the Navy is increased $196,725; the contingent expenses of the Navy, $13,300; for the Bureau of Navigation, $23,672.50; for the Bureau of Ordnance, including torpedo service, &c., $70,000; the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, $5,000; the Bureau of Provision and Clothing, $76,017.25; the Payal Academy, $1,250.

These amounts are increases over the bill of last year.

The degreeses are in the Bureau of Steam Frairesing $2,000 in

The decreases are in the Bureau of Steam Engineering, $3,000; in the Bureau of Yards and Docks, $1,500; in the Marine Corps, $5,636. Leaving the net increase of this bill over the bill of 1880, as I have before stated, $375,828.75.

If any Senator desires it, I shall ask that the bill be read by sections, and will give any information I possess as the various items

Mr. KIRKWOOD. With the consent of the Senator from Connecticut, I wish to ask a question. I understand that the bill meets the estimates of the Department with a small exception.

Mr. EATON. There is $103,000 difference between the estimates and the bill.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. What is the subject-matter on which the committee decline to give the Secretary what he asked for?

Mr. EATON. As the bill is read I will state the differences, or I can do it now

Mr. KIRKWOOD. I merely wished to know what it was that had been estimated for and had not been granted.

Mr. EATON. Perhaps my friend from Iowa did not understand me.

I did say to the Senate that we had the Secretary of the Navy before us, and after full and careful examination he said he was satisfied with the bill, and unless there were extraordinary circumstances there should be no deficiency whatever.

Mr. HOAR. Anything which was out of order otherwise would be in order if it were done by my friend from Connecticut. So I do not wish to raise a point of order; but I hope the practice of citing the statements of the heads of Departments on the floor of the Senate will not grow by so distinguished an example. I understand it to be contrary to the rules of the Senate.

Mr. EATON. I am not aware, Mr. President, that I was out of order. I am not aware that it is out of order for me to advise the Senate that the Secretary of the Navy has come before the commit-tee and stated that he was entirely satisfied with the action of the tee and stated that he was entirely satisfied with the action of the committee. I do not give a written report of the action of the Navy Department, but simply the result of an interview between the Secretary of the Navy and the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I will make the point of order if the Senator from Connecticut thinks it is in order. I understand that to cite to the Senate in debate the opinion of the Executive Department of the Government is contrary to the rules of the Senate. Although the point is not of the slightest importance in the present instance, it is very important that it should not grow into a practice.

Mr. EATON. Mr. President, I have no objection to having the point of order made upon me; but after five years' service in the Senate it is the first time I have ever heard that when the report of a committee was made the reporter was not at liberty to say that the committee was made the reporter was not at liberty to say that the committee was made the reporter was not at nearly to say that the Department were satisfied with the appropriations the committee recommended. I myself have made such reports again and again and again, precisely as I have to-day, and no point of order has been made upon it. It is rather late, too; I have stated the fact.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point of order comes rather late, it being made some time after the Senator from Connecticut has made the allegation. The Secretary will read the bill for amendments.

bill for amendments.

The bill was read. The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. COCKRELL in the chair.) The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, has the bill pending. Are there any amendments to be proposed, no amendments having been reported by the Committee on Appropriations?

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I do not know that a separate vote will be taken on the title; but I rise only to say that yesterday and on several days there have been a good many remarks made about the democratic Senate and House cutting down appropriations and not doing what was just to the Departments. Here is a bill, prepared after full consultation with the Secretary of the Navy, passed through a democratic committee of the House without alteration, passed a democratic committee of the House without alteration, passed through the House without a word, passed the Senate committee without a word, and which has now passed the Senate without dotting an i or crossing a t. I think that is pretty high evidence that we intend to do what is right by the Departments.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the regular order is not called for I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 1424) to repeal certain laws relating to permanent and indefinite appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. It was the understanding that the regular order was to be called up before—was to be called up before—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I said if the regular order was not called for, then I would ask to take up the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President—
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay before the Senate the regular order.

Mr. CONKLING. On the regular order I want to say a word, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Certainly.
Mr. CONKLING. The regular order being before the Senate, I wish to say one word, especially to the honorable Senator from Kentucky, who is about to darken the Senate by withdrawing from it.
Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. He is back.
Mr. BECK. I am here.

Mr. CONKLING. Now that the full radiance of his presence shines Mr. CONKLING. Now that the full radiance of his presence shines again on the body, I avail myself of such a moment to congratulate the honorable Senator from Kentucky, having caught his brief but very eloquent oration a moment ago. I congratulate the Senator from Kentucky and the committee of which he is so distinguished an ornament, that that committee has been able in one instance to let politics and political legislation alone and report an appropriation bill pure and simple, which the whole Senate was able to vote for, bill pure and simple, which the whole Senate was able to vote for, without doing violence to the finances of the country, to the efficiency of the Government, to the Constitution, or to the long-established laws of the Union. I wish to say to that honorable Senator, knowing that it will give him very little encouragement, that so far as the humblest member of the Senate is concerned he will be ready and glad always to vote without asking to dot an i or to cross a t, as the Senator said, for every appropriation bill which, proceeding upon the ancient ways and keeping within the proper scope, shall do what was done by that appropriation bill which the Senator says truly has met with such general acceptance. I wish to commend the Senator, if he will allow me, and his committee, and to hope that they will persevere in this kind of well-doing, and will avoid hereafter those vices of action, those vicious attempts at legislation, which have caused so action, those vicious attempts at legislation, which have caused so much commotion heretofore in the Senate and in the country.

I did not like to let the occasion pass without paying this feeble and passing tribute to the wisdom and patriotism of the committee to which the Senator from Kentucky with so natural and just a pride has called our attention.

Mr. BECK. It affords me great pleasure to be able to say that in providing for the Army the Senate was able without crossing a t or ART. BLCA. It allores the great pleasure to be able to say that in providing for the Army the Senate was able without crossing a t or dotting an i to pass the bill as recommended, and in providing for the Navy it was able to do the same thing. I was really making a few remarks for the benefit of my friend from Colorado, [Mr. Teller,] who objected a little bit yesterday when the Indian appropriation bill was up that we did not give all that was asked for. We have passed two bills, providing for the defense of the country by the Army and the Navy, as asked by the Departments; and that is a good deal, as the Senator from New York will admit, for a democratic House to do for republican Secretaries who have sometimes been charged with being there somewhat irregularly.

If we have occasionally put riders on appropriation bills, it was because the disease had been so thoroughly, I was going to say inoculated, into Congress that we could not give it up all at once. The Senator will see that we are getting away from the practice as fast as we can, and that we are giving up the bad habits that for fifteen years have prevailed just as fast as ought to be expected of us.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator from Kentucky loses sight in his facetious remarks of some very broad distinctions. He says there are those who think that there is some irregularity in the way that the republican Secretary of the Treasury occupies his place. He forgets that there are a great many well-meaning people who think that there are very serious irregularities in the methods have high the that the propers in the provided hymbich the that there are very serious irregularities in the methods have high the that there are very serious irregularities in the methods have high the that there are very serious irregularities in the methods have high the that there are very serious irregularities in the methods have high the serious contents.

He forgets that there are a great many well-meaning people who think that there are very serious irregularities in the methods by which the democratic majorities in the two Houses occupy their place. I will not dwell upon that, but remind the honorable Senator from Kentucky that there is a very widespread suspicion in the country that to something more than irregularities merely is the democratic party indebted for the majority which it wields so potently now in this and the other House.

The Senator loses sight of another distinction. He says that the Army bill was passed without dotting an i or crossing a t. Yes, but it was very unlike this bill with which we have just parted in that respect. This bill—and that was the occasion of the felicitation of the Senator—passed the Senate by the according voice of both sides and of all Senators, nobody objecting to it. The Army bill passed not because of its merits but in spite of the flagrant objections there were to it. It passed by main force of numbers. It passed because the democrats, and they only, were in favor of an Army bill so distorted and disfigured as that bill was. That is a very broad distinction.

The fact on which I ventured to congratulate the honorable Senator from Kentucky was that in the case of the naval bill the committee had seen fit to abstain from those excesses of legislation which the company of the saids to vote against the Army bill, not because of the appropriations which it ought to have contained and did contain, but because of other provisions which it never should have contained, which no bill should have contained, and which markedly that bill should not have contained.

I venture to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky to this very broad demarkation between the facts to which he refers and those on which I depended in offering my congratulations to him. I think among the most distinguished of his always distinguished services in the Senate is the contribution he made to a naval appropriation bill which could pass without shocking either the sense or the conscience of either side of this Chamber. It is to that that I wish to confine my congratulations, and to repeat them, if he will allow me to do so.

Mr. BECK. I accept them, sir. Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Kentucky supposes that my criticisms yesterday upon the committee were moved or instigated by a political motive or from a political view he was entirely mistaken, because I found that the whole committee seemed to be a unit upon the subject of refusing to allow any change to be made in the bill then pending. It did not occur to me that the deductions had been made for political effect upon the country, although the remarks in the Senate since would rather lead me to suppose that that was in the mind of some Senators when the reductions were made. At the the mind of some senators when the reductions were made. At the time I did not do the committee that injustice if it was not true; and I did not quite do them the justice to say so if it was true. I spoke in the interest of the public service; I did not even think at the time that as there was a great political contest coming off it might be that in their anxiety to make political capital they proposed to let the public service suffer. I did not suppose at the time that the Committee on Appropriations in their anxiety to convince the second of their second was reasonable. people of their economy were willing to cut down the most important service in the country and expose the frontier people to Indian raids and to the misfortunes that always attend dissatisfaction among the Indians. I am rather inclined to think from the remark made that perhaps they had in view more than the impression that they were pernaps they had in view more than the impression that they were saving money, even though it might be at the expense of the unfortunate people who are living on the border of Indian reservations and in an Indian country; but in my ignorance, having very little acquaintance with public affairs, it did not occur to me. I spoke solely and entirely in the interest of public order.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is before the Senter where here even time.

ate, and has been for some time.

Mr. TELLER. That is what we are speaking on. I am through.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The regular order being before the Senate, I desire to say that if gentlemen on the other side wish to occupy the floor this afternoon, I shall be glad to have them do so. If not, we shall proceed on this side of the Chamber. I had expected that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] would have taken the floor, but he notified me awhile ago that he would not be ready to speak this evening. I desire to give further notice that I shall insist upon the continuation of this discussion until we reach a final vote upon the resolutions now pending before the Senate. I yield the floor now to resolutions now pending before the Senate. I yield the floor now to my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. Vance.]

SENATE CONTINGENT FUND.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Pursuant to the leave the Senate kindly gave me this morning when resolutions were called that I might offer a resolution later in the day, I offer this one calling for a report about the expenditures of the contingent fund, and ask for its present consid-

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Senate report forthwith—First. The balance standing to the credit of the account of the contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Senate on the 4th day of March, 1879; Second. The amount that has been appropriated for that account since the 4th day of March, 1879; Third. The purposes and objects for which said sums have been expended, arranged under the different and appropriate heads, showing separately the expenses of the respective inquiries ordered or authorized by the Senate.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I ask the Senator from Vermont, so as to make

Mr. SAULSBURY. I must insist that this debate shall close and that the regular order be proceeded with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Leave was given this morning for

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Leave was given this morning for this matter to be brought up.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not intend to disturb the regular order. It will not take two minutes to do this thing.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I suggest to the Senator, so as to get a little fuller information, that his resolution go one year back; to March, 1878. The resolution calls for a report from March 4, 1879; for a single year. Let it cover two years, so that we may see how the two years compare. I am in favor of the resolution, but I suggest that amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all in the reports of the Secretary, if he has obeyed the law, as he has.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. If the Secretary has it, he can put it in in the same answer, and it will all be together.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator want it printed the second

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The printing will not be much.
Mr. EDMUNDS. I confess, knowing the economy of my friend from West Virginia, a little surprise at his suggestion. The standing orders, and the law too, I believe, certainly the standing orders of the Senate, require the Secretary to report every session or every year (I think it is every year, and that is the same thing ordinarily,) the expenditures that he has made out of the contingent fund, and so on. Those reports have been made and are in print down to the close of the last Congress, which terminated on the 4th of March, 1879. There is pending before us a joint resolution originating in the House of is pending before us a joint resolution originating in the House of Representatives providing an additional appropriation of $15,000 to the contingent fund, as we call it for short.

Mr. EATON. It did not originate in the House.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It did not? I was present when the person who is represented to be the Clerk of the House appeared here and the presiding officer stopped everybody, and professing to speak for the House of Representatives he said that the House had passed the House oint resolution, which bore that peculiarly blue and heavenly tint that all the House bills do, to provide an additional sum to be put to the credit of the contingent fund of the Senate, which was rather surprising; I think the first time probably in the history of the Government that we ever had quite so good a bill as that. Here it came, and it was a House bill, and it is a House bill now, if I correctly understand it. But that is not the point, because I do not deny the right of the House of Representatives to provide additional means for carrying on the contingent expenses of the Senate, so far as they are concerned; I do not deny the right of the Senate to reciprocate the favor and in-I do not deny the right of the Senate to reciprocate the favor and introduce a bill and pass it providing for adding to the contingent fund of the House. That is not the point I am on at all. The point is to know how it happens that the Treasury is to be drawn upon for $15,000 additional for contingent expenses of the Senata the present session. I inquired of the honorable Senator, and in many more words than he usually takes to express a clear idea he stated in effect that he did not know about it and did not care anything about it. Then the bill went over; and in order that the Senate may know what has become of the money already appropriated for the expenses of the Senate in this Congress, which produces this deficiency, I have offered this resolution. The Senator from West Virginia wishes to have what is already reported and in the last Congress also brought up, as if I were undertaking to reciprocate his Treasury screed, as it is sometimes called, and had introduced this resolution for political purposes.

Mr. CONKLING. The expenditures for that period were reported and printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, and as my friend from New York says, these Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, and as my friend from New York says, these previous expenditures and accounts are not only reported but are all in print, itemized. This resolution does not call for items; it is too much labor and expense and would take too long. It only desires a summary under the different heads to know how the money has been expended which has been provided for this Congress, in order to see how it is that this deficiency has occurred and what is the necessity for more. It may be that when we get this report it will appear that $15,000 are already a balance to the credit of this fund and that there is no need of making this draft upon the Treasury.

I am surprised at the Senator from West Virginia taking this to be one of the fancy movements that sometimes occur on certain sides of one of the fancy movements that sometimes occur on certain sides of one of the fancy movements that sometimes occur on certain sides of the Chamber to get up something for a stump speech for July, or August, or September. There is nothing of the kind. It is purely a business resolution; and I should have expected that my friend from West Virginia, who is always so careful in looking after the expendi-tures of the Treasury, as he ought to be, would have said "amen" to the resolution at once, in order that we may have the facts plainly before us and see what cought to be done before us and see what ought to be done.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I do say amen to the resolution; and I also move to strike out "1879" and insert "1878" where it occurs, so as to let a report for two years be prepared, so as to make a comparison. The Senator says the report for the former year is in print. I do not doubt that it is, but not in the form the Senator asks for a report for 1879. He does not ask for details which are scattered through a number of documents. I ask if the Senator will not consent that the same report be sent for two years instead of one? I am in favor of the resolution, and think the Senate ought to adopt it; and that is the only amendment I desire to have made to the proposes an amendment. The Chair is not able to indicate exactly where the amendment would come in.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I move to strike out "9" where it occurs in two places and insert "8," so as to read "1878" instead of "1879."

Mr. EDMUNDS. So that we shall be unable to know how much this Congress started with, the way the accounts are kept, on the 4th of March, 1879, and mix the whole thing together.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Oh, no; separately. We want the accounts separately. It will be with the understanding that the years accounts separately. It will be with the understanding that the years be entirely separate. I believe it is a proper amendment to be made. Mr. EATON. I hope my friend from West Virginia will not insist upon that amendment. I think that matter is all before us now. I did think the resolution of the Senator from Vermont was unnecessary; I think so now; yet I will not refuse to vote for it. What I said to the Senator this morning was not precisely in the language which he imputes to me, that I did not know and did not care, and I do not think the RECORD will show that I used that language; but I said it is a matter of very little consequence when it appears that there is it is a matter of very little consequence when it appears that there is a necessity for more money. There have been various committees at this Congress, more select committees than perhaps we have ever had before. At all events the contingent fund is exhausted, and in my judgment it becomes the United States Senate to pay their witnesses and their committee clerks.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is no doubt of that.

Mr. EATON. And not have their warrants hawked about Pennsylvania avenue at eighty cents on the dollar. It is a disgrace to the Senate. Therefore it was that I, to avoid any trouble between the House and the Senate, requested my friends in the House of Representatives to pass the joint resolution, to which I had obtained the assent of the proper sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriaassent of the proper sub-committee of the Committee on Appropriations who were present and of many of the leading members of the whole committee, so that it might be passed at once without delay, and I still think I was right in so doing. My friend from Vermont saw fit to force it to a committee again who had already once considered it; and now when it is here he will not permit it to pass today, so that the poor people who desire this money have got to wait until next Monday before the Senate can pass a joint resolution in order to pay a little amount of money to those to whom it is due.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator from Connecticut has furnished me with a reason not only of curiosity but something more than that for adopting this resolution. The Senator reminds us that more committees than usual have been authorized to incur expense. That has occurred to me. It is by no means impossible that when we

That has occurred to me. It is by no means impossible that when we learn how much these respective committees have cost, it may be the learn how much these respective committees have cost, it may be the pleasure of the Senate to terminate the expenditures which they are incurring. I heard the other day from the Senator from West Virginia that between ten and eleven thousand dollars had been expended in the peregrinations of a committee touching the mode of book-keeping in the Treasury Department, and I hope I shall not seem disrespectful if I say that every member of the Senate knew, for every practical purpose and intent, before that committee began what the fact was and what the result of the inquiry would be; but between ten and eleven thousand dollars of expenses have been incurred in conducting that investigation, and a Senator on my right, [Mr. INGALLS,] not now in his seat, said that it was more than $16,000. So there are other committees which I might specify which I am told have incurred large expenses and are to proceed to incur additional expenses.

When we come to see how much these respective expenses are, it may very well be that the honorable Senator from Connecticut (I know he will if he thinks he is right) would agree with me perhaps, or with somebody else, in thinking that some committees might be dispensed with; that it was just as well not to have committees for partisan purposes or for other purposes expending, I will not say wasting, large sums of money in a quest for information of no practical value, if the Senate should so think. I think for that reason as well as for others, it would be very well that we should know what has become of the contingent fund, and as far as that will indicate, how much more is likely to be necessary if these various exploits and experiments of special committees are to go on.

I had intended to move, if the amendment of the Senator from

I had intended to move, if the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia should prevail, and if it is insisted upon and does prevail I will move as a provise to the resolution, that the Secretary make this report of these years separately, and that he be authorized to send into the Senate the printed document giving all the details touching the year 1878, in order that these poor people, as the Senator says may not be kent waiting while he recomise and retran-Senator says, may not be kept waiting while he recopies and retranscribes all this matter which was regularly laid upon the table at the beginning of this session, or at the end of the last session, (I think it was the beginning of this session,) and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was when Mr. Gorham went out.

Mr. EATON. If my friend from Vermont will permit me, I desire to say to him and to the Senator from West Virginia that I have had to say to him and to the Senator from West Virginia that I have had placed in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Senate, Mr. Gorham, giving a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Senate from July 1, 1878, to March 24, 1879, and also a letter from the Secretary of the Senate, Mr. Burch, giving a statement of the receipts and expenditures from March 25, 1879, to June 30, 1879. The Senator's resolution goes back to March 4, 1879.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That can be fixed in a moment.

Mr. CONKLING. The purpose of the amendment which I indicated, if it shall become necessary, will be to enable the Secretary of the Senate to avail himself of one hundred and thirty-four closely printed pages, and not to employ the clerks in his office to recopy them again.

pages, and not to employ the clerks in his office to recopy them again, particularly as it would be more convenient for us to have the information in print than to have it in manuscript; and I think after what has been said by the Senator from Connecticut, the Senator from West Virginia will hardly wish in any form to have printed over again this very convenient document which he can as readily run his eye over now as he can after it has been sent in again by the Secretary of the

Mr. EDMUNDS. If I understood the Senator from Connecticut correctly, he said that the printed accounts bring the matter now down to the 30th of June, 1879.

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir; from March 25, 1879, to June 30, 1879, is the last report, that of Mr. Burch. I ought to say that the report of

Mr. Gorham is to March 24, 1879.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But Mr. Burch's report brings it to the 30th of June.

Mr. EATON. Yes, sir.
Mr. EDMUNDS. That I had forgotten. I modify my resolution to say instead of "4th of March," "30th of June, 1879," so as to just cover what we have not already obtained.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification suggested by the Senator from Vermont will be made in his resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. The resolution of the Senator from Vermont calls for information in quite a different form to that presented in the printed reports; but as it can be tabulated by the Secretary, as he says, in a very short time, I withdraw my amendment, and I am glad the information is coming, for I think the Senate ought to have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolution as modified.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That Mrs. Arthur T. Lee have leave to withdraw her papers from the files of the Senate.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is now before the

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I should like to have read from the Clerk's desk the special order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections are:

1. Resolved, That, according to the evidence now known to the Senate, WILLIAM P. KELLOGG was not chosen by the Legislature of Louisians to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th day of March, 1877, and is not entitled to sit in the same.

2. Resolved, That Henry M. Spofford was chosen by the Legislature of Louisians to the seat in the Senate for the term beginning on the 4th of March, 1877, and that he be admitted to the same on taking the oath prescribed by law.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, the resolutions which have just been reported are the result of the labors of the Committee on Privileges and Elections for a period of time occupying about twelve months, the result of their best deliberation, their anxious desire to do justice to all parties, and to vindicate the Constitution of the country, which we have all sworn to support.

One of the great misfortunes which attend the discussion of all questions in this country of late years is that scarcely one can be brought before the attention of the American Congress that is treated solely with a view to its merits and to the ascertainment of the truth; but everything, no matter what it is, that is brought before Congress is clouded and tainted, so to speak, by the prejudice and the bitterness which has been excited by an unfortunate war. I was greatly in hopes that this question, involving as it does the Constitution of the United States, could be met upon its merits and could be discussed as such legal questions should be discussed; but it seems that that is

A report from the majority of the committee has been made in this case, which has been read and placed upon the records; a report from the minority also has been made, and that minority report, occupying but little over half a page of printed matter, makes the whole issue upon which this case is expected to turn; or, whether this case is made to turn upon the issues presented or not, the issues of something else are expected to turn; in other words, it is an appeal to the prejudices of the country for ulterior purposes. This case is to take the usual course that everything with which the South is connected has taken since the conclusion of the war. This fight is to be conducted by the gentlemen on the other side with the usual banbe conducted by the gentlemen on the other side with the usual banner flying in the breeze, and that banner has emblazoned upon it as its emblem, not the stars and stripes of the United States, not the lilies of France, not the union jack, not the double eagle of Prussia, not the lordly lion rampant, not the deadly leopard conchant, but a bloody shirt flippant, flappant, and floppant; and stamped upon that sanguinary garment are not the words "In hoe signo vinces," not the motto of the earlier princes of Wales, "Ich dien," not our own "E pluribus unum," not "Liberty and union, now and forever, one and inseparable," nor any of those great political epigrammatic catch-words under which men in all acceptants have been invited to ficht and to die. separable," for any of those great pointear epigrammatic catch-words under which men in all ages have been inspired to fight and to die, but those other words, dear to the heart of every man who has committed a deed that he knows cannot be justified on the facts, "res adjudicata." Such is the banner and such are the issues under which this fight is to be made. That is presented very clearly in the minority report. Mr. President, let me read from this document:

The act which is demanded of this party majority would be, in our judgment, a great public crime. It will be, if consummated, one of the great political crimes in American history, to be classed with the rebellion, with the attempt to take possession by fraud of the State government of Maine, and with the overthrow of the State governments in the South, of which it is the fitting sequence. Political parties have too often been led by partisan zeal into measures which a sober judgment might disapprove, but they have ever respected the constitution of the Senate. What is the great crime? The attempt of the party majority in the Senate to purge this body of members who are not entitled under the Constitution of the country to a seat here. That is the crime. I would have thought in my simplicity that the crime consisted in the violation of the Constitution, and the placing of a man improperly here; but it seems not. The crime consists in attempting to redress the wrong which has been done to the Constitution and to the Amerthe wrong which has been done to the Constitution and to the American people. That is where the crime is, according to the minority

Here is the case, Mr. President: A horse is stolen and carried off, and the owner follows the horse and finds him in the possession of the thief, and takes the thief before the magistrate, and the magistrate refuses to hear the testimony of the owner, and dismisses the case, and remands the horse to the possession of the thief; the owner then goes and secures more testimony and applies for a new trial, for a rehearing of the case, when all at once the thief becomes the persecuted man, and the honest owner of the horse becomes the criminal in his stead; and the sympathies of a Christian community are in-voked in behalf of the persecuted horse-thief! We are called upon to say that the gravest crime which has ever been committed was the owner of that horse trying to recover his property; because, in fact, sir, the minority report of this Committee on Privileges and Elections is simply in effect a demurrer; it amounts to a demurrer in law, and a very special demurrer at that, and as such is almost tantamount to a confession of the facts which are charged by the majority report.

The Constitution of the country, let me say before I go further, in article 1, section 3, reads as follows:

The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislatures thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote.

Now, if the sitting member upon this floor was chosen by the State Now, it the stiting member upon this noor was chosen by the State of Louisiana, by the Legislature thereof, then it would be a great crime to attempt to violate the Constitution by unseating him; but if he was not chosen by the Legislature thereof, or if, the body choosing being the Legislature, he was not chosen freely, and without corruption, or any improper practices, then it is a crime against the Constitution of the country, and it does violence to the oath of every man who has sworn to support that Constitution if that sitting mem ber is allowed to misrepresent the State which he purports to come

But let us see what character of crime it is with which the majority of the committee is charged-

To be classed with the rebellion, with the attempt to take possession by fraud of the State government in Maine.

Mr. President, it seems to me that that is an unfortunate illustra-The crime of ejecting a Senator who assumes to sit as the representative of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana is classed in resentative of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana is classed in the same category of crimes that the attempt to seize the government of the State of Maine was. Now, what was the fact in the State of Maine? I shall only advert to it, for the purpose of repelling the application of this illustration, for I have no further sympathy with what was done up in Maine; in fact the practice in Maine is that of which we have often complained in the South as having been given to us by the republicant party.

we have otten complained in the South as naving been given to us by the republican party.

But, in the State of Maine, Governor Garcelon with his council, who constituted the State returning board, if I understand it, undertook by putting in force the exact and technical letter of the law to throw out certain returns of the votes in which the law had not been precisely complied with. There was no allegation of fraud that I ever heard of; there was no allegation of violence or of force, or of anything except that the governor and council determined that they would put the law exactly in force and give it its full technical effect; and in that way they organized a Legislature which had an undoubted majority at one time.

Now, suppose that that Legislature had sent a Senator here; that, during its brief, butterfly existence, that Garcelon legislature in Maine had elected a Senator and he had been commissioned and sent on here, and by the time he got to the city of Washington with his credentials and almost before the ink was dry upon them the body which had thus assumed to send him here as a Senator had dissolved itself into thin air and taken refuge somewhere in the wild woods of the Androscoggin or the Passamaquoddy; what would Senators on the other side have said? And yet that case would be precisely on all-fours with this, except—and I assert it upon my individual respon-sibility—that that man, so coming from the State of Maine from that legislature with such a certificate as a Senator, would have had five times the lawful title to a seat on this floor that the Senator from Louisiana now has.

But here is the pith of the whole minority report:

The men whose professions of returning loyalty to the Constitution have been trusted by the generous confidence of the American people are now to give evidence of the sincerity of their vows. The people will thoroughly understand this matter, and will not be likely to be deceived again.

There is the gist of the whole matter. Because the majority of the Senate is composed in part of gentlemen from the South they are to be forced into voting against these resolutions or their loyalty is to be impeached. Their loyalty to what, Mr. President? To what is it that they are charged with being disloyal? What does loyalty mean, anyhow, in this country? Is there any king or prince or potentate here—I hear talk of one that is to come very soon—but is there any now that we swear allegiance to? If there is anything that we are required to be loyal to, it is the Constitution of the United States, and our loyalty to this Constitution is to be tested on this floor and in this case by the votes which we give in this case by the votes which we give. If we vote to retain a man here that the facts and all the evidence tend to show never was elected by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana, in open viola-tion of the Constitution, then we are to be held loyal to it; but if we vote to vindicate the Constitution which claims our loyalty, then we are disloyal! That is the proposition.

The majority of the committee contend, as their report shows, and as I verily believe and shall attempt to demonstrate, that everything connected with that election in the State of Louisiana from the first registration of a voter, preparatory to the election of 1876, down to the close of the taking of the testimony before the committee, was conceived in fraud and corruption of the deepest dye. I cannot see that there is a possibility of mistaking that, if the testimony can be

In the first place as to the registration. The testimony of Stokes was taken with relation to a party by the name of Ward, who was registrar of voters in the parish of Grant—that several days before the election and before the time at which by law he was compelled to close his registration books, he left the parish of Grant, hid the registration books so that they could not be found, and went to New Orleans and made a report that he was unable, by reason of bulldozing and fear, to carry out the registration, all of which Stokes testifies was false; that there was not a particle of danger, that there had been no bulldozing of him, that instead of any interference with him personally or with the exercise of his functions he had been kindly treated everywhere, his expenses had been paid by the inhabitants, so anxious were they to be registered and to prepare for the coming election; and when he got to New Orleans and told this state of things to the sitting member, who was then governor of the State, he In the first place as to the registration. The testimony of Stokes election; and when he got to New Orleans and told this state or things to the sitting member, who was then governor of the State, he very coolly replied, "Very well, if they don't want any election there we will throw the parish out." Mind you, the governor was not a member of the returning board or of the registration board, but assuming control, as I have no doubt he had of the whole of the State government, with all its machinery judicial and otherwise, he said, "We will throw out the parish of Grant if they don't want any election." there." But this testimony of Stokes is forestalled by another sentence in the minority report:

We do not think proper to enter here upon a discussion of the evidence by which the claimant of Mr. Kellogo's seat seeks to establish charges affecting the integrity of that Senator. Such evidence can be found in abundance in the slums of great cities. It is not fit to be trusted in cases affecting the smallest amount of property, much less the honor of an eminent citizen, or the title to an object of so much desire as a seat in the Senate.

much desire as a seat in the Senate.

Therefore, as Mr. Stokes, the witness, comes "from the slums," he is not to be believed. Well, who is to be believed? Who is Mr. Stokes? You would scarcely think after this denunciation of him by his friends in the minority report that Mr. Stokes was parish judge of Grant Parish by the appointment of Kellogg, a life-long and what they call in the South a fire-tried republican; that is to say a republican who was so devoted to the party that all his conduct was utterly without regard to the danger of fire here or hereafter; and he comes "from the slums." Well, let us look a little further, and we shall see more who come from the slums. more who come from the slums.

There was a man by the name of Peter Williams, whose testimony will be found on pages 521, 524, and 537, inclusive, of the testimony as taken by the committee; and Peter Williams says in regard to this registration that in the Seventh ward of New Orleans the superintendent of registration was named Moore, and that he was a candidate at the same time that he was registrar, and that he acted as regdate at the same time that he was registrar, and that he acted as registrar and as the candidate of the republican party for the Legislature, both, the offices not being considered inconsistent, I suppose, though positively forbidden by law. In fact, they were not only not considered inconsistent, but the reverse. Situated as that board was politically, and looking at the needs of the party, they were very consistent the one with the other. He acted as city registrar up to the day before the election, when he resigned. Williams says further that there were over 300 fraudulent votes registered in that parish by the connivance of this man Moore, which was enough to carry the parish, which elected three members, and without those three members there would have been no gnorum in this alleged Packard legislature. would have been no quorum in this alleged Packard legislature.

He says, moreover, that this man Moore acknowledged again and again that he was not elected, and that Kellogg was not elected again that he was not elected, and that Kellogg was not elected Senator. That was while he was out of office though. And this witness, Peter Williams, says again that when the registration returns were made from the different parishes and sent to New Orleans, instead of being sent to the office of the registrar-general of the State, the general superintendent of registration, they were sent by a contrivance, which I shall explain, to the custom-house, wherein were all the employés and appointees of the republican party and none others, and the device by which these returns of registration were sent to the custom-house was this: A clerk of Governor Kellogg, Blanchard by name, came to him frequently and asked him to allow him to use his name as registrar—he, Williams, being city registrar himself—for the purpose of telegraphing over the State and obtaining news from the various counties as to how the registration progressed, &c., and that on this occasion he came to him and made the usual request, and he allowed him to use his name in the usual manner, but instead of using it in that way as he had been accustomed to do, he fraudulently addressed a telegram in the name of Peter Williams to all the registration offices in the different parishes in the State, directing them to send their returns to the custom-house, and instead of going to the registrar-general's office they went to the custom-house, and there the clerks of the custom-house and the clerks of the governor and clerks of nearly every other organization, republican or what not, in the city of New Orleans, were working night and day to change these returns.

Mr. KELLOGG. Will my friend yield for one moment?

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suppose my friend does not intend to misinform the Senate. He evidently has reference to the registration books, not to the returns, when he speaks of telegraphing all over the State and having the returns sent to the custom-house.

Mr. VANCE. I meant the returns of registration, not the returns of votes, and so said.

Mr. KELLOGG. You mean the registration books before the election ?

Certainly, sir.

Mr. KELLOGG. I suppose my friend will also admit that there is no evidence connecting me in any manner with that order, and that it was really a written order, filed as an appendix to this testimony from the registrar himself, Governor Hahn.

Mr. VANCE. I do not know whether there is any testimony connecting the honorable sitting member with that maneuver or not, except the fact that the dodge was perpetrated by his private secretary; and if, while I had been governor of the State of North Carolina, my private secretary had executed anything of that kind I should have considered that I was to considered. have considered that I was to some slight extent responsible for it unless I had come out and repudiated it as soon as the fact was known, Qui facit per alium, facit per se, and I would rather not "face" that under any circumstances—

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator will excuse me for

Mr. VANCE. Certainly.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. When he makes a statement of a fact he, of course, desires that it shall be a fact and not a fiction. The person who was connected with making the order directing the books to be taken to the custom-house was not the private secretary of Governor Kellogg, never had been the private secretary of Governor Kellogg, and never has since been his private secretary. The books KELLOGG, and never has since been his private secretary. The books were taken to the custom-house because the room there was convenient. Both parties were represented while the books were there, while they were being examined, and while names that ought not to have been on were being stricken off; both parties were represented. Major Burke was there, the boss democrat in the State; Mr. Zacharie was there, and all the leading democrats who chose to be there were there. There was nothing secret about it.

Mr. VANCE. I think I have yielded sufficiently long to Senators who desire to make a correction. The testimony is doubtless before the Senator from Wisconsin, as it is before me, and I shall have the testimony read at the proper time to see whether I am right or whether he is right. When a Senator requests to be permitted to put a question or to make a correction of a statement, I always yield with great pleasure; but I do not desire to have a speech interjected into my speech. I do not think there would be quite as much consistency in it as in being the candidate of the republican party and registrar at the same time.

Now, who is Peter Williams that gives this testimony? Is he from the slums? Yes, sir; he is slummy also because he was the repub-lican city registrar of New Orleans; he was a metropolitan policeman, or had been, and he had been a custom-house officer also; and if that does not constitute his right to hail from the slums of New Orleans, what would? But he gives this testimony, and it is not successfully denied in any portion of the whole evidence taken before the com-

In addition to the testimony taken which I have recited in regard to registration, the testimony of E. A. Burke went also to confirm the fact of the frauds committed in that Seventh ward, and to show clearly by facts and figures that a large number of fraudulent certificates of registration were issued which enabled them to carry that ward, which gave the three members that constituted the quorum of the Packard legislature, as I have said.

On page 524 I find the following in Williams's testimony in relation to those false certificates:

Q. What did you say about their being elected?
A. Moore told me that they were not elected; that there were some certificates or papers issued from the registrar's office.
Q. How? What kind of papers?
A. They were blanks from 1874; they were surplus registration papers that were not issued in 1874. He brought them back to the office and left them there; and in the election of 1876 Mr. Blanchard, who was connected with Governor Kellogo's office, he came to the office one day and told me to give them to Mr. Moore, and to call his attention to those 1874 certificates, and he carried them off to see if he could use them in the election of that year.
Q. That was in the election of 1876?
A. Yes, sir; they were blank certificates left over from 1874, but could not be used without getting the signature of the supervisor who served in 1874.

Q. Who was he?
A. Mr. Hutton.
Q. Is he the same man who met you at the custom-house?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. What is his full name?
A. N. B. Hutton.
Q. Is he white or colored?
A. He is a white man.
Q. Go on now.
A. When Mr. Moore came I said to him, "There is a lot of certificates from 1874, and it is Mr. Blanchard's wish that you use them if you can," and he said, "Yes, it's a very good idea." I can't remember, though, whether he took the whole batch; but, however, he took them with him, and he stated to me that he was not sure that this man Hutton would sign them; there was a sort of jealousy between them, and he would not like to approach him, but that he would see Mr. Boothby, and he had great influence, and he would get him to intercede with Hutton to sign them; so I furnished him those certificates, and he acknowledged that he used them, and on the strength of them carried the Seventh ward.

That is the testimony of Peter Williams. It is true he comes from

That is the testimony of Peter Williams. It is true he comes from the slums; that is, it is true that he was in full communion with the republican church in the city of New Orleans, but at the same time while some men might make that a charge against the credibility of his testimony, it strikes me that the sitting member cannot do so.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina yielding the floor, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Several SENATORS. Let us have an executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. HEREFORD in the chair.) A motion is made that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. EATON. I hope my friend will change the motion to one for an executive session. There is a good deal of executive business to be done, and we had better not lose the afternoon.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT FORT WAYNE, INDIANA.

Mr. COLERICK, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6024) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Fort Wayne, in the State of Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

STATE AGRICULTURAL COLLEGES.

Mr. PAGE. I am directed by the Committee on Education and Labor to ask unanimous consent of the House to take from the Speaker's table Senate bill No. 940 for consideration at this time. It is a bill to amend an act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts." It is a very important matter, has been fully considered by the Committee on Education and Labor of this House, and that committee has unanimously instructed me to ask for the consideration of the bill at this

"SEC. 4. That all moneys derived from the sale of lands aforesaid by the States to which the lands are apportioned, and from the sales of land scrip as hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States, or of the States, or some other safe stocks, or in such other manner as the laws of the respective States may provide, and that the moneys so invested shall constitute a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall forever remain undiminished, (except so far as may be provided in section 5 of this act,) and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the respective States may prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.

Mr. PAGE. Now, if the House will bear with me for a moment, I will explain the bill. Under the act of Congress donating these lands

Mr. HAWLEY. I reserve any point of order.
The SPEAKER. If a point of order is to be made, it had better be made promptly, so as not to occupy time which could be given to

Mr. PAGE. The bill is not subject to a point of order. If gentlemen will let me explain, I will show—

Mr. COVERT. I object for the reason that a bill similar in character to this is now being considered by the committee of which I have the honor to be chairman.

Mr. PAGE. If gentlemen will allow me a moment to explain the bill, I am sure there will be no objection.

Mr. COVERT. I am constrained to insist on my objection.

ASSAY OFFICE AT SAINT LOUIS, MISSOURI.

Mr. WELLS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6025) to establish an assay office in the city of Saint Louis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures, and ordered to be printed.

EXTENSION OF LETTER-CARRIER SYSTEM.

Mr. CHALMERS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6026) to amend section 3865 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to extend letter-carriers to cities of ten thousand inhabitants; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

INTEROCEANIC CANAL.

Mr. KING. I desire to give notice that I will on Wednesday next call up for consideration the resolutions from the Committee on the Interoceanie Ship-Canal, in connection with similar resolutions from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in relation to interoceanic commu-nication. The resolutions from the Committee on the Interoceanic Ship-Canal are privileged by order of the House.

KIMBERLY BROTHERS.

Mr. GOODE. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3290) for the relief of Kimberly Brothers, and that the same be now taken up for consideration.

The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Kimberly Brothers, of Norfolk, Virginia, made a contract with the Secretary of the Navy for supplying the Marine Corps with rations for eight stations, to wit: Portsmouth, New Hampshire; Boston, Massachusetts; New York, New York; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Annapolis, Maryland; Washington, District of Columbia; Norfolk, Virginia, and Mare Island, California, said contract bearing date the 11th day of June, 1879, and being for the supplying of such rations for the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1879; and

Whereas since making the said contract there has been an advance of the prices of all articles entering into the rations thus to be supplied of about 50 per cent., so that the said Kimberly Brothers are now filling the said contract at a loss to them of about $50 per day: Therefore,

Be it enacted, dec., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to examine the accounts and vouchers of said Kimberly Brothers, and to make an allowance to the said contractors, above the contract price, as he may, under the circumstances, deem just and equitable.

My. COODE:

If the Hermon will allow meters or more the table price is the said table.

Mr. GOODE. If the House will allow me one moment, I will make a brief explanation. The parties named in this bill made a contract for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, to supply eight marine stations with rations. Since this contract was entered into there has been an unprecedented advance in the price of articles entering into the rations. When the contract was made the price was between nine and ten cents; it is now between fifteen and sixteen cents. The result is that these parties, in the execution of their contract, are now feeding the marines of the Government at a loss to themselves of between $60 and $70 per day. The Secretary of the Navy, under the peculiar circumstances of this case, has recommended the relief asked for. The bill merely provides that the Secretary, in settling with these parties, may make such allowance on account of this unprecedented advance I hope this relief will be granted.

Mr. POEHLER. I object. I think it is all wrong to change the terms of a contract in this way.

Subsequently,
Mr. PÖEHLER withdrew his objection; when
Mr. NEWBERRY said: I object to this bill, unless the same rule is to be applied to every contractor under the Government.

C. B. INGMAM AND OTHERS.

On motion of Mr. CARPENTER, by unanimous consent, the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3992) for the relief of Cyrus B. Ingham, of the Territory of Dakota; Harvey Bryant and Guilford A.

Wood, of Kansas; and Richard Parker, of Minnesota, were taken from the Speaker's table and concurred in, as follows:

In line 4, after "Minnesota," insert "James H. Pinkerton, of Colorado, and Ed. G. Wright, of Kansas."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Cyrus B. Ingham, of the Territory of Dakota; Harvey Bryant and Guilford A. Wood, of Kansas; Richard Parker, of Minnesota; James H. Pinkerton, of Colorado; and Ed. G. Wright, of Kansas."

PRINTING OF TESTIMONY.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the select committee to inquire into the authorship of a certain letter I ask leave that the testimony taken from day to day may be sprinted for the use of its members.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

CALL FOR EXECUTIVE INFORMATION.

Mr. ATHERTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to what I consider a question of privilege. Early in the present session of Congress I introduced a resolution asking for certain information from the Secretary of War. a resolution asking for certain information from the Secretary of War. That resolution was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and on the 16th of January was favorably reported to the House and passed. It was promptly certified and transmitted to the Secretary of War, from whom the information was desired. Since that time no response has been received thereto. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, it raises a question of privilege touching the right of this House. It is a question of privilege under Rule IX.

Mr. CONGER. I desire there may be order so we may hear what the gentleman is saying.

Mr. ATHERTON. Rule IX provides, among other things, "questions of privilege shall be, first, those affecting the rights of the House collectively, its safety, dignity, and the integrity of its proceedings." Under that it seems to me this raises a question of privilege. It is one of the privileges of this House to call on the executive officers ings." Under that it seems to me this raises a question of privilege. It is one of the privileges of this House to call on the executive officers of the Government for information. It would seem by comity they should furnish that information, and if they do not furnish it by comity the House should exercise its right in some way to compel them, or, at all events, to request a second time the furnishing of that information. The tabulated information sought by the resolution could be furnished in a short period of time; and, believing it to be a question of privilege, I have drafted a second resolution calling again for this information, which I desire to present to the House for adoption. for adoption.

Mr. CONGER. I make the point that cannot be considered as a question of privilege. Whatever the remedy may be it must be supplied in some other way.

Mr. ATHERTON. It certainly is a question of privilege under the

The SPEAKER. The original resolution should be read before the Chair is called upon to say whether it embraces a question of privilege or not.

Mr. CONGER. Ah! it seems to me to be important to inquire

Mr. CONGER. Ah! it seems to me to be important to inquire whether there has been any violation of any law or rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks on that point the House has the right to call for information from the Executive Departments, and that a response should be made thereto within a reasonable time, either furnishing the information or stating that to furnish the information would be incompatible with the public interest.

Mr. CONGER. Let the resolution be read, to see what is its nature. The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair suggests.

Mr. CONGER. Not this resolution, but the one on which the gentleman has raised his question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not ruled the resolution now presented is a question of privilege. The resolution as originally passed, to which reference has been made, will be first read.

Mr. COX. Before that resolution is read I wish to say there is some

Mr. COX. Before that resolution is read I wish to say there is some precedent for this. Certainly this House must know from the Department why the information is not furnished.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests to the gentleman from New York that the original resolution be read.

Mr. ATHERTON. The original resolution is contained in the resolution now offered.

Mr. COX. This resolution was offered two months ago, and no reponse of any character has yet come from the Department, as I am informed.

The SPEAKER. The original resolution as adopted by the House will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, directed to report to this House the number, rank, names, and annual pay of each officer of the Army of the United States on the retired list of said Army, the total amount which has been paid to each retired officer as aforesaid, and the aggregate amount paid to retired officers since the said retired Army list was created.

Mr. DIBRELL. That information has been furnished, and is now before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. ATHERTON. When was it furnished?

Mr. DIBRELL. Several days ago.

The SPEAKER. That closes the matter.

Mr. ATHERTON. In explanation, and in vindication of myself in proposing to offer this resolution, I have to say that the original resolution was introduced into this House nearly three months ago. Two months and a half ago it passed the House and was certified to the Secretary of War. I have time and again inquired of the Clerk of the House, and he has as often told me that no response had come to his office. On Tuesday morning last I repeated the inquiry, and was told that the Secretary had wholly failed to respond. I then prepared the second resolution, and have ever since been waiting for a favorable time to obtain recognition. I was told by the Clerk that the information would come in regular course through his office, and I supposed it was entirely unnecessary to look further. But now, finding the information has been furnished, I promptly withdraw the resolution.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:
To Mr. Hammond, of Georgia, for ten days from to-morrow;
To Mr. Houk, for ten days, on account of important business;
To Mr. Claflin, for three days;
To Mr. Hutchins, for three days, on account of important business;
To Mr. Mitchell, until Tuesday next;
To Mr. Smith, of Pennsylvania, for four days, on account of important business; portant business; and

To Mr. HERNDON, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had concurred in the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 4924) making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ording June 20, 1880, and for other purposes.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I rise to make a privileged report. I desire to report from the Committee on Appropriations the consular and diplomatic bill, with Senate amendments, and to move concurrence in certain amendments and non-concurrence in others.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, which is devoted to the consideration of private business, that report can only be made by consideration.

sent. Does the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BRIGHT] yield for that purpose?

Mr. BRIGHT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I send to the Clerk's desk a report in writing from the Committee on Appropriations, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the senate numbered 4 and 5. They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 4 and 5. They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 2 and 3. They recommend concurrence in the amendment numbered 1, with an amendment as follows:

Insert after the same, as a new paragraph, the following:

"For one secretary to the commissioners, $4,000; for one interpreter, $1,500; and for additional contingent expenses, $4,500; in all $10,000, to be immediately available."

Mr. CONGER. I ask that the amendments be read. The SPEAKER. The first amendment in which the Committee on Appropriations recommended concurrence will now be read.

The Clerk read the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, as fol-

On page 9, line 9, strike out "$55,500" and insert "$56,600," so that as amended the paragraph will read:

"For allowance for clerks at consulates, $56,600, as follows.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. A word of explanation as to that amendment. The bill as it passed the House appropriated $55,500 for clerks at consulates. The Senate amended that by adding $1,100 to the amount; and they change somewhat the classification of the consulates at which these clerks should be allowed. The Secretary of State heliayes it would make the service much more efficient and the State believes it would make the service much more efficient, and the committee have yielded to his opinion on the subject. It adds but $1,100, and increases the number of clerks to the different consulates but reduces the salaries of many of them, the highest from $3,000 down to $2,000, and from that down to $600.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment in which concurrence was recommended, numbered 5, was read as follows:

The next amendment in which concurrence was recommended, numbered 5, was read as follows:

On page 9 strike out the following:

"For the consul-general at Havana and the consul at Liverpool, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $3,000 for any one year; and to the consuls-general at London, Paris, and Shanghai, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,000 for any one year; to the consuls-general at Berlin, Calcutta, Melbourne, Vienna, Frankfort, and Montreal, and to the consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Leipsic, Lyons, Manchester, Beirut, Hong-Kong, Belfast, Birmingham, Bradford, Chemnitz, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Havre, Marseilles, Fayal, Rio de Janeiro, Nuremberg, Leita, Naples, Singapore, Stuttgart, Mannheim, and Tunstall, each a sum not exceeding $1,500 for any one year."

And insert in lieu thereof the following:

For the consul at Liverpool, a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,500 for any one year; for the consuls-general at London, Paris, Havana, Shanghai, and Rio de Janeiro, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,000 for any one year; for the consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Manchester, Lyons, Hong-Kong, Havre, and Chemnitz, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,500 for any one year; for the consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Manchester, Lyons, Hong-Kong, Havre, and Chemnitz, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,500 for any one year; for the consul-general at Montreal, and the consuls at Bardford and Birmingham, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $1,000 for any one year; for the consuls at Beflat, Barmen, Leith, Dundee, and Matamaras, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $8,000 for any one year; for the consuls at Beflat, Barmen, Leith, Dundee, and Matamaras, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $800 for any one year; for the consuls at Beflat, Rannen, Leith, Dundee, and Matamaras, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $800 for any one year; for the consuls at Beflat, Rannen, Leith, Dundee, and Matamaras, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $800 for any one year; for the consuls at Beflat, Rannen, Leith, Dunde

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. The explanation I gave a moment ago with reference to the previous amendment applies to this one. It simply increases the number of clerks without increasing the amount, except $1,100, beyond what was provided in the bill originally.

The amendment was concurred in.

In Senate amendment numbered 1 the committee recommended concurrence, with an amendment.

The amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

For the compensation, at the rate of $10,000 a year each, and the necessary expenses, of the commissioners appointed to act with the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary of the United States to China to negotiate and conclude by treaty a settlement of such matters of interest to the two governments, now pending between the same, as may be confided to said envoy and said commissioners, $24,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be available immediately.

The committee recommended concurrence, with the following amendment as a new paragraph:

For one secretary to the commissioners, $4,000; for one interpreter, $1,500; and for contingent expenses, $4,500; in all $10,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. It will be remembered by members of the House that quite recently the President has nominated to the Senate two commissioners, who have been confirmed by that body, to proceed to China, and in conjunction with our minister plenipotentiary there endeavor to negotiate with that empire a treaty in regard to Chinese immigration and some other important matters. When this bill passed the House and went to the Senate, that body put on an amendment giving to those commissioners $10,000 a year each, which is $2,000 less than our minister to China receives, and also providing $4,000 for contingent expenses.

They had not consulted with the Secretary of State in regard to the needs of the commission in this respect. Since that time, by consultation with him we have ascertained that it is necessary that the commissioners should have a secretary and also an interpreter. Indeed, they wanted a clerk for one of the commissioners, but that the Committee on Appropriations did not think proper to allow. We have, therefore, recommended concurrence in the Senate amendment, have, therefore, recommended concurrence in the Senate amendment, with the addition of a paragraph providing for a secretary, at a salary of $4,000 a year, and an interpreter, at a salary of $1,500 a year. Upon consultation with members of the committee it may be that they may want to amend that clause which gives only $1,500 salary to the interpreter so as to pay him a larger salary. This is a very important work, and we have deemed it proper to listen to the suggestion of the Secretary of State so far as regards the amount appropriated. And we have agreed to recommend that the commissioners be allowed a secretary and an interpreter, and $4,500 additional for contingent expenses.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] state why the minister there cannot do this work?

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. Minister! Perhaps he could do it, but whether he could do it as well alone as with the assistance it, but whether he could do it as well alone as with the assistance of these commissioners, these distinguished gentlemen who have been appointed especially for this important work, is a matter for the Secretary of State and the Senate to determine. I think myself it is altogether proper to make this provision for that purpose. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.]

Mr. MONROE. The Committee on Appropriations cut down the estimates of the State Department for this mission to China by the amount of $15,000. The Secretary of State asked for $25,000 in addition to the amount which the Senate had put in the bill and we have tion to the amount which the Senate had put in the bill, and we have agreed to recommend that he be allowed only $10,000 of that sum. It is much less than, as one member of the committee, I was disposed to vote for. But I acquiesced yesterday in the reduction which the committee made, and expected to continue to acquiesce in it on the floor here to-day.

But there is a single point, as the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SINGLETON] has already intimated, in regard to which we will all perhaps agree to make a slight increase in the amount agreed upon by the committee. The Secretary of State asked for $3,000 a year for an interpreter, on the ground that the work to be done was of great importance, the framing of a new treaty, and that it was necessary to have not merely one of the men on that each who ordinarily pass under the present of interpreter. coast who ordinarily pass under the name of interpreter, but a thoroughly accomplished man, one well versed in the language of both countries, and a man of high character, a man of honor, a man who could be thoroughly trusted with this confidential work between the two governments. The Secretary of State wanted $3,000 a year for him; we cut it down to $1,500 a year, and I certainly expected to according that reduction. acquiesce in that reduction.

Yesterday afternoon, however, some facts were brought to the House in regard to the need of a first-class man for this very responsible position, and the difficulty of getting such a man on that coast for less than $3,000 a year, which convince me that I made a mistake in acquiescing in this reduction. I have, therefore, this morning informally consulted with most of the members of the Committee on Appropriations at least these who were most in favor of this reduction. maily consulted with most of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, at least those who were most in favor of this reduction, and they told me that they would acquiesee in a motion to amend the amounts recommended by the Committee on Appropriations on that single point, by increasing the salary of the interpreter from $1,500 to $3,000 a year. I hope by unanimous consent that will be done.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. If there is no objection on the part of any member of the Committee on Appropriations, I hope the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Monroe] will be adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As it would be an amendment in the third degree, and not strictly in order under the rule, it will require unanimous consent.

Mr. LOWE. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The question is upon concurring in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment. The recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations was agreed

The Committee on Appropriations also recommend non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, which was to insert the following:

For clerk-hire for the legation at the United States of Colombia, $900.

The recommendation of the committee was adopted.

The Committee on Appropriations also recommend non-concurrence in the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, which was to insert the

For a diplomatic agent and consul-general at Bucharest, $4,000.

The recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations was adopted.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi, moved to reconsider the various votes just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table

The latter motion was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. WELLS, by unanimous consent, Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, were taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EVENING SESSION FOR STEAMBOAT BILL.

Mr. KENNA. I desire, under instructions of the Committee on Commerce, to ask unanimous consent that a night session be fixed for the consideration of the "steamboat bill." Let the resolution be Resolved. That on Thursday, May 6, 1880, this House shall take a recess at four o'clock and thirty minutes p. m. and reassemble at seven o'clock and thirty minutes for the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1929) concerning commerce and navigation; no other business to be transacted at said evening session.

Mr. KENNA. This is what is known as the "steamboat bill," the passage of which is strongly urged by all the leading commercial bodies in the country. I hope there will be no objection.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House business has already been assigned for the evening named in the resolution.

Mr. KENNA. Then I will modify the resolution by fixing the next evening not disposed of.

The SPEAKER. That will be Saturday night of next week.

Mr. KENNA. I presume it would be very hard to get a session on Saturday night, and I will modify the resolution so as to name Tuesday of the week after next.

There being no objection, the resolution as modified was agreed to

There being no objection, the resolution as modified was agreed to.

GEORGE W. HENDERLITE.

Mr. TUCKER, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported, as a substitute for House bill No. 329, a bill (H. R. No. 6034) for the relief of the personal representative of George W. Henderlite, late collector of the eighth collection district of Virginia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I now insist on my motion to go to business on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. This being Friday, if the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whitthorne] should prevail, only private business on the Speaker's table will be considered.

Mr. CARLISLE. Should this motion be negatived, I desire to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of recognize the consideration of the inof the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the inof the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the internal-revenue bill now pending in the committee. I desire to take the sense of the House on that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that, should the motion of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Whittherne] be voted down, he will next recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Bright] to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar. If both these motions should be negatived, the Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] for the purpose he has stated. stated.

Mr. BRIGHT. Pending the motion of my colleague, [Mr. WHITTHORNE,] I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

The SPEAKER. This is a question of the priority of business; and the Chair thinks that the rule on the subject had better be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

5. Unfinished business having been disposed of, it shall be in order to entertain a motion that the House do now proceed to the business on the Speaker's table, which, the motion, prevailing, the Speaker shall dispose of in the following order:

First. Messages from the President and other executive communications, &c.

The SPEAKER. Another rule provides that on Friday private business shall have preference. Hence, if the motion to go to business ness shall have preference. Hence, it the motion to go to business on the Speaker's table should prevail, only private business on the Speaker's table would be considered.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the motion to take up the internal-revenue bill will not be pressed to-day.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is not now the pending motion.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I have no object in the world in making the motion to go to the Speaker's table except the expedition of the public business.

Mr. HAZELTON. Does it not require a two-thirds vote to set aside private business to-day?

The SPEAKER. It does. But the motion to go to the Speaker's table may be carried by a majority vote; and should it be adopted, private business only would be considered.

The motion of Mr. WHITTHORNE was not agreed to.

Mr. BRIGHT. I now ask a vote on my motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

Mr. DIBRELL. Pending that motion, I desire to move that all general debate on each bill as reached be limited to five minutes on

The SPEAKER. That order, in the opinion of the Chair, cannot be made except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DIBRELL. I ask unanimous consent.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object.

WHITEWOOD FLUME COMPANY.

Mr. ACKLEN. I am directed by the Committee on Mines and Mining to ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2805) incorporating the Whitewood Flume Company, and that the same be recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. STEVENSON. I trust this will be done without objection.

Mr. ACKLEN. It is the first bill on the Calendar.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the bill will be taken from the Private Calendar and recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining, not to come back on a motion to reconsider.

Mr. CONGER. Does this action take with it the report?

The SPEAKER. It does. The report accompanies the bill.

Mr. CONGER. I do not want that report to be lost.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has the right to object.

Mr. CONGER. I do not object.

There he in a chiestion the order was made.

There being no objection, the order was made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. BRIGHT, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. STEVENSON in the chair,) for the consideration of business on the Private Calendar.

EDWARD K. WINSHIP.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the first business in order is the bill (H. R. No. 91) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Acting Assistant Paymaster Edward K. Winship, United States Navy.

Mr. FINLEY. Is not the first question in order the unfinished business of last Saturday

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the bill to which the gentleman from Ohio refers has been disposed of by unanimous consent, by being recommitted to the Committee on Mines and Mining. The bill, which was read, directs the accounting officers of the Treasury of the United States, in settling the accounts of Edward K. Winship, acting assistant paymaster United States Navy, to credit him with all stoppages charged against him, amounting to $5,098.15.

The report was read, as follows:

Edward K. Winship was appointed in 1862 an acting assistant paymaster in the United States Navy, and served in that capacity continuously until 1864, when he resigned and rendered, his final accounts for settlement. Fourth Auditor Tabor says of Mr. Winship's accounts, under date of June 4, 1878, "Your accounts were always well kept and promptly rendered."

Years after their final rendition these accounts were audited, and when so audited checkages, errors, and discrepancies were found against him amounting to $5,098, for which amount the United States have proceeded to judgment against Mr. Winship on his bond, and it is to be relieved from this judgment, and to have the accounting officers authorized to settle his accounts, that the bill referred to is before the House.

Your committee find that Mr. Winship, in the two years he served as acting the accounting officers authorized to settle his accounts, that the bill referred to is before the House.

Your committee find that Mr. Winship, in the two years he served as acting assistant paymaster, was on duty on the supply-ship Massachusetts, and engaged in furnishing all manner of supplies, including large sums of money, to the various vessels of our blockading fleet; that he was compelled to pass over to the paymasters of the various vessels, in the hurried passage of his ship, packages of money amounting to large sums, as well as stores of every kind and description needed by our blockading squadron, and that his accommodations on board ship were inadequate for the duties he was compelled to perform. His disbursements, in money alone amounted to near $2,000,000, and, quoting the language of Auditor Tabor, in the letter above referred to, "Your expenditures on said ship, in money, clothing, small stores, and provisions, were exceedingly large, and that you were doing duty both as paymaster and as storekeeper."

Your committee are of the opinion that no adequate protection was afforded Mr. Winship against the great risk he was compelled to take, and that the chances are largely that loss was occasioned by money passing from him to some one else in some of his numerous transactions without proper voucher. It is fourteen years since Mr. Winship rendered his accounts, and by reason of such great lapse of time he is whelly unable to produce any memorands to aid him in tracing out such alleged deficiencies; therefore, in the judgment of the committee, the relief asked for ought to be granted.

Your committee are largely induced to the above conclusion from the very high character of the gentleman seeking this relief. He resigned his position in the Navy to accept that of cashier of the Philadelphia United States sub-treasury, where he served considerable time. His accounts and his conduct in that position were faultless. We find from inquiry at the Treasury no suspicion attaches to Mr. Winship, and we believe it is fair to say that this loss, in the opinion of the committee, is without negligence or criminality on his part, and we recommend the passage of the hill

Mr. BREWER moved that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

REBECCA S. ALLEN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No.

748) granting a pension to Rebecca S. Allen.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Rebecca S. Allen, widow of Captain James Allen, late of the Mississippi Marine Brigade, and to pay her a pension from and after the passage of this act during her widow-

That James T. Allen, the husband of the said Rebecca S. Allen, was master of the hospital steamer Woodford, one of the vessels of the Mississippi Marine Bri-

That James T. Allen, the husband of the said Reocca S. Allen, was master of the hospital steamer Woodford, one of the vessels of the Mississippi Marine Brigade.

That he was regularly employed as such by Captain James Brooks, assistant quartermaster, and was duly sworn into the service of the United States on the 1st day of February, 1864, and served as master of said steamer Woodford until she was sunk in Red River, at the time of General Banks's expedition. That while engaged in such service and in the line of his duty he contracted a disease called diarrhea, and by reason thereof was sent home to New Albany, Indiana, where he died of said disease on the 3d day of June, 1864.

That after his death his wages up to June 3, 1864, were paid by the United States and the only reason assigned by the Pension Office for rejecting his widow's claim for a pension is that the vessels of the Mississippi Marine Brigade, having been employed by the Quartermaster's Department, were not technically "war vessels of the United States," within the meaning of sections 4693 and 4702 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. But in the opinion of your committee these vessels were really "war vessels of the United States; whether technically so considered or not. They were employed by the United States; their officers and men were enlisted and paid by the United States; they were actively engaged in the prosecution of the war, and when they died in the line of their duty they, gave their lives for the restoration of the Union. Congress has heretofore granted pensions to widows of officers and men who served in the Mississippi Marine Brigade, as in the case of Mrs. Ravenscroft, (Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 692,) and in the case of Mrs. Ravenscroft, (Statutes at Large, volume 16, page 692,) and in the case of Mrs. Sullivan, Ibid, page 687.

Your committee recommend that the accompanying bill, H. R. No. 748, be passed.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HARVEY BURK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No.

751) granting a pension to Harvey Burk.

The bill, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Harvey Burk, late a private in Company E, of the Sixty-seventh Regiment Indiana Infantry Volunteers, and to pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month from the 19th day of September, 1863.

The report was read, as follows:

day of September, 1863.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. Burk was enlisted on the 22d day of July, 1862, as a private in Company E, of the Sixty-seventh Regiment of Indiana Volunteers, and was discharged at Carrollton, Louisiana, on September 19, 1863, because of a partial loss of use of his hands and feet caused by rheumatism, which had become chronic and rendered him totally unfit for military service.

The evidence shows total disability, and the only reason alleged for the rejection of the claim for a pension in this case was the statement that the disability existed prior to enlistment; but the recruiting officers enlisted him as a sound man; the colonel of his regiment, the captain of his company, and the captain of another company in the same regiment, all swear that Mr. Burk was in good health at and before his enlistment, and became disabled in the service; the first literiant of his company swears that this soldier was disabled in the line of his duty.

The assistant surgeon of the regiment, under date of June 2, 1869, certifies that the disability was the result of rheumatism and neuralgia, caused by exposure while a prisoner; and the examining surgeon of the Pension Office certifies that the disability is total, and that he believes from the evidence it was incurred during the service and in the line of duty. In addition to this all the county officers of Jackson County, Indiana, and a large number of respectable citizens of Brownstown, in said county, where the soldier had his home, certify that they had known him many years, and that when he enlisted he was a sound and healthy man, free from disease; and against all this mass of testimony there is nothing whatever except the statement of the assistant surgeon of the regiment in 1863, which was afterward corrected by the certificate above mentioned of the same surgeon on June 2, 1869, and the statement of a detective employed by the Pension Office that, in his opinion, the disability existed before enlistment, and that a man named Nelson Durl

Mr. BROWNE. In the seventh line, after the word "volunteers," I move to strike out the words "and to pay him a pension at the rate of $8 per month from the 19th day of September, 1863," and in lieu thereof to insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS J. JACKSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 753) granting a pension to Thomas J. Jackson.

The bill, which was read, authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Thomas J. Jackson, late lieutenant-colonel of the Eleventh United States Colored Infantry, and to pay him a pension from the date of his discharge, deducting there-from any amount, if any, that may have been paid him as pension.

Mr. BROWNE. In the seventh line I move to strike out the following words:

And to pay him a pension from the date of his discharge, deducting therefrom any amount, if any, that may have been paid him as pension.

Mr. WARNER. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

Mr. WARNER. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

It appears that the claim in this case was rejected by the Commissioner of Pensions for the sole reason that no disability existed. This was on the 18th of October, 1869. The evidence shows that Colonel Jackson was enlisted as a lieutenant in Company B, of the Forty-second Regiment Indiana Infantry, on the 25th of August, 1861, and on the 22d of February, 1864, was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Eleventh United States Colored Infantry, and that, while engaged with his regiment in a raid in Mississippi, he contracted a fever and chronic diarrhea, and after two temporary leaves, granted by reason of such disability, he was finally discharged from the service, in consequence thereof, on the 8th day of August, 1865. On the 12th day of February, 1867, he made his application for a pension.

He was twice examined by one of the examining surgeons of the Department, first on the 13th of February, 1867, and again on the 27th of February, 1869, and in both cases the surgeon rated his disability at one-fourth.

It appears that his claim for a pension was at first, on the 22d of July, 1869, admitted by the Department at $7.50 per month, commencing August 9, 1865, and was afterward rejected on the 5th of August, 1869. The claim was admitted on the ground that the claimant was "disabled by hard service;" it seems to have been afterward rejected on the ground that there was no evidence of disability existing at the time of the rejection, except the affidavit of the applicant; the final entry is "no disability at present, October 18, 1869." But the affidavit of Dr. Cooper, a physician of New Albany, of long experience and great distinction in his profession, who was the physician of the claimant, made on the 24th of March, 1879, shows conclusively that the disability has been continuous. His statement is as follows: "I know from my own personal knowledge as the physician of Colonel Jackson, and from my experience as a physician and surgeon during the w

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to have read the following statement from the Pension Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL THOMAS J. JACKSON, [H. R. NO. 753.]

The question at issue before the Pension Office is simply whether the claimant suffers from any disability which would justify the allowance of a pension.

He was twice examined by pension examining surgeons, in 1867 and 1869. In the latter examination it was stated that there was no evidence of disability in his case. This pension claim was never admitted on account of "disability from hard service" by the Department, as stated in the committee's report, nor did it ever receive the favorable action of the Pension Office, but was rejected for the reason "there was no pensionable disability."

The testimony of Dr. Cooper, referred to in the committee's report, was not presented to the Pension Office for consideration, but was filed, it is presumed, with the committee.

Referring to Dr. Cooper's statement, it will be seen that he certifies from "personal knowledge," based in part on his experience as a physician and surgeon during the war, * * that Colonel Jackson's disability is due to hardships of service, long marches, and exposure.

As Dr. Cooper was not associated with Colonel Jackson in service, it does not appear how he should be able to so testify.

He further says that Colonel Jackson first had break-bone fever; now has pain in the heart; lis stomach continually disordered; has rheumatism, which greatly increases the cardiac troubles; that the derangement of the heart was in part the result of excitement of musketry firing and cannonading.

As there are elements of disease described by Dr. Cooper which have not even been alleged by the claimant, his testimony, without further light in the case, creates some confusion.

There is no evidence that Colonel Jackson has made any effort before the Pensions of the case of the continual of the con ates some confusion.

There is no evidence that Colonel Jackson has made any effort before the Pension Office to prove his right to pension since the year 1869.

Such evidence as he might file with a view to show that he has continued to suffer from disability since he left the service would receive such consideration as the facts would warrant.

Mr. Browne's amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

EDWARD H. LEIB.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No.

The next business on the Frivate Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 1463) granting a pension to Edward H. Leib.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Edward H. Leib, late brevet lieutenant-colonel United States Army, captain Fifth United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month from June 9, 1877, the date he left the service, in lieu of the pension he now receives, deducting therefrom the amounts already paid him. The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

It is in evidence that the claimant, on or about the 1st day of April, A. D. 1865, at the battle of Five Forks, in the State of Virginia, while in the military service of the Government and in the line of his duty, received a gunshot wound, which entered the upper right arm and passed through the body, injuring the lungs and producing disability. That on account of said wounds and disability he was granted a pension by the Government at the rate of $20 per month, commencing on the 10th day of May, 1877. The claimant now appeals to Congress for an increase of pension, at the rate of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension now paid him.

It is in evidence that the claimant was a brave and distinguished soldier during the late war, and was the recipient of many promotions and honorable testimonials from his commanding officers for his gallant and meritorious conduct in more than fifty battles in which he was engaged.

It is in evidence that the claimant entered the service as a private soldier in the Washington Artillerists, of Pottsville, Pennsylvania, the first company of troops to reach the seat of government after the President's call for seventy-five thousand men. On April 26, 1861, he was commissioned a second lieutenant in the Second United States Cavalry, (now the Fifth United States Cavalry,) and was a participant in the first battle of Bull Run. He was in command of Company F of his regiment, at the siege of Yorktown, in the battle of Williamsburgh, Hanover Court House, and throughout the Peninsula campaign. For gallantry at "Old Church," Virginia, he received warm commendation from Major-General Emory, his superior commander. He participated in all the "seven days" battles in front of Richmond, and in the engagements of the Maryland campaign which succeeded, including South Mountain, Anticam, &c., closing at Fredericksburgh, December 13, 1862. He accompanied General Stoneman in his raid around Richmond, May, 1863, and served in all the engagements and saber charges against the enemy, and for his goal and served in the Pennsylvania campaign, was present at the historical battle of Gettysburgh, and all of those immediately preceding and succeeding it, and for his good conduct throughout was highly complimented by General Pleasanton. He likewise participated in all campaigns and battles in the Shenandoah Valley under Generals Custer and Sheridan. As stated above, he was severely wounded at the battle of "Five Forks," and received the rank of brevet major for heroic conduct in that action, and subsequently, upon the recommendation of General Sheridan, who complimented him on the field, he was brevetted a lieutenant-colonel for gallant and meritorious services in that engagement.

It is also in evidence that the claimant at various other times during his military service was the recipient of high testimonials for his courage and gallantry in action from Generals George H. Thomas, Sheridan, Stoneman, Pleasanton, Emory, Browne, Lew. Wallace, Gregg, Nagle, and others under whom he served.

It is also in

The nature of his present disability and ineapability of providing for his own subsistence and that of his family by manual labor is established by the report of the board of examining surgeons, transmitted to the Commissioner of Pensions at the time the claimant first made application for a pension, and which is now on file with the committee, as follows, to wit:

"Gunshot wound of right shoulder. Ball entered anterior surface of arm one inch above the insertion of the deltoid muscle, and, passing obliquely backward and inward, emerged just below the spine of the scapula at its inner border, and in its course injuring the lungs and producting hemorrhage. Has cough and purulent expectoration. Motion of shoulder-joint considerably impaired."

tificate of George McC. Miller, assistant surgeon of United States Army, given at Camp Grant, Arizona, previous to his dismissal from the service, recommending his retirement.

The certificate is as follows, to wit:

"I hereby certify that I have carefully examined this officer, and find that he is laboring under 'chronic malarial toxemia,' acquired in 1872 at Old Camp Grant, Arizona Territory, and for which he has been under my professional care for several months past. He labors under attacks of fever, indigestion, loss of appetite, diarrhea, nervous pains, &c. He is a man of sober habits, so far as I can judge, so that chronic alcoholism is not blended with his case. He suffers, also, from an old gunshot wound, for which I have already recommended that he be enabled to present himself before a retiring board. He also labors under some degree of mental irregularity. I am of the opinion that he is unfit for the service, and most probably permanently so."

It is the opinion of the committee that the foregoing testimony of medical character is sufficient to establish the character of his disability as permanent and total, so far as manual labor is concerned. It was sufficient to enable the post-surgeon to recommend his retirement from the Army. Had it not been for the unfortunate occurrence which resulted in his dismissal from the service, which he had adorned by his former great. "gallantry and heroic courage," he would have been finally retired on full pay, with the rank of captain. As it is now, he is out of the service after all his perilous devotion to the cause of the Government, with a pension of but $20 per month.

It is the opinion of the committee that the evidence is such as to entitle the leaimant to the relief prayed for. A soldier who has periled his life on more than fifty battle-fields, and is finally compelled to leave the service with a broken and shattered constitution from wounds and exposures received while in the discharge of his duty, deserves well of his country, even though his dismissal

Mr. BROWNE. I move to strike out in the eighth, ninth, and tenth lines the words "from June 9, 1877, the date he left the service," and in the tenth and eleventh lines, "deducting therefrom the amounts already paid him." That will leave the bill increasing the pension to the rate of $50 per month from the time of the passage of this act, to the rate of $50 per month from the time of the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension he already receives.

Mr. WARNER. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "fifty" and inserting "at a rate to be fixed at the Pension Office."

Mr. BROWNE. Let me suggest to my friend from Ohio that is where the trouble is. The rate has been already fixed by the Pension Office and there will be no relief afforded by this bill if it goes back simply to be adjusted upon the basis upon which it is now allowed.

Mr. WARNER. I am opposed to this committee or this House fixing the rate of pension on evidence submitted here. As I have before stated, the rating should be done at the Pension Office, where all can be rated on the same principle of equity.

be rated on the same principle of equity.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. The remarks of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] may apply to a case where we seek to put the party on the pension-roll, but that is not the case here. The object of this bill is to increase the pension which has already been given to this man under the general law by the Department from $20 to $50 per month. I want to say in regard to this case that if there ever was an instance where Congress is justified in increasing a pension by special act this is one. This officer is one of the most gallant who served in the volunteer forces of the United States. I doubt whether served in the volunteer forces of the United States. I doubt whether there is one who has a more brilliant war record than Lieutenant-Colonel Leib.

He served throughout the war of the rebellion, and afterward served through the Indian wars on the frontier, and is now in conse-quence of his service for the Government a total physical wreck, the result of wounds received in action and exposure in that service. For his gallantry on the field he has been promoted all along from a private soldier up to the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and has received on various occasions compliments in general orders from his superior officers for his gallantry on the field of action. This is the record of the applicant in this case, and I believe that under these circumstances we ought to support the bill, possibly with the amendment which has been proposed by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COFFROTH. I rise in this instance to oppose both the amendments which have been offered. This man, Colonel Leib, entered the Army as a private soldier from Pottsville, and was with the first troops who reached the seat of Government after the President's first real! He enlisted in an artillery organization, then I believe under call. He enlisted in an artillery organization, then, I believe, under the command of the present Doorkeeper of the House of Representthe command of the present Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives. He remained true to the Union, and kept within its lines and was in fifty battles. He went through the entire war with distinguished honor to himself, and for years afterward remained in the service when he could have been mustered out and put upon the retired list at the pay to which he would have been entitled under the rank which he held.

Mr. ATHERTON. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him? Do I understand him to say that this officer was enlisted here under the present Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives? Mr. COFFROTH. He was under the command of the present Door-keeper, as I am informed.

Mr. ATHERTON. I understand that the present Doorkeeper of the House was on the other side during the war.

Mr. COFFROTH. I know he was afterward, but at this time he

mr. COFFROTH. I know he was afterward, but at this time he was not. At all events Colonel Leib did not go.

Mr. ATHERTON. I only wanted to find out if it was the gentleman's desire to get a confederate soldier on the rolls. [Laughter.]

Mr. COFFROTH. I have stated that Colonel Leib remained true to the Union throughout the war, but the present Doorkeeper of the House made his choice and took his election on the other side. Now, this man Colonel Leib was in the service for sixteen years. He had this man Colonel Leib was in the service for sixteen years. He had been throughout all the wars, the war of the rebellion as well as the Indian wars, and had been out on the frontiers a great part of the time; and then, about the time that he would have been retired upon the pay of a captain, he got into an unfortunate difficulty with some of the officers and was discharged from the Army.

Now, I say his pension should commence from 1877, because he was retired from the Army at that time, but he has rendered services to the Government which ought to entitle him to the $50 from that time.

There is no officer in the service who made such a brilliant record up to the time he got into this unfortunate difficulty, or who was in so many battles as he was, and who was so true, and who was so frequently promoted on account of his individual bravery and fearless conduct while in the Army of the United States. I say that all this conduct while in the Army of the United States. I say that all this should be considered in connection with the case. Therefore, I hope that this House will refuse to adopt any of the amendments, and allow this man at the rate of $50 a month from the time of his discharge from the Army, deducting that which has already been paid to him.

Mr. WARNER. One word, Mr. Chairman. Are we pensioning pa-

Mr. WAKNER. One word, Mr. Chairman. Are we pensioning patriotism? Are we pensioning loyalty, gallantry, or military service even? We are pensioning neither. Patriotism and valor are virtues to be commended, or they may be duties; but we grant pensions as compensation for disability, for loss, for damage sustained in the military service, and for that only. Now, I do not question the gallantry and bravery of this officer. But a pension is pay—pay for loss or damage to his person or for disability incurred in the military service.

The law fives what the allowance for a specific disability shall be

The law fixes what the allowance for a specific disability shall be. Now, if the law is not right, and it does not give proper pay or sufficient pension for a given disability, then change the law. That is the remedy. But to change it for one man when there may be a thousand of that class I insist is to enact injustice. I say in this case the pension should be rated by the same authority and in the same way, and at the same office, and according to the same principles that the pension of every other officer or private soldier is rated.

Mr. BROWNE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not be at all displeased if the committee should vote down the amendment I have offered to this bill. I offered it because I think that there ought to be uniformthis bill. I obered it because I think that there ought to be inhormity in the legislation by Congress upon this subject of pensions. I can recall many cases of extreme hardship in consequence of the action of the Pension Office and Congress together in fixing the time at which the pension should begin.

For instance, a person incurring disease in the service of the United States, and being totally paralyzed for ten years, when Congress passes a bill for his relief they make it to begin at the date when the bill is approved by the President of the United States. These inequalities approved by the Fresident of the United States. These inequalities must necessarily occur when special relief is given by Congress. It is unavoidable, and we, or at least I, desire that this legislation shall be as uniform as possible.

This is a peculiar case. It is an extraordinary case. And while I agree in the general principle stated by my friend from Ohio, [Mr. Warner,] I think this is a case that may be taken out of the rule.

Under the ratings at the Pension Office the rate for this kind of disability cannot exceed ordinarily $20 a month. In order to entitle to $50 the disability must not only be total but must be such that the pensioner requires the constant assistance of another person.

But now what is this case? This gallant officer, but for the indiscretion that has been referred to might have been retired in 1877 and put upon the retired rank of lieutenant-colonel, as that I believe was his rank at the time the disability occurred. That would have given him out of the Treasury of the United States about $200 a month. I speak from memory. He would have received three-fourths of the full pay of lieutenant-colonel; equal at least to $200 a month. He, however, by reason of his dismissal from the service has not been able to secure that. Now he comes and asks that his pension be increased from $20 to $50 a month. The character of the disability is such that I believe he ought to receive that increase.

As a matter of course if the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio prevails he would be rated at the Pension Office at precisely the sum he receives now. I think my amendment ought to prevail for the reason that we should make the legislation in these special cases uniform and in accordance with the principle on which the original nniform and in accordance with the principle on which the original pensions are granted. Those pensions begin from the date of the passage of the bill, and the same rule ought to obtain when an increase is given. The increase ought to begin from the date of the passage of the bill. In that way we get exact uniformity; and if subsequently by any general law of Congress pensioners are entitled to arrears, or if the rates for these kinds of disability are increased, then all that have been granted relief by special legislation will be put upon terms of perfect equality; and you cannot reach this equality in any other way, in my judgment.

Mr. WARNER. I send to the desk to have read a report from the Pension Office in this case.

The Clerk read as follows:

EDWARD H. LEIB, A CAPTAIN, [H. R. NO. 1463.]

Is now pensioned at $30 per month, which is the "total" pension of the rank of a captain.

The next highest rate would be $24 per month in such cases where the disability is such that the pensioner is incapacitated for the performance of any manual.

labor.

Captain Leib is not disabled to this extent.

The fifty-dollar rate, which is recommended by the committee, is that provided for in those cases where the pensioner is totally and permanently helpless, requiring the regular personal aid and attendance of another person.

Mr. WARNER. I believe, Mr. Chairman, there are three thousand to five thousand captains on the pension-roll entitled to an increase of pension just as much as this officer is.

Mr. RYAN, of Kansas. Then they ought to have it.

Mr. WARNER. Then change the law so as to give it to them, if it is really due them, and not select one out of three thousand, or perhaps four or five thousand, in order to give to one what you deny to

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to ask the gentleman from Ohio where he got that paper which he said came from the Pension Office.

Mr. WARNER. It was sent to me as coming from the Pension Of-

Mr. COFFROTH. How did the gentleman know it came from the Pension Office? What ear-mark did it bear? I ask this question because if that paper came from the Pension Office it is singular that the Commissioner of Pensions should say, as he did say in the room of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, that if ever there was a man who was in the service entitled to this increase and this amount of pension it was this man Colonel Leib.

The question being taken on Mr. WARNER's amendment to Mr.

BROWNE's amendment, it was not agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. BROWNE was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. No. 5626) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

WILLIAM BRYANT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3017) granting a pension to William Bryant.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of William Bryant, late a private of Company C, One hundred and thirty-minth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, and that he be entitled to a pension of $\mathbf{s}\ \mathbf{p}\ \mathbf{e}\ \mathbf{e}\

Mr. BAYNE. I offer the following amendment:

Insert in the fourth line, after the word "pension-roll," the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws;" and strike out after the word "volunteers" the words "and that he be entitled to a pension of $8 per month;" so that the bill will read:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Bryant, late a private of Company C, One hundred and thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. COFFROTH. I have no objection to that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

MARTHA NEIL.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2548) granting a pension to Martha Neil.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Martha Neil, mother of James Neil, deceased, late a private of Company E, of the One hundred and fourteenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Infantry Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the said pension to commence from the death of said James Neil, who was killed at the battle of Gettysburgh, on the 2d day of July, A. D. 1863.

Mr. GODSHALK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out all after the words "pension laws," in the eighth line, namely, the following:
"The said pension to commence from the death of said James Neil, who was killed at the battle of Gettysburgh, on the 2d day of July, A. D. 1863."

Mr. COFFROTH. I agree to that amendment.
Mr. BURROWS. Let the report be read.
The report made by Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read, as follows:

The report made by Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, was read, as follows:

It is in evidence that the claimant, on the 8th day of May, 1876, filed at the office of the Commissioner of Pensions a declaration for an original pension of a mother, and that the same was rejected, on the ground that the claimant was not dependent upon the soldier for support at the date of his death.

It is also in evidence that the claimant is the mother of James Neil, who enlisted at Philadelphia on the 30th day of July, 1862, as a private in Company E of the One hundred and fourteenth Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers in the war of 1861, and who was killed at the battle of Gettysburgh, July 2, 1863.

It is also in evidence that the claimant is the widow of George Neil, who died at the age of sixty-two years; that she has not since remarried, and that there were surviving at the date of said son's death (who died unmarried) no brothers or sisters who were under sixteen years of age.

The evidence before the committee in support of her declaration of dependency upon said son is an affidavit of the claimant, which sets forth the fact of receipt of money from him three times before his death at the battle of Gettysburgh, and that he sent her all of his earnings that could be spared from his own necessities as a soldier. In proof of which she submits letters from said son indicating the amount of inclosures; also an affidavit of Eliza Burt, who swears that she saw the letters from James Neil to his mother, the claimant, and that they contained the amount of inclosures; also an affidavit of Eliza Burt, who swears that she saw the letters from James Neil to his mother, the claimant, and that they contained the amount of inclosures; also an affidavit of Eliza Burt, who swears that she saw the letters from James Neil to his mother, the claimant, and that they contained the amount of inclosures; also an affidavit, of Eliza Burt, who swears that she saw the letters from James, to the country, although she could have pr to which she is entitled by its laws.

In addition to the foregoing is a petition signed by twenty-three influential citizens of Conshohocken, Pennsylvania, composed of lawyers, clergymen, physicians, judges, merchants, manufacturers, postmaster, and ex-member of Congress, afirming her dependency upon her son James at the time of his death, and requesting that her claim may be granted.

In view of the foregoing testimony, which in the opinion of the committee sufficient to establish the fact of her dependency and entitle her to the relief prayed for, the committee return the bill to the House and recommend the passage of the

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to make in this case the statement which I send to the desk and ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MARTHA NEIL, DEPENDENT MOTHER OF JAMES NIEL, [H. R. NO. 2548.]

Soldier died while in service July 2, 1863. Declaration for pension filed May 9, 1876. The husband of the claimant died December 9, 1875.

To entitle the claimant to a pension under the pension laws the condition of dependence must be shown to have existed at the time of the soldier's death, and as the husband of the claimant was then living, his physical inability to procure a subsistence or support should be shown.

It does not appear in evidence that the husband of this claimant was rendered unable to provide a support for his family until the fall and winter of 1873 and 1874.

Mr. GODSHALK. I wish to say in reference to this case that it was first brought to the attention of Congress during the Forty-fifth Congress, and a bill was introduced by my predecessor, Mr. Evans, on the 1st day of April, 1878, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions. That bill was reported favorably by that committee, but owing to the want of time it was not considered by the House. I again introduced the bill in this Congress, and it was referred with the evidence to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and that committee by the committee on Invalid Pensions, and that committee has been reported in forceached to the Market Pensions of the tee has now reported it favorably to the House.

It is in evidence that this woman was entirely dependent upon her son for support at the time of his death. As it is the law in Penn-sylvania that the child must support the parent, and as the pension law recognizes the fact that a mother is entitled to support by her child, and entitled to a pension if that child shall be killed while in the service of the United States, I think this is a case where the relief asked for should be granted.

The amendment moved by Mr. GODSHALK was adopted.

The bill, as amended, was then laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JAMES FORSYTH HARRISON.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3487) granting a pension to James Forsyth Harrison; introduced by Mr. URNER and reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of James Forsyth Harrison, of Cumberland, Maryland, at the rate of $— per month, to date from the 15th day of September, 1863.

Mr. COFFROTH. I move to amend the bill so that it will read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of James Forsyth Harrison, of Cumberland, Maryland, at the rate of $20 per month.

Does that identify the company and regiment? Mr. COFFROTH. It does not.

Then I think the bill is defective in that respect. Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. COFFROTH. This man did not belong to any regiment; he was sent out on special duty and was acting as a scout.

Mr. BROWNE. Let me inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COFFROTH] if this is a bill granting an original pension or an increase of pension?

Mr. COFFROTH. An original pension.

Mr. BROWNE. If so, then I move to strike out so much of the bill as fixes the rate at which the pension shall be given.

Mr. COFFROTH. I will modify my amendment so as to omit that portion of it. I sent to the Senate and obtained a bill that had passed that body for a similar case, and in it they fixed the pension at the rate granted to a private soldier.

Mr. HAYES. Let the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom were referred the petition of James F. Harrison and the bill (H. R. No. 3487) granting him a pension, having considered the same, make the following report:

It appears from the testimony that the petitioner was a clerk in the quartermaster's department at New Creek, West Virginia, under Captain George W. Harrison, assistant quartermaster, United States Volunteers; that while a clerk, as aforesaid, and acting under order of Brevet Major-General B. F. Kelley, commanding the Department of West Virginia, and in the line of duty, the said Harrison was sent out from New Creek, Virginia, on the 3d day of August, 1863, in command of a detachment of twenty-three men of the Ringgold Cavalry, Pennsylvania Volunteers, to impress teams for the use of General Averill's cavalry command. On the 4th day of August, 1863, at Williamsport, Virginia, said Harrison and his command were taken prisoners of war, and taken to Libby Prison, Richmond, Virginia, On the 15th of September, 1863, he was taken from Libby Prison and placed in hospital at Richmond, Virginia, which is shown by the following communication:

"War Department,"

"WAR DEPARTMENT, "Washington City, January 20, 1879.

"Sir: In response to your request of the 10th instant, for a detailed statement of your capture and exchange during the late war, I beg to inform you that it appears from the records of prisoners of war that J.F. Harrison, clerk Quartermaster's Department, was captured at Williamsport, Maryland, August 4, 1863; admitted to hospital 2l, Richmond, Virginia, September 15, 1863, with "scorbutus;" paroled at Richmond, Virginia, October 28, 1863; and reported at Camp Parole, Maryland, October 29, 1863; exchanged May 7, 1864, under General Orders 191, Adjutant-General's Office, 1864.

"Very respectfully, your obedient servant, "GEO. W. MCCRARY,

"GEO. W. McCRARY, "Secretary of War.

"James F. Harrison, Esq., "Cumberland, Maryland."

October 28, 1863, said Harrison was exchanged at City Point, Virginia, and taken to the hospital at Annapolis, Maryland, and placed in Saint John's College Green Hospital, ward No. 5, and treated by Surgeon G. V. Parker, United States Volunteers, until the 23d day of December, 1863, when he was sent to his home at Cumberland, Maryland, where he has been treated to date for in ano fistula, which is shown by medical testimony from three physicians, who also testify that petitioner has undergone two surgical operations for the same. The committee think it is clearly established that the petitioner is suffering from disability incurred in the United States service and while a prisoner of war, and they therefore report back the said bill, and recommend that it do pass.

The amendment of Mr. COFFROTH, as modified, was then agreed to. The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN FISHER.

The next bill upon the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 3544) granting a pension to John Fisher, guardian of the infant heirs of William Dakin, deceased; introduced by Mr. WILSON, and reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Fisher, of West Virginia, guardian of the infant heirs of William Dakin, deceased, late private of Company G, Sixth Regiment of West Virginia Infantry, and pay him as such guardian the sum allowed by law to minor children of deceased private soldiers, until they, the said children, arrive respectively at the age of sixteen years, commencing from July 13, 1864, that being the date of the death of their said father.

Mr. HAYES. Let the report be read. The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3544) granting a pension to John Fisher, guardian of the minors of William Dakin, late a private in Company G, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteers, having had the same under consideration, respectfully submit the following report:

The records relative to William Dakin's connection with the Army, on file in the War Department, show that the said Dakin was a soldier in Company G, Sixth Regiment West Virginia Volunteers; that he was stationed with his company at New Creek, West Virginia, and that on the 13th day of July, 1894, while traveling on the cars of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, he was accidentally killed near Bradie's Mill, a station on the road from New Creek to Cumberland, Maryland, by falling from the cars.

The evidence before the Pension Department proves satisfactorily that the said Dakin left surviving him a widow and two infant children, George W. Dakin, born July 11, 1861, and Fanny B. Dakin, born July 30, 1863; that the widow of the said Dakin subsequently intermarried with John Fisher, and that the said Fisher was duly appointed guardian of the said minors of William Dakin by the county court of Wirt County, West Virginia, and that the said Fisher is at present still acting in the capacity of guardian, and that application was duly made to the Pension Department by said Fisher for a pension for the said minors, and that that application, after having been considered by the Department, was rejected upon the only ground, as stated by the Commissioner, that it did not appear from the records of the War Department that Dakin was absent from his company, at the time of his death, by leave of the commander of the post.

It further appears from the testimony before this committee that the said Dakin had received from Lieutenant P. E. Dils, the commander of the post at New Creek, a pass dated the 7th day of July, 1864, good for ten days, from New Creek to Cumberland and return. The identity of the pass is established by the testimony of the officer on whose requisition it was issued, as also by the testimony of several witnesses who saw the pass and heard Lieutenant Dils say that he had given that very pass to Dakin.

It was while traveling on this pass, without any negligence whatever on the part of Dakin, that he was accidentally, killed. This is conclusively proved by the testimony of Lieutenant Dils, andof several others, eye-witnesses of the accident, who swear that

The bill was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House. FRANCIS H. BIRD.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 1470) granting a pension to Francis H. Bird; introduced by Mr. BAYNE and reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions by Mr. COFFROTH.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Francis H. Bird, late a private of Company A, Fifty-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteer In-

Mr. BAYNE. I move to amend the bill just read by inserting after the word "pension-roll" the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Mr. COFFROTH. I will accept that amendment; I have no objection to it.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HAYES. Let the report be read.
The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 1470) granting a pension to Francis H. Bird, having duly considered the facts, respectfully report:

That Francis H. Bird was a private in Company A, Fifty-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, having enlisted September 27, 1864, and been discharged May 19, 1885. While in the line of duty he contracted diarrhea about the 15th of October, 1864, at Pulaski, Tennessee, which became chronic, and when he was discharged he went to his home broken down in health and suffering from this complaint.

Dr. William Stanton testifies that he has known the petitioner for over eighteen years prior to October, 1877, and that from personal knowledge he knows that at the date of his enlistment he was of sound bodily health and free from diarrhea or other similar disease. Dr. Stanton also says that he treated him after his discharge, and although his condition improved so far as to permit him to engage in something requiring but little exertion, he, Dr. Stanton, has found it necessary to give him medicine and instructions against the recurrence of his original attack, and from his, Dr. Stanton's, acquaintance with the petitioner he knows there has been a continuous existence of the disease from the date of his discharge to the present time.

been a continuous existence of the disease from the date or his discharge to the present time.

Two comrades and the petitioner swear that the latter contracted the disease at Pulaski, Tennessee.

The records show that he was in the hospital. The claimant applied for a pension, but his application was rejected because he could not furnish all the evidence required.

The committee consider this case as deserving, though it does not present the most serious aspects. It, therefore, respectfully reports back the bill with an amendment that the rate of pension be fixed at $4 per month.

The question was upon laying aside the bill as amended, to be reported favorably to the House.

Mr. BRAGG. I had about made up my mind, Mr. Chairman, that my views had been sufficiently stated to this House to render it unnecessary for me to express myself on any one of these bills in order that my position might be properly understood.

This, however, is a case that I cannot allow to pass without calling to it the attention of the House. I have here from the Pension Office an abstract of the history of this case and of the reasons of its dis-allowance. It is not based upon any detective evidence, nor is it based upon any evidence other than that which was presented to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Perhaps, in justice to the Commissioner of Pensions, I ought to say here that in regard to every case, the details of which I presented to the Committee of the Whole at a former session, the abstracts were made from evidence that the Committee on Invalid Pensions had before them; because those abstracts were taken at my request from the files of the cases after they had been returned by the committee to the Pension Office. I make that statement to show that the two gentlemen of the Committee on Invalid Pensions did not perhaps intend to state what their statements would insinuate to be the fact, that evidence had been supplied to members of this House to be presented when these claims came up for a hearing, which had been withheld from that committee. And if gentlemen of the committee make that statement relative to these cases they simply lead me to infer what I had suspected before, that some of these cases were never very carefully reviewed by the members of the committee, but only by the clerks of the committee, four of whom I think we have furnished to that committee for the purpose of establishing what I may properly that committee for the purpose of establishing what I may properly term a pension factory.

Mr. COFFROTH. Only three special clerks.

Mr. BRAGG. This is the case of a soldier who served eight months, and eight months only, most of which time I infer he was in the hospital. The disability which he received in the service was not sufficiently serious to lead him to file or make a claim for a pension until ten years had elapsed after his discharge. And the papers show that the disability for which he made claim ten years after his discharge was diarrhea, contracted eighteen days after his enlistment.

Now it occurs to me and I should think it would occur to the

Now, it occurs to me, and I should think it would occur to the minds of most of the members of this committee, that if the disability was contracted eighteen days after the man's enlistment, especially this peculiar kind of disability, it would have recurred so as to affect him in such manner as to invite his attention to the penas to affect him in such manner as to invite his attention to the pension laws sooner than ten years after his discharge. Now, he was not discharged by reason of disability; the records of the War Department show that he was discharged as a matter of favor to him, not by reason of any disability contracted in the service. As to the medical testimony affecting this case, he has been, as the records of his case show, twice examined by pension examining surgeons, the first examination being made by a single surgeon, the second by a board of two surgeons. In each instance it was certified that the claimant was not disabled from the cause alleged; that his weight as compared with his height, his pulse and his respiration indicated a compared with his height, his pulse, and his respiration, indicated a good physical condition, and that he presented no signs or effects of the disease alleged. The claim was not rejected by the Pension Office because he could not furnish all the evidence required, as stated in the report of the committee, but upon medical evidence that there in the report of the committee, but upon medical evidence that there was no disability in the case.

Mr. BAYNE. A sufficient reply to the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] is that if the examining board, after the passage of this bill, should find that this man's condition is such as is stated in the paper read, they will report that he is not in any way disabled, and consequently is not entitled to be rated as a pensioner at all, so that the passage of the bill cannot inure to the prejudice of the Government in any respect whatever.

Mr. BROWNE. But it is proposed to provide in the bill that he

Mr. BROWNE. But it is proposed to provide in the bill that he shall receive a pension of $4 a month.

Mr. BAYNE. No, sir.

Mr. BROWNE. An amendment has been reported, as I understand, providing that the pension shall be at the rate of $4 a month.

Mr. BAYNE. That is no part of the bill, and any amendment of that sort is to be dropped.

Mr. BRAGG. Let the sear in reply to the continuer from Pennsyl.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me say in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRAYNE] that it seems to me this Congress has plenty of business to do without occupying its time in passing laws which are to be of no effect. From the statement of the record in the Pension Office, it appears that the reason of the rejection of this claim was the existence of no disability whatever. Now, why should we take the time of Congress in passing a law to send the case back to the Commissioner to be passed upon, and if there be no disability, to be rejected, when he has already rejected it because there was no disability? bility ?

Mr. Chairman, the reports of boards of examiners are very unreliable. These boards diagnose a case in probably ten or fifteen minutes. The applicant for a pension in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred is an entire stranger to them; and the conclusion at which the board arrive is often erroneous.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me ask the gentleman whether the case is not subject to be re-opened upon new medical evidence, without the aid of any congressional interference?

of any congressional interference?

Mr. BAYNE. That was the difficulty in this case, as I understand. I do not pretend to be very familiar with the case; but I do say that Dr. William Stanton, who is said to be an eminent physician, testified that this man had incurred in the service a disability which still continued, and that he was not able to engage in manual occupation. This evidence has far more force to my mind than the report of a board of examiners, for the reason that this physician was perfectly familiar with the man's habits of life, had attended him as his physician for a considerable time, and knew far more about his case, no doubt, than the board of surgeons could know. It was upon the basis of this report that the case was recommended for passage by this com-

I fully concur with the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. Bragg,] the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. WARNER,] and other gentlemen here who say that the rate of pensions should be fixed by the Commissioner of Pensions upon competent medical and surgical testimony as to the condition of the applicant. I think it is unjust to fix in a bill passed here an arbitrary rate of pension. But I believe that if we rely implicitly upon the reports made by boards of examiners, injustice will very often be done to applicants. We have no means of ascertaining here whether or not injustice is done in this way except by taking the testimony of the family physician, who knows far more about a particular case than a board of examiners can know. I think about a particular case than a board of examiners can know. I think that when a physician of the high character of Dr. Stanton—a physician known to Representatives on this floor from the State of Ohio to be a man of eminence in his profession—testifies that this man was laboring under a disability which he contracted in the service, it is but fair that he should be placed on the pension-roll. If the board of examiners hereafter should see fit to say that the alleged disability does not exist then he will get no pension; but if it does exist as he does not exist, then he will get no pension; but if it does exist as he claims and as his friends claim and as Dr. Stanton testifies, then I say he ought to be put on the roll and receive such pension as he may be entitled to.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not yet answered my question. Is not the case, without the aid of any special act of Congress, subject to be reopened now upon presentation of proper medical evidence showing the existence of the disability?

Mr. BAYNE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BRAGG. Then why should we legislate?

Mr. BAYNE. The same thing might be said in a great many other

Mr. BRAGG. I take it that the gentlemen from Pennsylvania, although he is a layman so far as the medical profession is concerned, would admit that if a man is stout, has his usual weight, his usual pulse, his usual respiration and shows no signs of physical disability, but shows signs of vigor and health, the evidence of the board stating these facts ought to have some little weight to determine the question whether the man is really disabled, has lost his appetite or has fallen away, particularly when the disability appears to have originated eighteen days after his enlistment, but did not affect him until ten years after his discharge.

mril ten years after his discharge.

Mr. BAYNE. My reply to the question of the gentleman from Wisconsin is that the board of surgeons could only arrive at the conclusion stated by contrasting the condition in which the man was with his previous condition, and the chances are the board knows nothing of the man's previous condition. Consequently you cannot place much reliance upon testimony of that sort.

reliance upon testimony of that sort.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I am much surprised at my friend from Wisconsin in attempting to question the report of the Committee on Pensions. The report states this man is an invalid, and I do not see why it should be questioned. This information is gathered, as I learned from the report, from two of the companions of this soldier in the service and the statement of the family physician. My friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] thinks the board of medical examiners is not always reliable in its judgment, and probably that is true; but I imagine if we should attempt to overthrow the judgment of that board and take the judgment of the family physician we should be apt oftener to err than by taking the judgment of the examining board.

But, sir, this is to carry out another step in the programme which has been adopted for the extension of our pension list. We have a law on the statute-book which provides where there are parents, mother or father, who were dependent on the support of the son killed in the service they shall be entitled to a pension, but I never understood until to-day the law could be extended so as to pension parents who became dependent years and years after the son was dead. There stood until to-day the law could be extended so as to pension parents who became dependent years and years after the son was dead. There have been two cases reported to-day, and I undertake to say there has been no proof to establish the fact that the parent was dependent upon the son, at the time of his death, for support. One of them stated briefly that the son was a minor when he enlisted, and that he sent home to his mother a certain portion of his earnings. I would like to know whether that is any proof to establish the fact the parent was dependent on that son for support.

Mr. COFFROTH. That bill is not under discussion, and I must object.

Mr. BREWER. I have the floor. It was natural, of course, for the son to send his money to his mother to be retained for him until

This is but a step further in the direction of extending our pen-This is but a step further in the direction of extending our pension-roll. We are pensioning not only those who were wounded, which is perfectly proper, we are not only pensioning those who contracted disease in the service, which is perfectly proper, but we are pensioning those parents who were not dependent on the son for support at the time of his death.

My friend from Pennsylvania here insists we should pension those who are not disabled at all. I say this is but a single step further. I have come to the conclusion that we ought not longer to fritter away our time in this direction, but if we are to pension those not disabled at all, then let us have a general law and pension all those who served in the war and close it out. That would be the better course, more reasonable, and, in my judgment, the more sensible one. But if we are not to do that, Mr. Chairman, then we ought to confine ourselves here to those cases where the parties are entitled to a pension under the law as it exists. And if there are honest, worthy cases not covered by a general law, as has been stated from time to time, then let us make provision to cover them. In my judgment, time, then let us make provision to cover them. In my indepent, if there has been a case reported to this House which ought to be rejected on the statement made by the gentleman from Wisconsin, [Mr. Bragg.] then this is the one.

Mr. COFFROTH. I desire to say a word on this case. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Bragg] in appealing here on various occasions comes with an abstract of evidence, that is to say, some clerk in the Pension Office gives him a single statement in reference to the matter, but does not furnish him with the entire evidence on file in the Pension Office, or before the Committee on Invalid Pensions. the Pension Office, or before the Committee on Invalid Pensions. You could destroy the best case which could be presented from the Department and which had been rejected there on some technical objection, by getting an extract or a single sentence out of the evidence. Probably the best case which ever was tried before a jury could be defeated, if the jury believed a single statement made by one of the witnesses to the exclusion of everything else. Yet that is the manner in which the gentleman from Wisconsin comes here; he extracts a single sentence of evidence without taking into consideration as a whole all that has been presented.

In this case, this man went into the service a sound man. It is proved by evidence which cannot be contradicted that he came out sick, suffering from diarrhea, and that he has suffered up to the time his application was made. It is not necessary, I imagine, for the Committee on Invalid Pensions to encumber their reports with full statements of all the evidence before them.

They came to a conclusion and they report that conclusion briefly to the House. Now, take this case. Take for instance, if it be true as the gentleman says, that the examining surgeon reported this man as not being entitled to a pension. My recollection of the circumstances in reference to that examination by the surgeon—because it was before me at the time—is that he reports that this man was entitled to a pension at the rate of one-fourth from the condition he was then in. Now, this puts it upon the record. He has the affida-vit here of the family physician, a gentleman whose professional ability will not be questioned by anybody on this floor who knows him, a man who is equally as competent as the surgeons who have examined him, and he says that he is disabled and suffering all the time with disease.

Here you have a conflict in the testimony of the surgeons. But that is not an unusual thing. Every gentleman who has examined pension cases will come to the conclusion, after looking into them carefully, that it is not an unusual thing for two boards of surgeons to differ very materially on the same case. I have known cases where one board of surgeons reported no disability whatever; another board reversed that decision. I know of a case, one that I remember well, where one board said no disability existed, or that the disability was so trifling that the soldier was not entitled to a pension, and the very next day he went before another board, and that board reported his next day he went before another board, and that board reported his disability as total. Now, the doctors differ. That is a well-settled fact. This man has asked to be put upon the rolls. It does not regulate his pension to put him there; but the question is as to whether he shall be sent before another board, which may decide that he is entitled to a pension. It does not give him a pension, but says that he has a prima facte right to go on the rolls. He has shown conclusively that he is enforced and the rolls are the pension of the rolls. he has a prima facte right to go on the rolls. He has shown conclusively that he is suffering, not only by the testimony which has been submitted but by letters which have been received from his neighbors and sent to the chairman of the committee, stating that he is suffering and urging that a bill be reported in his favor because he is suffering, and they are aware of the fact that he is suffering all the time and that he is not able to maintain himself by manual labor. I hope there will he appropriate to the presence of the bill will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

I have already accepted the amendment which has been offered.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 18.

Mr. BREWER. I ask that we have tellers on that vote. [Cries.]

"Oh, no!"] No quorum has voted, and I shall ask for tellers.
Tellers were ordered; and Mr. Coffroth and Mr. Brewer were

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 16. So (no further count being demanded) the bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ANNA M. WEHE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2608) granting a pension to Anna M. Wehe.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, dc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name-of Anna M. Wehe, of Newport, Kentucky, mother of the late William Wehe, Company B. Eleventh Ohio Volunteer Infantry, to take effect on and after the 24th day of November, 1864, the date of her said son's death, as appears from evidence on file in the Pension Bureau.

The report was read, as follows:

That the said Anna M. Wehe, who is now over sixty years old, is the mother of William Wehe, who enlisted as a private in Company B, Eleventh Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, at Piqua, Ohio, on the 20th day of June, 1861, to serve for three show that the soldier William Webe, while in action with his company at the battle of Antietam, on the 17th day of September, 1862, received a gunshot wound in the right breast, by which he was disabled from further service, and was disabled from further service, and was discharged for that reason on the 4th day of March, 1863. The wound was inflicted by a Minie ball which entered the right breast, by assed between the second and third ribs, and ranged obliquely backward through the upper part of the lung, seriously injuring that organ. This was followed by a severe cough, difficult breathing, shrinking of the muscles, and partial paralysis of the shoulder, arm, and hand.

He was granted a pension of $5 per month, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1863, the examining surgeon having certified that he was, by reason of the wound, "totally incapacitated for obtaining subsistence by manual labor."

The evidence shows that the soldier suffered severely and continuously from the effects of this wound as long as he lived. It never healed; he had a hectic fever and a severe consumptive cough, and, according to the evidence of a physican who attended him, he was in the last stages of consumption when he lost his life as hereafter stated. He was never able to perform any manual labor after receiving the wound, although he was a part of the time, after his discharge from the military service, engaged in a light employment which enabled him to earn small wages. On the 24th day of November, 1864, after a consultation with his physician which satisfied him that he had but a short time to live, he started on a steamboat to go to Ripley, Ohio, about sixty miles from his home, and while on the way fell overboard and was drowned. It appears that he was, after being wounded, subject to frequent and violent fits of coughing, followed by great prostration and dizziness in the head, and the committee feel authorized to conclude from all the circu

Mr. BREWER. I believe all the former bills have been amended to provide that the pension commence from the date of the passage

Mr. WARNER. The report which has been read refers to a substitute for the original bill. I ask for the reading of the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that the substitute is not on the table.

Mr. WARNER. Then I ask the chairman of the committee reporting the bill to state the circumstances in connection with it.

Mr. BURROWS. In order to insure the passage of that bill, I de sire to have read the following statement of facts.

The Clerk read as follows:

ANNA M. WEHE, DEPENDENT MOTHER OF WILLIAM WEHE, [H. R. NO. 2608.]

ANXA M. WEHE, DEPENDENT MOTHER OF WILLIAM WEHE, [H. R. NO. 2608.] V
Soldier was a pensioner and died November 24, 1864.

Mother filed declaration for pension March 21, 1877.

It is alleged that the soldier, some eighteen months after he left the service, fell from a steamer and was drowned. There is no evidence showing the circumstances under which he was drowned.

There is no evidence showing dependence of the mother, nor that her husband was then physically unable to provide a support for her. This evidence was not called for, as the claim was rejected upon the ground that the cause of death would not entitle to pension.

Mr. BURROWS. That, I think, will remove any question that may arise as to the propriety of this bill.

Mr. CALDWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inform the gentleman who sent up that paper to be read, and the House, that there is evidence showing the facts stated in that report, and that that evidence was before the committee; and further, that all of the facts in the control of the facts with the case are substantially set forth in the report. in connection with the case are substantially set forth in the report. I apprehend that no gentleman on this floor who knows my past history will accuse me of any special partiality for Federal soldiers. But, sir, I stand here with the determination to do my duty to the fullest extent as I understand it, and to see that the laws of this country are fairly and faithfully executed so far as I have anything to do with their execution. I have examined this case carefully, and I say to this House and through its record to the American people, that if that woman is not entitled to go upon the pension-roll, then there is not one pensioner upon the pension-roll from its beginning to its end who is entitled to the benefaction of the Government.

I do not know anything about the past history of these parties except as developed by the facts which were before the Committee on Invalid Pensions. This bill was offered in the House by my colleague, [Mr. Carlisle;] and in discharge of the duty which devolved upon me as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions I went over the testimony carefully; and the state of facts exhibited by the evidence in the Pension Office and by additional evidence before the Invalid Pensions Committee is substantially as set forth in the report. This man was wounded I believe at Antietam and was placed on the pension-roll for the wound he there received. The result of that wound was that his life was slowly oozing out day by day; this gunshot wound resulting I believe in consumption. It was shown, as I now remember, that he was subject to fits of violent coughing and that he was advised that in view of all the circumstances surrounding him he had but a short time to live; and that under those circumstances he got on board a boat and the presumption is, with me at least—if gentlemen choose to presume differently I am satisfied—that he had one of those violent fits of coughing to which the evidence shows he was subject, and in that condition fell overboard.

The Pension Office rejected the claim because they could not certify that his wound was the immediate cause of his death. This is strict construction with a vengeance. The evidence showed he would not have lived more than two or three weeks, at any rate but a short time, even if he had not been drowned.

I desire to say in addition that the proof shows his mother and father were separated; that his father was a drunkard and made no father were separated; that his father was a drunkard and made no provision for the support of his family; that his aged mother was dependent exclusively upon the pay received by her son while in the service, and the pension subsequently given him by the Government.

I will say further I do not want any gentleman in this House to suppose that I am acting upon these bills from a feeling of sympathy. I am frank enough to avow I have none further than justice and humanity demands. But I intend to act from a feeling of justice and with a determination to discharge fairly and honorably my duty as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Why, sir, from the conversations and the discussions which have taken place here time after time, one would infer that a place upon the Committee on the conversations and the discussions which have taken place here time after time, one would infer that a place upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions in this House was greatly to be desired and sought after. Now, I wish to say I did not desire a place on that committee. I was assigned there by the Speaker of this House. He had a right to assign me where he pleased and my determination is when I am assigned to any committee in this House to discharge my duty faithfully and justly. I do not know a single solitary man on whose claim I have been called to act as a member of that committee. But I do say, and I care nothing further about it, that in my judgment this woman ought to go upon the pension-roll: and if the laws of this woman ought to go upon the pension-roll; and if the laws of this country are fairly and justly executed she ought to go upon the pension-roll from the date of the death of her son.

I do not agree with the policy that is being pursued by gentlemen in this House, on both sides of the Chamber, of granting arrears of pension through the Pension Bureau; and when parties come to this House on appeal from the Pension Bureau, denying it to the men who House on appeal from the Pension Bureau, denying it to the men who-the representatives of the people say ought to go upon the pension-roll. Therefore, invariably, in all the bills I have reported, where I believed the party was entitled to a pension under the law and that the Commissioner either violated the spirit of the law or had not duly considered the facts in the case—I have in reporting the bills given the claimants the same benefits under the pension law they would have received if the pensions had been granted by the Commissioner of Pensions. I want it understood that I do not intend in the future to antagonize in any way the will of this House upon the subject of granting arrears of pensions. I want my position clearly and emphatically understood by the members of this House, and through the RECORD by the Federal soldiers of the country. I had a record on the other side of the question on which they fought; but I intend to do justice to them and I do not want my motives impugned upon that subject. But if gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber are willing to stop the pension business entirely, let them take the responsibility of it and there will be no complaint from me. Mr. HAZELTON. This claim now pending before the House is entitled to fair, deliberate, and sober consideration. I can attest that the gentleman from Kentucky has been a painstaking, straightforward, hard-working member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. ward, hard-working member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions. The case comes here approved by that entire committee. The report sustains the finding of the committee; and while it is being considered we behold the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] marching to the front of this arena and sending up a paper which he holds in his hand as a sort of slur upon this case, and then we see him retreating to the rear. He beats a good retreat. I have not learned where that paper comes from or whose name is attached to it. What credence is to be given to it? I only look upon it now as a little facetious slur of the gentleman from Michigan upon this honest, straightforward claim for a pension. claim for a pension.

This is no time for that kind of work. This kind of legislation does not invite it. If the gentleman is in possession of any facts, either by an investigation of the record or from his own knowledge, that can establish what may be considered a conclusion contrary to what has been found by the committee, let him come forward with what has been found by the committee, let him come forward with those facts from the record or from personal knowledge and present them to this House. We have no class of legislation here of more importance than this class of legislation, which makes up two-thirds at least of the volume of legislation in the American Congress.

And I say that the Committee on Invalid Pensions individually and collectively have labored faithfully and honestly. They have examined all the testimony faithfully and carefully; they have sought in every direction for the real facts and testimony in every case, and they have made their findings accordingly.

Mr. Chairman, a great many cases referred to us have been reported adversely by the committee; others have been reported favorably, and have gone upon this Calendar. And let me state an important fact in regard to the action of the committee. In nine cases out of ten of these claims for pensions reports have been made partly upon the indorsement and earnest solicitation of the members from whose districts the claims came, and who presented them to this House. I have myself been to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] and others, to members from other States who have presented these bills, and have said to them, "Gentlemen, tell me which of these bills you know to be entirely meritorious, with the circumstances of which you are yourselves well acquainted, and we will advance them on this Calendar." Now, I submit to gentlemen within my hearing whether that has not been the case. And I protest now and I shall protest from now onward against any man putting in here any facetious statement, making any frivolous movement to defeat a just claim presented here for a pension. Unless he can base his opposition upon the record and upon facts within his own knowledge or obtained from authentic sources sufficient to defeat these claims fairly upon the merits, let him hold his peace.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no facetiousness—
Mr. HAZELTON. I desire to say that I intended nothing personal

Mr. BURROWS. I know that with the genial nature of my friend he could not possibly have intended anything personal to me. I suppose that looking to the future he desired to make this speech for home consumption.

Mr. HAZELTON. Oh, no! I was compelled to make it.

Mr. BURROWS. I know nothing in a pension case or in any other case pending in this House that will deter me at any time or on any occasion from stating what I understand to be the facts connected with the case.

Now, while I will go as far as he who goes farthest in standing by and advancing the interests of those who fought in defense of our country, I nevertheless am not content to stand by and see a claim passed which I think ought not to be passed.

Now, for the gratification of the gentleman who has so eloquently delivered himself of his speech, I desire to say that the paper which I sent to the Clerk's desk and had read was sent me from the Pension Office, and it purports to be a truthful statement of the facts in this case, and the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CALDWELL.] who spoke with so much warmth a short time ago, did not pretend to deny one single statement contained in this paper.
Mr. CALDWELL. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. BURROWS. Certainly.
Mr. CALDWELL. That paper may be correct as to what the record in the Pension Office shows. My proposition is that the additional evidence filed before the Committee on Invalid Pensions in connection with this bill shows a state of facts different from that in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. BURROWS. That does not controvert what I stated. I did not undertake to state what was the additional evidence filed before the Committee on Invalid Pensions. I stated that this paper shows that this soldier was a pensioner and died November 24, 1864. Is not that true?

Mr. CALDWELL. I believe that is true.

Mr. BURROWS. The mother filed a declaration for a pension March 21, 1877, nearly thirteen years afterward. Is there any question about that?

Mr. CALDWELL. I do not now recollect when she filed her application.

Mr. BURROWS. It is said that this soldier, eighteen months after he left the service, fell from a steamer and was drowned. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Caldwell] to say that is the fact, and that he is satisfied from an examination of the evidence filed before the committee that the man fell from the steamer while in a coughing spasm. There is no evidence showing the circumstances under which he was drowned. Now, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky what circumstances were laid before the committee as to the fact of his drowning, in addition to those before the Pension Office?

Mr. CALDWELL. I will state as nearly as I can now recollect. I do not object to any gentleman interrogating me. But when I have come into this House with a report over my signature, stating that the facts as shown by the proof in the record in a particular case are as they are set forth in the report, I think that ought to satisfy any gentleman on this floor who is not more than my peer.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no occasion for any feeling about the matter

Mr. CALDWELL. Not at all. I was only stating what I thought about this manner of interrogation.

Mr. BURROWS. I understood the gentleman to say that there was additional evidence filed before the Committee on Invalid Pensions. Mr. CALDWELL. Yes, sir.
Mr. BURROWS. Was additional evidence filed before the committee in regard to the circumstances attending the drowning of this man.

Mr. CALDWELL. I cannot now state definitely. I wish to say in justice to myself and to other members of the committee that I exjustice to myself and to other members of the committee that I examined during the Christmas holidays, now four months ago, the first cases which were assigned to me and which were reported to this House. In reporting those cases I stated the facts as they then appeared to me. I cannot now possibly go back in my mind, after having investigated a large number of these cases, and state the exact facts in any particular case, but must rely upon the reports as I find them. I would say, however, upon that subject that according to my recollection and the impression made upon me by the entire evidence this man after receiving the wound, was subject to fits of compling and man, after receiving the wound, was subject to fits of coughing and fainting; that on account of those coughing spells he was advised (I do not remember by whom) that he had but a short time to live.

Mr. CARLISLE. By his physician.
Mr. BURROWS. There is no question about that.
Mr. CALDWELL. My colleague says that he was thus advised by his physician. Under these circumstances, according to my recollec-tion, this man, being subject whenever he had one of these coughing spells to a fainting fit, went on board this boat, and the presumption with me was that in one of these fits of coughing or fainting spells he fell overboard; and I take it for granted that unless he had been wasted by disease he would not have been drowned under such circumstances.

Mr. BURROWS. Now the gentleman from Kentucky has not answered my question, but says that he is unable to state what was the evidence upon that point. Hence I am justified in repeating what the Pension Office discloses, that there is no evidence showing the circumstances under which this man was drowned. Further, there is no evidence showing the dependence of the mother, nor that her husband was at the time physically unable to provide for her support.

Mr. CARLISLE. The gentleman will allow me to say that the evidence shows the husband to have been an habitual drunkard, who had absolutely deserted his family, and did nothing whatever for their support, while this young man did contribute all the time to the maintenance of his mother.

Mr. BURROWS. The report does not disclose that fact.
Mr. CARLISLE. Yes; the report states it.
Mr. BURROWS. I have made this statement in the utmost good faith, without any feeling toward this soldier, and without expecting at all to arouse my friend from Wisconsin, [Mr. HAZELTON.] I claim to be as much a friend of the soldier as he is; but I have made this statement because I did not think this claim ought to pass. have nothing to take back from the statement and nothing further to

Mr. CALDWELL. I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Burrows] that I have no earthly objection to the Commissioner of Pensions giving to any gentleman in this House extracts from the records which will enable him to criticise any report that I may make. But as the Commissioner manifestly does thus furnish the view of extractions to record with the view of extracting the same parameters with the view of extracting the information to various gentlemen here with the view of attacking the reports of the committee, I want to say through this RECORD to him, not to my friend, that two months ago I called on the Commissioner, not to my friend, that two months ago I called on the Commissioner, as a member of the committee, to give me some information in reference to a bill pending before the committee now, a bill proposing to strike out a section of the Revised Statutes and place the officers and private soldiers of this country upon an equal footing so far as pensions are concerned. I asked from the Pension Office information as to the number of officers upon the roll, with the amount of money and the number of private and the number of private and the property of the prope paid them, and the number of privates upon the roll, with the amount of money paid them. For two long months I waited for this inforof money paid them. For two long months I waited for this information from that office. Ten days ago I asked for it again and have never received it. Now, will my friend from Michigan, when he is next conferring with the Pension Office, deliver my compliments and ask the Commissioner to send me that information? for I have asked for it myself respectfully twice already without success, and need it for the purpose of doing justice to the private soldiers of the country and giving them equal privileges under the law with their officers.

Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. Chairman, although this bill was introduced by myself. I know nothing whatever personally concerning the par-by myself, I know nothing whatever personally concerning the par-ties. In fact, I believe that the applicant for this pension resides in the State of Ohio. I know that she did reside there at one time, and my impression is that she still resides there. But at the solicitation of friends and acquaintances of the parties, who reside in my congressional district, I introduced the bill; and having done so, I thought it my duty to examine the testimony produced before the Committee on Invalid Pensions in regard to it.

I am not able to add anything, I believe, to the statement made by my colleague [Mr. Caldwell] upon this subject, except to say that there was before the committee sworn testimony that the father of this young man, the husband of the claimant, was an habitual drunkard; that he had deserted his family, and contributed nothing what-ever toward their support; that the young man during the time he was in the Army was in the constant habit of making remittances of a portion of his pay to his mother for her maintenance; and that afterward, while he was a pensioner upon the Government, he contributed a part of his pension to her support.

It is true that there was no testimony before the committee to show the exact circumstances under which he lost his life, because, so far as is known, no one actually saw him when he fell overboard from the steamboat. But the evidence shows that the young man was grad-ually dying from the results of his wound, which had affected his lungs; that he was unable from the time of receiving the wound to perform any labor except some very light employment as a sort of clerk or book-keeper about a livery stable at a very small compensation. He was finally advised by his physician, whose testimony is on file among the papers, that he had but a short time to live, and thereupon he started to go from the city of Newport, in the State of Kentucky, to the city of Portsmouth, in the State of Ohio, to be with his friends, and while on that journey he fell from the steamboat and lost his life. While it is true there is no direct testimony as to the precise circumstances under which he lost his life, yet it is known to all the young man's friends he was sober and steady. It was known to all of them he was subject to these occasional attacks of dizziness and coughing and fits, and the inference, it seemed to me, was not an unreasonable one under the circumstances, that, in one of those fits, in his weak and enfeebled condition, he fell overboard and was drowned.

If the pension is to be denied to his mother on the ground that his death was not the direct and immediate result of the wound, all right; for I am free to say there is no testimony of death from the direct and immediate result of the wound, and the Commissioner of Pensions was doubtless correct under the law.

Mr. BREWER. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. BREWER. From the investigation you gave the case, did you come to the conclusion the young man died from the effect of the wound or disease contracted in the service?

Mr. CARLISLE. I did not come to the conclusion that the wound was the immediate and direct cause of his death.

Mr. BREWER. Did you come to the conclusion he fell overboard because of the wound or disease contracted in the service?

Mr. CARLISLE. My conclusion was this: that if it had not been for the wound and the enfeebled condition in which it left the young man he would not have lost his life in the manner he did, or at the time he did; and that is all the Committee on Pensions say in this retime he did; and that is all the Committee on Pensions say in this report. The inference is a fair and reasonable one.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. How did you come to the conclusion he would not have been drowned except for the wound, if you did not know the circumstances under which he was drowned?

Mr. CARLISLE. That is a difficult question to answer, Mr. Chairman, and perhaps the gentleman will smile when I give the answer, but it is absolutely certain from the testimony in this case, or at least it is reasonable certain that if it had not been for the wound the young it is reasonably certain that if it had not been for the wound the young man would not have been aboard the boat at all. He was advised by his physician he had but a short time to live, and thereupon, as I said his physician he had but a short time to live, and thereupon, as I said awhile ago, he started to go to his friends in order, I suppose, that he might have their care and attention during his last days, and while on the boat making this trip that accident occurred.

On another point, if this House has established a rule, about which I profess myself ignorant, that they will not grant arrearages of pension in such a case as this, well and good; let this application share the same fate as the others; but if the House has not established that rule, it seems to me this is a case where arrearages ought to be granted as well as others.

that rule, it seems to me this is a case where arrearages ought to be granted as well as others.

Mr. BURROWS. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CARLISLE. Certainly.

Mr. BURROWS. How was this mother provided for from the time of the soldier's death in 1864, until 1877, thirteen years afterward, being the date at which she applied as a dependent mother?

Mr. CARLISLE. I think the testimony, according to my recollection on that subject, is about this: that the old lady is herself a hardworking woman, takes in washing, and does such work as a woman in her station of life would do, and she has two daughters who also work out for wages, and that among them they have contrived in some way to live during this time. some way to live during this time.

Mr. WARNER. In order to make the bill uniform with all the others which have passed, I move to strike out after the word "infantry," in the eighth line, these words:

To take effect on and after the 24th day of November, 1864, the day of her said son's death, as appears from evidence on file in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. CARLISLE. At what rate?
Mr. WARNER. That leaves it subject to the pension laws, which in case of death provide for $8 a month.

Mr. WARNER's amendment was adopted; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT S. GOODALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 624)

The next business on the Private Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 624) granting a pension to Robert S. Goodall; reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions with an amendment.

The bill, which was read, authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Robert S. Goodall, late first-class pilot in the United States Navy, in the Mississippi squadron, on the pension-roll, at the rate of $- a month during his natural life; said pension to commence at the date of the discharge of said Goodall from the service of the United States.

The approximate of the committee was to fill the blank with 6 for

The amendment of the committee was to fill the blank with "fifteen;" so it will read "$15 a month."

The report was read, as follows:

The report was read, as follows:

Captain Robert S. Goodall entered the military service of the United States at Louisville, Kentacky, on the 17th of August, 1863, as first-class pilot on the United States gunboat Champion No. 4, and was honorably discharged on the 17th day of May, 1864.

The testimony shows that the military authorities needed the services of first-class pilots who were familiar with the navigation of the western waters.

Captain Z. M. Sherley, of Louisville, Kentucky, who had large experience in such matters, and in whose loyalty and integrity there was full reliance, was requested by the Government to secure suitable men for this service.

Upon Captain Sherley's recommendation the petitioner was enlisted and assigned to duty, by order of Admiral Porter, on the gunboat Champion No. 4, then with the Mississippi squadron.

For several years prior to his enlistment Captain Goodall was in the employ of Captain Sherley, who testifies that at the time he (Goodall) entered the service of the United States, he was a "stout, active man, in good health and physical condition, and in full possession of his mental and physical powers." Dr. Henry Chenoweth, who had been his family physician for ten years, Dr. Lewis Rogers, and Dr. John Thurston, who had known him for years, all of whom are of the highest personal and professional standing, confirm Captain Sherley's statement, that prior to his enlistment Captain Goodall's "health was unimpaired, and that his haits were uniformly good and temperate."

Captain Goodall's "health was unimpaired, and that his haits were uniformly good and temperate."

Captain Goodall discharged his duty as an officer promptly, faithfully, and efficiently until the 20th day of February, 1864, when he contracted acute pleurisy. His disease was brought on by continued exposure in an iron-casemated pilot-house, without fire or sufficient shelter, and resulted in his permanent disability.

The application of the petitioner failed at the Pension Bureau because of an entry upon the log-book or journal of practice of the Champion, dated February 28, 1864, charging him with intemperance. This entry was made by one Vail, an assistant surgeon on the gumboat, and upon it alone Captain Goodall's application was rejected. Upon appeal Mr. Delano, then Secretary of the Interior, affirmed the Commissioner's decisions in these words: "This "—referring to the above entry—" is record evidence, and while it remains unaltered is fatal to the allowance of the claim."

In the opinion of your committee, this position is untenable, both in law and in morals.

If such a record capnot under any circumstances he attacked the good name.

entry—"is record evidence, and while it remains unaltered is fatal to the allowance of the claim."

In the opinion of your committee, this position is untenable, both in law and in morals.

If such a record cannot, under any circumstances, be attacked, the good name and hard-carned pensions of our soldiers and sailors would be placed absolutely within the power of the surgeon or assistant surgeon in charge. In the exigencies of a great war incompetent and disreputable men often fill such positions. However malicious the motive, however false the fact, however unjust the result, the record of the surgeon, even if corrupt and incompetent, must, under this decision, irrevocably stand, and the slandered and injured object of his malice or ignorance must be left absolutely without redress.

The case under consideration illustrates the hardship and injustice of accepting such entries as conclusive in every instance. The uncontradicted testimony of eight witnesses, four of whom were associate officers on board the gunboat, proves that the entry made by this assistant surgeon was both false and malicious.

Ensign Merwin Allen testifies:

"During Captain Goodall's term of service I was doing duty on the Champion as watch officer, and the greater portion of the time as executive officer. Captain G.'s ill-health and disability were occasioned in the lime of his duty as first-class pilot. I further state I believe Assistant Surgeon Vall made the report of his (Goodall's) sickness through malice and ill-disposition toward Goodall, caused by some private difficulty between them, and that said Vall continued to be inimical to Goodall until the time of his G.'s) departure from the vessel."

Pilot W. S. Henthorn swears:

"I was over two years on the Champion, and know something of the dangers and exposures that it was necessary to undergo while under way. We had to remain six hours within an iron-casemated pilot-bruse, without fire, with scarcely any protection from rain or cold. Captain Goodall was a very efficient pilot, and

Mr. WARNER. I move to strike out the amount fixed in the amendment, namely, $15 per month, and insert:

At a rate proportionate to his disabilities, to be fixed at the Pension Office.

Mr. CALDWELL. I have no objection to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside, to be reported favorably to the House

Mr. CALDWELL. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Stevenson reported that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, having had under consideration the Private Calendar, had directed him to report sundry bills with favorable recommendations, some with and some without amendment.

The SPEAKER. There are several bills remaining on the Calendar as unfinished business since the last sitting of the Committee of the Whole, which will first be disposed of.

PRIVATE BILLS PASSED.

The following bills without amendment, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar with favorable recommendations, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

The bill (H. R. No. 2468) granting a pension to Henry H. Fisher. Mr. COFFROTH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that he make the motion to reconsider on all the bills after they shall have been disposed of.

The bill (H. R. No. 1542) for the relief of Charles Clinton, of New Orleans, late assistant treasurer at New Orleans, Louisiana; The bill (H. R. No. 3021) granting a pension to Eliza M. Frick;

The bill (H. R. No. 271) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Mary

B. Dallas;
The bill (H. R. No. 2643) granting a pension to Mary Meighan;
The bill (H. R. No. 2474) to increase the pension of Thomas Riley;
The bill (H. R. No. 4264) to authorize the payment of $66.09 to Judith Brown, one-seventh of the pension of Margaret Duncan; and
The bill (H. R. No. 746) for the relief of Anna E. Hallowell.
The following bills, with amendments, reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar with favorable recommendations, were severally considered the amendments agreed to and the dations, were severally considered, the amendments agreed to, and the bills, as amended, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

passed:
The bill (H. R. No. 3099) granting a pension to Caroline Boll;
The bill (H. R. No. 3098) granting a pension to Jacob Ginder;
The bill (H. R. No. 3262) granting a pension to Harry E. Williams;
The bill (H. R. No. 3263) granting a pension to Margaret E. West;
The bill (H. R. No. 3292) granting a pension to Sallie M. Buchanan, widow of General Robert C. Buchanan; and
The bill (H. R. No. 863) granting a pension to George W. Wood-

ADVERSE REPORT.

The next bill reported from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 864) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Frances M. Wilkinson, reported adversely.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I move that the report of the Committee of the Whole be non-concurred in.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask my colleague on the committee to allow this bill to be temporarily passed over until we get through with the bills favorably reported.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Very well, I will consent to that.

L. MADISON DAY.

The next bill reported favorably from the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day

Mr. O'CONNOR. On that I demand the previous question.
Mr. COFFROTH. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to allow that bill to be laid aside for a moment until we get through with the pension cases in order that I can move to reconsider the action of the House upon them all.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I prefer that the vote should be taken upon it now, and demand the previous question upon the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. PHILIPS. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the stand over till we finish the pension bills which have been reported.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I have no objection to that.

Mr. COFFROTH. That is what I rose to ask.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that this bill may be laid aside, occupying its present attitude before the House, until the remaining pension bills reported this morning from the Committee of the Whole House shall be acted on.

Mr. CONGER. Is there not an order of the House for an evening session to-night?

The SPEAKER. That order will be read. It will be seen its phrase-The SPEAKER. That order will be read. It will be seen its phrase-ology is such that the House can adjourn notwithstanding that order. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be evening sessions of this House on Wednesday and Friday of each week, commencing on Wednesday, April 21, 1880, which sessions shall be devoted exclusively to the consideration in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union of House bill No. 5541, to establish a municipal code for the District of Columbia, and shall continue till the consideration of said bill is concluded.

The SPEAKER. It will be observed there is neither a time fixed The SPEAKER. It will be observed there is neither a time fixed for the taking of the recess nor a time fixed when the evening session shall begin. Hence there is required on each of the days indicated a motion for a recess. But a motion for a recess is hardly in order without a quorum. It might be made by unanimous consent. This bill, if an adjournment takes place, will go over till to-morrow morning, because it has the previous question operating upon it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Philips] who seems to have taken the lead on the other side with reference to this bill to allow me to make a proposition in the interest of harmony.

this bill to allow me to make a proposition in the interest of harmony. I ask that the bill be laid aside to be taken up to-morrow after the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The bill comes up after the reading of the Journal to-morrow under the operation of the rules.

Mr. COFFROTH. I ask unanimous consent to move to reconsider the votes by which the several bills that have been acted upon were passed, and to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order in the absence of a quorum. The gentleman can do that to-morrow.

Mr. PAGE. If the House now adjourns will the bill in charge of the gentleman from South Carolina come up as unfinished business The SPEAKER. It will; but there will have to be a new roll-call

Mr. O'CONNOR. I move that the House do now adjourn.
Mr. HENKLE. I hope the gentleman will not press that motion but will allow a recess to be taken.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT HUNTSVILLE, ALABAMA.

Mr. LOWE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6035) to provide for the construction of a public building at the city of Huntsville, Alabama; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

ARIZONA PRIVATE LAND CLAIM.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a protest against the confirmation of the Arizona private land claim of San Rafael del Valle; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

LIGHT-HOUSE AND FOG-SIGNAL AT TRINITY SHOALS

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to an appropriation for the continua-tion of the work on the light-house and fog-signal at Trinity Shoals; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Many Members. Regular order!
The SPEAKER. The regular order is on the motion to adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty-seven minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SATURDAY, May 1, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

UNIVERSITY OF NOTRE DAME DU LAC OF INDIANA.

Mr. CALKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 776) refunding to the University of Notre Dame du Lac, of Saint Joseph County, in the State of Indiana, the sum of $2,334.07, that being the amount paid on certain imported articles, &c., and that it be considered and passed by the House at this time.

Mr. FINLEY. Has that bill been considered by any committee?

Mr. CALKINS. It has been twice considered by the Committee on Claims of this House and favorable property.

Claims of this House and favorably reported.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not object. The bill was read, as follows:

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the sum of $2,334.07 be, and the same hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, as and for a repayment to the University of Notre Dame du Lao for moneys paid by it as duty on the following articles, namely: For impost duties on twenty-two cases of paintings on glass, per steamer Ville de Paris, of date December 14, 1874, at the rate of 40 per cent. ad valorem, amounting to the sum of $731.80; also on a church lamp, March 9, 1875, paid as impost duty, the sum of $731.80; also on twenty-one cases of paintings on glass, received per steamer France, of date April 1, 1876, upon which was paid an impost duty of 40 per cent. ad valorem tax, amounting to the sum of $552.88, amounting to the total sum of $2,334.07.

Sec. 2. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay the said sum of money to the said university upon the execution and delivery to him by the president thereof of proper receipts therefor.

Mr. COX. I would like to inquire of my friend from Indiana [Mr. CALKINS] what is the tax on these paintings on glass?

Mr. CALKINS. The tax is 40 per cent. ad valorem.

Mr. COX. Forty per cent.? Bless my soul! I have no objection to this bill, as it is a free-trade bill.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, and the same was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CALKINS moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the

The latter motion was agreed to.

UTE RESERVATION, COLORADO.

Mr. SCALES, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (S. No. 1509) to accept and ratify an agreement submitted by the confederated bands of Ute Indians in Colorado for the sale of their reservation in said State, and for other purposes, and to make the necessary appropriations for carrying out the same; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. SCALES. I also ask consent that the testimony taken by the Committee on Indian Affairs in connection with this subject be printed.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

RETURNS OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. PRICE. I ask unanimous consent to take from the House Calendar for consideration at this time the bill (H. R. No. 4572) defining the verification of returns of national banks. The bill is reported with amendments from the Committee on Banking and Currency. It is a very short bill, and there is a very short report accompanying it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the eath or affirmation required by section 5311 of the Revised Statutes, verifying the returns made by national banks to the Comptroller of the Currency, when taken before a notary public properly authorized and commissioned by the State in which such notary resides and the bank is located, shall be a sufficient verification as contemplated by said section 5211.

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the gentleman from Iowa state the present law which this bill proposes to change.

Mr. PRICE. The present law provides simply that these returns shall be verified before an officer, without saying what officer. The question has been raised in one of the United States courts whether resident in the court of the United States courts whether the court of the United States c verification before a notary public is sufficient or not. This bill is designed simply to settle that question.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. Has it not been the custom of the banks to have these affidavits verified before notaries?

Mr. PRICE. Always, since the organization of the national banks. The question was never raised until within the last three months.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendments reported by the committee.

The amendments were read, as follows:

In line 8, after the word "located," insert "or any other officer having an official seal authorized in such State to administer oaths."

Add to the bill the following:

Provided, That the officer administering the oath is not an officer of the bank.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

SUFFERERS BY CYCLONE AT MACON, MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. MONEY, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) for the relief of sufferers by the cyclone at Macon, Mississippi; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. MONEY. I ask unanimous consent to have this resolution considered and passed now.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and empowered to send four thousand rations to Macon, Mississippi, for the use of the sufferers made destitute by the cyclone of April 25.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TRAINING-SCHOOL FOR INDIAN YOUTH.

Mr. POUND. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 1735) to increase educational privileges and establish additional industrial training-schools for the benefit of youth belonging to such nomadic Indian tribes as have educational treaty claims upon the United States be made a special order for May 13, immediately after ornted States be made a special order for May 13, immediately after the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Chair suggests that the order be made subject to the priority of appropriation bills.

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. And revenue bills.

Mr. POUND. All right.

The SPEAKER. Subject to these reservations, the order will be made if there he re objection. made if there be no objection.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

EXPENSES OF ISSUING CURRENCY.

Mr. BUCKNER, from the Committee on Banking and Currency, reported back adversely the following resolution; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, respectfully requested to cause to be furnished to this House at his earliest convenience an account showing the following:

First. The amount of United States bonds and the interest they bore, secured by the national banks and held by the Treasury as security for circulation, issued to said banks in each year, from 1863 until 1880, with the aggregate of said interest paid by the Government between said periods.

Second. The amount of United States deposits held by national banks, and the amount of bonds of the United States secured by said banks and held by the Treasnry to secure said deposits, with the rate of interest said bonds have borne, and the amount of interest paid thereon in each year, from 1863 until 1880, with the aggregate of said payments.

Third. The amount of money paid by the United States each year, from 1863 until 1880, for salaries of officers, clerks, and employés of all kinds for and connected with national banks, and the aggregate thereof for said term.

Fourth. The amount of money paid by the United States for plates, engraving, paper, printing, signing, and transmitting circulation to national banks each year, from 1863 until 1880, and the aggregate of said payments in said term.

Fifth. Any and all other payments of money made by the United States for or on account of national banks not included in the foregoing specifications, if any ere be, each year, from 1863 until 1880, with the aggregate thereof.

Sixth. That all of said payments so made by the United States for, on account of, or connected with national banks, during said term, be footed up, that the aggregate of all said payments may appear to the credit of the United States and to the debit of said banks.

That said account also contain the following to the credit of said banks:

First. The amount of all taxes paid by the national banks to the United States upon their circulation each year from 1863 until 1880, and the aggregate thereof for all the years.

Second. The amount of taxes collected from and paid by national banks upon deposits, and for stamps not required to be paid by State banks and bankers, if any there be, but not including any tax required to be paid by State banks, the same as national banks, each year from 1863 until 1880, with the aggregate of said payments if any were made.

Third. All money paid by national banks upon their capital not invested in United States bonds, to the United States each year from 1863 until 1880, with the aggregate thereof, not including, however, any such tax required to be paid by State banks and private bankers, as well as national banks.

aggregate thereof.

Fifth. That a balance be struck, showing the amount due the Government for money paid to and for the national banks up to 1880, or the amount due said national banks, as the ease may be, and that said account be duly signed by the proper officer of the Government.

cer of the Government.

Also, that said account state all the expenses incurred by the United States for the issue of legal-tender Treasury notes of the Government called greenbacks, each year from 1862 until 1880, and the aggregate expenses during that time, and that the difference, if any, between the cost of national-bank notes and of legal-tender Treasury notes be made to appear in said account.

SUBSIDIARY SILVER COIN IN THE MAILS.

Mr. WARNER. By direction of the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar for immediate consideration and passage the joint resolu-tion (H. R. No. 275) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to transmit subsidiary silver coin through the mails. This is a resolu-tion of great public importance, and is presented at the suggestion of the Treasurer, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Treas-

Mr. DUNNELL. Let the resolution be read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be sent from the Treasury, or any sub-treasury of the United States, through the mails, at the risk of the applicant, free of charge, in registered packages, not exceeding in weight the maximum now allowed by law for third-class mail-matter, subsidiary silver coin, in exchange for lawful money.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this resolution?

Mr. GILLETTE. I object.
Mr. WARNER. I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GILLETTE] will withdraw his objection and let me make a statement.
The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

PRINTING IN A PATENT CASE.

Mr. VANCE, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Patents the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved. That the Committee on Patents be, and are hereby, authorized to print any papers in the case of the Voelter paper-pulp patent, now being examined into by the committee, which the committee may desire to facilitate their inquiries.

MARINE HOSPITAL, MEMPHIS, TENNESSEE.

On motion of Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee, by unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 2253) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee, was taken from the Speaker's table, and the amendment of the Senate thereto was read and concurred in, as follows:

Add to the bill the following:
And the cost of the site and the erection of the building shall in no event exceed the sum hereby appropriated.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar for present consideration House bill No. 3948 Mr. McMAHON. I call for the regular order.

L. MADISON DAY.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the unfinished business-the bill coming over from yesterday, a bill (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day—on which the previous question was prevailing.

Mr. FINLEY. I raise the question whether the previous question had been ordered on the passage of the bill, or whether it had exhausted itself before that question was reached.

The SPEAKER. The impression of the Chair is that the previous question was ordered on the final passage of the bill.

question was ordered on the final passage of the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. It does not so appear from the reading of the minutes

The SPEAKER. That does not matter, however, for it is unfinished business nevertheless, if the previous question prevailed on final

Mr. FINLEY. I make the point of order that the previous question was not pending on the passage of the bill, having been exhausted on the third reading and engrossment of the bill, and not having been demanded on the passage, and, therefore, this cannot come up as unfinished business.

Mr. HOUSE. It was ordered on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recollects the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Philips] demanded the yeas and nays, and the Chair supposed it was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. FINLEY. The yeas and nays were called on the passage of the bill, but the point I make is, that the previous question was not pendon the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was pending.

Mr. FINLEY. The Journal does not show it.

Mr. CARLISLE. I make this point, that if the main question was not ordered on the passage of the bill, this then is unfinished business. ness when that class of business comes up next Friday, and not this morning, as it is a private bill.

The SPEAKER. There was an understanding in the House, and the Chair declared that this question, having the previous question prevailing on it, would come over and be considered this morning immediately after the reading of the Journal.

Mr. O'CONNOR. It was so announced yesterday.

The SPEAKER. It was understood and announced yesterday, and the Chair will cause to be read what was said.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Page. If the House now adjourns will the bill in charge of the gentleman from South Carolina come up as unfinished business to morrow?

The Speaker. It will; but there will have to be a new roll-call of course.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would not have made that statement except it was based upon the belief the previous question had been called and the main question ordered on the passage of the bill. If the previous question had only been seconded and the main question ordered on the third reading and engrossment of the bill, then, as the gentleman from Kentucky suggests, it would go over, not until this morning, but until the next regular day when the same class of busi-morning, but the local regions and make the ness was up for consideration.

Mr. FINLEY. The only way we can know whether the previous question was pending or not is from the RECORD and Journal.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Here is the motion I made on page 31 of the $Mr.\ O'CONNOR.\ \ I$ prefer a vote to be taken on it now, and demand the previous question on the bill.

And when the question came up on the engrossment and third reading of the bill the Chair suggested to the gentleman from Missouri to call for the yeas and nays on the passage, and when that question was put on the passage of the bill the gentleman demanded the yeas and nave

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it was the intention of the gentleman to call the previous question on the passage of the bill.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Yes, sir; on the passage of the bill.
Mr. FINLEY. Allow me one moment. I desire now to make this point: that unless the previous question was pending on the passage of the bill it goes over as unfinished business to Friday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair stated before that such view was correct, if facts are as stated by the gentleman who has just spoken.

rect, if facts are as stated by the gentleman who has just spoken.

Mr. FINLEY. How can we know whether the previous question was pending on the passage of the bill, unless from the Journal?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thought the previous question was called by the gentleman on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BAYNE. And seconded.

Mr. FINLEY. The Journal does not show it. We cannot take the oral statement of gentlemen on the floor of the House. The Journal is the only means by which we can know that the previous question was called and seconded. Gentlemen around me say the previous question was exhausted on ordering the main question, and, unless the Journal shows the previous question was pending on the passage of the bill, I insist this does not come as unfinished business this morning. The gentleman told me he demanded the previous question on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read the third time, and after that there was nothing said about it. after that there was nothing said about it.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I distinctly rose and said "I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is correct. There was a colloquy between the gentleman from Missouri and the gentleman from South Carolina with that intent.

Mr. PHILIPS. The previous question was called by the gentleman from South Carolina before the engrossment and third reading of the bill. That was a separate demand and it was not demanded on the final passage. My object, it is true, was to have a year-and-nay vote on the passage of this bill. After he had called the previous question the bill went upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. There was general consent it should be voted on this morning. The Chair heard no objection.

Mr. CONGER. Whatever the situation was about the previous question, the Chair stated distinctly, on inquiry, that after the reading of the Journal this question would come up and be voted on this morning. That understanding was acquiesced in.

And it should be voted on.

Mr. CONGER. There was no objection to that statement, and it was acquiesced in.
The SPEAKER. That was the understanding come to by the two gentlemen interested in the matter.

Mr. FINLEY. I ask to have that much of the Journal read. That Mr. FINLEY. I ask to have that much of the Journal read. That will settle the matter. The Journal will speak for itself.

The SPEAKER. The Journal will be read.

Mr. FINLEY. That must dispose of the question, for it has been approved this morning by the action of the House.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I submit, and I think the gentleman from Ohio will agree with me, that it was universally understood that this was operating under the previous question; and when the question was raised, after the vote was taken and it was ascertained that no quoraised, after the vote was taken and it was ascertained that no quorum was present, it was expressly stated by the Speaker, and no objection was made on the part of any member of the House, that this would be the first business in order this morning.

Mr. FINLEY. I beg to differ with the gentleman from South Carolina. That was not the universal understanding. I certainly did not so understand it, or I should have objected at the time.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Certainly there was no objection made at the time, and the vote was taken under the impression of source that the pre-and the vote was taken under the impression, of course, that the prewious question was operating.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from Missouri made the demand for the yeas and nays, it was understood to be upon the final passage of the bill, and there was no objection at that time, so far as the Chair understood, to the consideration of the bill as under the operation of the previous question.

Mr. BRAGG. Are we to be governed by what are said to be the proceedings of yesterday, or by what is recorded in the Journal?

The SPEAKER. If there was a unanimous understanding, the Chair thinks the House should be bound by it.

Mr. BRAGG. That may be; but it does not seem to have been a unanimous understanding, and I ask if the Journal does not control as to what the proceedings were when there is a question?

The SPEAKER. If there is a dispute, the Journal must settle it.

Mr. FINLEY. The Journal will decide the matter.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the Journal to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House then proceeded to the consideration of the bill of the House (H. R. No. 2798) for the relief of L. Madison Day, heretofore reported from the Committee of the Whole House with a favorable recommendation,
When,
Mr. O'CONNOR demanded the previous question; which was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the said bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was then put, Shall the bill pass? when there appeared—yeas 63, nays 66, not voting 163.
No quorum voted.
Mr. VAN VOORHIS moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. FINLEY. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that settles the question.
The SPEAKER. The Journal does not show the understanding.
The Record does show that there was an understanding. The gentleman from Ohio states, however, that there was not an understanding or that he would have objected. The Chair therefore thinks that this bill will go over until Friday next, when it will come up as unfinished business of the class of business considered on Fridays.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. McMAHON. I demand the regular order.
The SPEAKER. The regular order is the morning hour.
Mr. CARLISLE. I move to dispense with the morning hour in order to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4812) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will not make that motion now. There are a great many gentlemen absent from the House who would like to be here and who ought to be here when this bill is to be considered.

Mr. CARLISLE. I should like very much to accommodate the gentleman from Michigan-

Mr. CARLISLE. I only wish to answer the request of the gentle-

The gentleman knows that it is impossible for me to compel gentlemen to attend the sessions of the House; and if I have to let this bill go over for that reason it is impossible to see when it can be disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. There are several gentlemen who are anxious to be present when this bill is considered who supposed there would be a morning hour and went down to see an experiment made with some fire-extinguishing apparatus in the neighborhood of the Capitol for a few minutes. I would like them to be present when the bill is considered. They will probably be here by the time the morning hour has expired.

Mr. CARLISLE. I will say to the gentleman from Michigan that there is perhaps still considerable discussion in the Committee of the Whole on this bill, and perhaps by the time we get into the House the gentlemen will be here. There are gentlemen around me who have bills which it is important should be considered in the Committee of the Whole and who will make the motion to go intercommittee. tee of the Whole and who will make the motion to go into committee on their bills if I withdraw it in this case.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to dispense with the morning hour.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 42.

Mr. CONGER. I call for the yeas and nays. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] I have asked that this should go over until after the morning hour until we can get a fuller House; and I think as it is a matter that will take $2,000,000 out of the Treasury, it has a right to be considered by a full House.

The yeas and pays were ordered.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GARFIELD. I suggest that by unanimous consent we take this matter up after the morning hour shall have been disposed of, and by that means do away with the necessity for calling the roll

Mr. CARLISLE. The difficulty seems to be that the gentleman from Michigan is unwilling to go on until the House is full. Now, nobody can compel the attendance of those members who do not choose to be here; but if the gentleman from Michigan says that he will make no objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection to the consideration of the objection to the consideration of the objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning house the objection of the objection to the consideration of the objection to the consideration of the objection to the objection to the objection to the objection to the objection the objection that the objection that the objection the objection that the objection th will make no objection to the consideration of this bill after the morning hour, then I am willing that it should go over.

Mr. CONGER. I have already stated to the gentleman that I was willing for that. I do not care to repeat my assertions.

Mr. CARLISLE. I did not understand the gentleman as being willing that this should go on immediately after the morning hour, but rather as asking a further delay on the ground that other members would probably be here after the morning hour. That was my bers would probably be here after the morning hour. That was my understanding, and not that he would not further object to the consideration of this bill after the morning hour.

Mr. CONGER. I do not think that I have made any statement that would warrant that conclusion of the gentleman. I have made no dilatory motion at all. After the morning hour I shall not object to permit this bill to be considered.

Mr. BUCKNER. What is proposed to be done in the morning hour this morning? We have called the committees over and over again without response.

without response

Mr. CARLISLE. I withdraw the motion to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent the order for the yeas and nays is vacated and the motion to dispense with the morning hour is withdrawn. The morning hour begins at eight minutes to one o'clock.

LIEUTENANT FRANK P. GROSS.

Mr. SPARKS. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs to report back the bill (H. R. No. 1939) for the relief of Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, and to move that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BROWNE. I desire to raise the question of consideration.
The SPEAKER. As to what subject f mittee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. This is a report from a committee.

Mr. BROWNE. I understand the Committee on Military Affairs to report this bill back and ask its reference to the Committee on Claims on the assumption that the Committee on Military Affairs has not jurisdiction of the bill under the rule.

The SPEAKER. That is the action of the Military Affairs Committee, its judgment being that the bill has been referred to that committee over which it has no jurisdiction under the rule.

Mr. BROWNE. That is what I understand. Now, may I not ask the House or the Chair whether the Committee on Military Affairs in that indement is correct?

that judgment is correct?

The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

Mr. SPARKS. The gentleman from Indiana is a member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and wants to raise the question of consideration whether or not the bill should remain with that com-

The SPEAKER. The majority of the committee have the right, the Chair thinks, under the rule, to report the bill back, and to send it where, in their judgment, it belongs.

Mr. BROWNE. Suppose the Committee on Claims should return the bill to the House and say it belongs to the Committee on Military Affairs, what becomes of it then?

The SPEAKER. When the Committee on Claims do that the Chair will express his opinion thereon.

Mr. BROWNE. I ask the Chair to express an opinion now to what committee the bill belongs.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read clauses 10 and 27 of Rule XI, as follows:

All proposed legislation shall be referred to the committees named in the preceding rule as follows, to wit: subjects relating—
To the military establishment and the public defense, other than the appropriations for its support—to the Committee on Military Affairs.
To private and domestic claims and demands, other than war claims against the United States—to the Committee on Claims.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also directs to be read clause 2 of Rule

XIII. The Clerk read as follows:

2. The question of reference of any proposition, other than that reported from a committee, shall be decided without debate, in the following order, viz: a standing committee, a select committee; but the reference of a proposition reported by a committee, when demanded, shall be decided according to its character, without debate, in the following order, viz: House Calendar, Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Committee of the Whole House, a standing committee, a select committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the Committee on Military Affairs decide that they will not consider this bill, and that, in their opinion, it belongs to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SPARKS. That is the report I have made from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BROWNE. That is the opinion of the majority of the committee I want to state the position of this matter. Mr. SPARKS. Mr. SPARKS. I want to state the position of this matter. There are members of that committee, of whom the gentleman from Indiana is one, who consider that this bill really belongs to the Military Committee. That committee is now overwhelmed with claims like this, and the majority of the committee think it belongs to the Committee on Claims. Hence my report to the House on behalf of the committee that it should go there. But the gentleman from Indiana, a member of the committee ber of the committee, believes it is properly in the Committee on Military Affairs. There is no feeling at all about it. We are in perfect harmony in desiring the sense of the House or of the Chair on this question. The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 1939) for the relief of Lieutenant Frank P. Gross.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to First Lieutenant Frank P. Gross, United States Army, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000; the same to be in full for all losses sustained by him in the burning of his quarters at Fort Clark, Texas, on or about the 19th of April, A. D. 1869.

Mr. BROWNE. The Chair will understand the question is not at all as to the propriety of allowing the claim. It is purely a question what committee of the House has jurisdiction of the subject.

The SPEAKER. The practice heretofore under the old rules was to send the claims of officers who have suffered loss while on duty to the Committee on Military Affairs.

the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I make the point of order that the Committee on Military Affairs should under the rule send the bill to the Committee on Claims through the petition-box. I understand that is the course prescribed by the new rules when a committee dethat is the course prescribed by the new rules when a committee decides it has not jurisdiction over a bill.

The SPEAKER. That does not apply to bills. The gentleman from Illinois refers to a rule which applies to petitions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illinois. I thought it applied also to bills. The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

The Clerk read clause 2 of Rule XXII, as follows:

Any petition or memorial excluded under this rule shall be returned to the member from whom it was received; and petitions which have been inappropriately referred may by direction of the committee having possession of the same, be properly referred in the manner originally presented.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will observe that this rule relates to petitions. The Chair thinks the House had better determine the question to which committee the claim of an Army officer or of a soldier relating to the loss of property when on duty should cer or of a soldier relating to the loss of property when on duty should go, so as to govern the practice hereafter in that respect.

Mr. BROWNE. I wish to say it is not my purpose to consume the time of the House. But this is an exceedingly important question, and the Committee on Military Affairs, as has been stated by the chairman, have quite a large number of bills of this character. I am as anxious as the chairman and the majority of the committee to get clear of the consideration of these bills if we may do so under the rule. But I am of opinion that they belong under the rule to that rule. But I am of opinion that they belong under the rule to that committee. If I am correct in that view, when these bills are sent to the Committee on Claims they will probably conclude that they have not jurisdiction, and will return them to the House to be sent again to the Committee on Military Affairs. Without arguing the question now for a single moment, it seems clear to me that claims of this class can be considered under the rule only by the Committee on Military outside of the pay of an officer.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, however, thinks that this is a claim

Mr. BROWNE. Allow me to make a single statement in regard to this bill, in order that the House may understand what it is: I shall be exceedingly brief. An officer of the regular Army is assigned over his protest to certain quarters that are known to be of a dangerous character. By reason of his subordination to his superior he is compelled to occupy those quarters. He did occupy them, and while in that occupation the quarters took fire accidentally—at least there is no circumstance showing that it was from any fault or negligence on his part—and his personal apparel and property were consumed. He applies to Congress for relief. I do not say that under the circumstances he is entitled to it. But the bill is presented here for reference. Now, the question certainly is one to be determined by the precedents that have been established, and by the relations of the soldier to the Army under the military law, to be considered with reference to the military law of the United States. Now, I cannot considered to the soldier to the account of the United States. ceive of any other committee to which it may be properly sent except the Committee on Military Affairs. If it may not be considered by that committee of anot know where it should go. It cannot be considered by the Committee on War Claims, because that committee has no jurisdiction at all of that class of claims. It does not properly belong to the Committee on Claims, because that committee considers simply claims between citizens and the Government.

Now, this is a claim growing out of the military service, a claim of an officer in the military service against the Government because of the negligence or fault of the Government, as he insists, in assigning him quarters that are unsafe and compelling him to occupy those quarters, because as an officer of the Army he is required to obey the command of his superior officer. That is all there is of it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would call attention to clauses 27 and

The SPEAKER. The Chair would call attention to clauses 27 and 28 of Rule XI, defining the powers and duties of committees:
Clause 27 directs the reference of "subjects relating to private and domestic claims and demands other than war claims against the United States to the Committee on Claims."
Clause 28 directs the reference of "subjects relating to claims arising from any war in which the United States has been engaged to the Committee on War Claims."
The Chair think that all plains and demands against the United other of these committee

Mr. BRAGG. I would like to make a suggestion on this question, dislike to differ with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs upon this question, but it does seem to me that the Commit tee on Military Affairs is the proper committee to consider this claim; and I will briefly state why.

There is conferred by the rule upon the Committee on Military Affairs jurisdiction of all matters relating to the organization of the fairs jurisdiction of all matters relating to the organization of the Army, and consequently of all matters growing out of that organization, all claims which may arise as an incident to that organization. Now, what does this claim involve? It involves the laws governing the Army, whether they be the written law of the Army or the common law which has grown out of the customs and practices of the Army; that is, the law established by precedents.

It is supposed that the Committee on Claims consider that class of

It is supposed that the Committee on Claims consider that class of claims which rests upon contracts expressed or implied, in the nature of demands against the Government. Now, this is a claim, if it be a claim at all, growing out of the military organization. It requires an examination into the relations which the officer bears to the Government and which the Government bears to him; he having undertaken to perform for the Government his duty according to the Army regulations, and the Government having undertaken to perform its duty to him by protecting him under the Army regulations, according to the usages customs and practices of the Army which make ing to the usages, customs, and practices of the Army, which make the common law of the Army.

It therefore seems to me that the committee which has control and jurisdiction of the principal subject-matter should also have the control and jurisdiction of all the incidents growing out of that subject-matter, and upon which they depend.

My opinion upon the allowance of this class of claims is very clearly defined by precedents in the Forty-fifth Congress. I have always assumed that the Government is not an insurer for the benefit of an Army officer any more than it is an insurer for the benefit of its civilian employés. Still, it seems to me that the Committee on Military Affairs is the proper committee to determine whether the relations between an officer and the Government are such as to create a liability on the part of the Government in this case.

Mr. SPARKS. If my colleague on the Committee on Militay Affairs Mr. SPARKS. If my colleague on the Committee on Militay Affairs [Mr. BragG] is correct in his views on this subject, there certainly would be no need of a Committee on War Claims; for every claim that now properly goes to that committee grows in some way, I apprehend, out of the military service. What are the duties of the Committee on Military Affairs? They are charged with the consideration of all subjects relating to the military establishment, that is the reading of the rule—all things pertaining "to the military establishment."

Now here is a man who asks that he he paid from the Tressury of

Now, here is a man who asks that he be paid from the Treasury of the United States a certain sum of money for certain private losses sustained by him. How? Why his quarters were destroyed by fire and his baggage was burned; that is all there is of this claim. Now, it is maintained that the Military Committee should consider this claim for the reason that it has the power, in fact it is its duty, to consider "the relations of the soldier to the service," &c. This position strikes me as untenable. The Committee on Claims has charge of these claims, and it only, as I take it. When this claim comes before it its first inquiry must necessarily be, "Did this loss occur; has this man sustained this loss; and, if so, how?" Why at a certain place and under certain circumstances a fire occurred and this man's property was destroyed and the man being in the service of the Gov. property was destroyed and the man being in the service of the Government a liability on the part of the Government is incurred to make good his loss. It certainly makes no difference whether the claim grows out of the military or any other service. It is all the same a claim.

The SPEAKER. Is it not a private demand on the Treasury?

Mr. SPARKS. It is a private demand on the Treasury, purely and solely, beyond all question.

Mr. BOWMAN. Being interested in this question as a member of the Committee on Claims, desirous to avoid all claims that we legitimately can, I wish to make a suggestion. It will be noticed that the business referred to the Military Committee consists of two classes: one relating to "the military establishment," the other to "the public defense." The first question is, does this relate to the "military establishment?" Clearly it does not; it is purely and wholly a private claim.

The SPEAKER. A private and domestic claim.

The SPEAKER. A private and domestic claim.

Mr. BOWMAN. A domestic claim. It happens that the property of an officer was in this building which was burned; but it might have been the property of a private citizen; it might have been that of a Congressman or any other individual, and any one of these would have the right to come here and ask for pay that this officer has. He does not come here as an officer, but simply as a private individual asking for the payment of a claim not authorized by the laws of the military establishment. That is the test: is his claim one that comes under the military laws or under the rules of the War Department? under the military laws or under the rules of the War Department ? Clearly it is not; it is as pure a private claim as any claim that can be imagined, and it is perfectly clear it is not a war claim. The question being taken on the motion of Mr. Sparks to discharge the Committee on Military Affairs from the further consideration of the bill and refer it to the Committee on Claims, there were—ayes 32,

The SPEAKER. The motion is agreed to, and the bill is referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KEIFER. I understood the Chair to announce the vote as

If not too late, I call for tellers. It is too late after the result is announced.

Mr. KEIFER. I misunderstood the announcement of the Chair, or

I would have made the call more promptly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair always entertains such a demand under like circumstances. The gentleman states that he did not understand the announcement of the Chair.

The question being taken on ordering tellers, there were ayes 20; less than one-fifth of a quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, of Illineis. For the information of members and to avoid confusion in regard to these pairs I desire to suggest that those who arrange pairs should in all cases report them at once to the Clerk. He cannot now keep a complete list, as those on the opposite side of the House report to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Harmer] in some instances, and those on this side at times report to me; but they do not always give us notice when the pairs report to me; but they do not always give us notice when the pairs are to terminate. Pairs, too, are made without the knowledge of either the gentleman from Pennsylvania or myself. In future the gentleman from Pennsylvania agrees to look after the matter for the other side of the House and I shall continue to do the same for this side of the Chamber, if members will report when their pairs terminate as well as when they begin.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, notified the House that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 253) to increase the pension of Captain Samuel

An act (H. R. No. 3534) to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH UNITED STATES CEMETERY LAND.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 460) granting the right of way to the county of Warren, in the State of Mississippi, and to the Memphis and Vicksburgh Railroad Company through the United States Cemetery tract of land near Vicksburgh, Mississippi; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE L. KEY.

Mr. JOHNSTON also, from the same committee, reported back, with a favorable recommendation, the bill (H. R. No. 5269) for the relief of George L. Key, with amendments; which was referred to the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report and amendments ordered to be printed.

SALARY OF COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS.

Mr. COFFROTH, from the Committee on Invalid Pension, by unanimous consent, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 2979) to fix the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions, with an amendment; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and the accompanying report and amendment ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Has the morning hour expired? The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia, in the chair.) The morning hour has expired.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 6036) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the Committee on Appropriations, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I give notice that under instructions from the Committee on Appropriations I will ask the House to take up this bill and proceed with its consideration on Tuesday next.

INTERNAL-REVENUE BILL.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move that the House now resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to proceed with the consideration of the internal-revenue bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. THOMPSON, of Kentucky, in the

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the title of the bill under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 4812) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is on the point of order made by the gentleman from Minnesota upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky, discussion upon which was pending at the time the committee rose at its last session.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add as a new section the following:

"That the producers of leaf-tobacco shall be allowed, without the payment of any tax, to sell leaf-tobacco, the product of their own lands or of lands of which they are the tenants or lessees, to other than licensed dealers, manufacturers, or exporters, provided they do not sell exceeding one thousand dollars' worth in any one

Mr. CONGER. Upon that proposed section I believe there is a point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. It is pending.
Mr. CONGER. The point of order is that it is not germane to the bill, and I make the further point that it is in language and substance the purport of ten or fifteen bills now pending before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send up the bill covering his point.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. OSCAR TURNER I think, introduced a bill substantially the same as this. I have not a copy of the bill before me.

not a copy of the bill before me.

Mr. McKENZIE. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. CONGER. I say there are several bills which have been introduced.—I do not know the number; I do not remember by whom they were introduced, but a number of them have been introduced—which cover exactly the points proposed to be inserted by this amendment. I have stated that I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. OSCAR TURNER] introduced one to the same effect.

Mr. McKENZIE. There are at least thirty such bills pending before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. CONGER. That is my recollection of it. Almost every gentleman on this floor who has constituents who raise tobacco has got a bill of that kind in there.

a bill of that kind in there.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky concede that this amendment is substantially the same as those bills pending before the Committee on Ways and Means?

fore the Committee on ways and means:

Mr. McKENZIE. No, sir. I do not concede anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the gentleman from Michigan will please send the bill to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CONGER. Let the Clerk find the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must direct the Clerk.

Mr. CONGER. I say that there are such bills pending, and I have given the name of one gentleman who I think introduced such bill. I have not a copy of the bill, but the Clerk can find it.

Mr. WARNER. The gentleman who makes the point ought to furnish the bill on which he bases his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the gentleman must furnish the bill or the restaution.

nish the bill or the number of it.

Mr. ANDERSON. There is a bill in substance the same as this now pending before the Committee on Agriculture and reported by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to this House.

Mr. DIBRELL. That is not the same in substance as this. This amends the law, the other is an absolute repeal of the law.

Mr. CARLISLE. In reference to this matter, I will say that the Committee on Ways and Means have instructed the gentleman from Convision.

Georgia [Mr. Felton] to report to the House a bill on this same subject. That bill provides that persons who deal in leaf-tobacco to an ject. That bill provides that persons who deal in leaf-tobacco to an amount not exceeding twenty-five thousand pounds in any one year shall be required to pay a tax of only $5. That is to be reported as a substitute for the bill introduced by my colleague, [Mr. OSCAR TURNER,] and meets the approbation of Mr. TURNER as well as of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and is in effect a compromise bill on the subject. That bill the committee is new ready to report and have acted upon in the House as soon as it can be reached.

Mr. WARNER. That bill is not in the House.

Mr. MCKENZIE. I introduced a bill which is now pending before the Committee on Wavs and Means relating to this matter, which is the Committee on Ways and Means relating to this matter, which is as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 594) to permit the growers of tobacco to sell one thousand dollars' worth of their own growth without a license so to do.

Be it enacted, &c., That the growers of tobacco be, and they are hereby, authorized to sell to consumers tobacco of their own growth or raising one thousand dollars' worth annually without having first to obtain a license so to do, as now required by law.

That bill is in substance the same as my amendment, but its phraseology is different. Mr. CARLISLE. Mr. CARLISLE. The rule provides that no bill shall be amended by incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill pending before the House. In that respect it differs from the old rule which prohibited the introduction by way of amendment of matter identical with any other bill that was pending.

Mr. McKENZIE. I understood the point of order raised by the contemporary mechanics.

gentleman from Michigan was that this amendment was not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. And also that it is in substance the same as a bill now pending before the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. McKENZIE. By whom was the point of order raised?

The CHAIRMAN. By the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. Con-

Mr. McKENZIE. Then the gentleman from Michigan has two points of order pending at the same time.

The CHAIRMAN. He has.

Mr. McKENZIE. Which does he rely on? I move to strike out one of his points of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONGER. On that motion I call for a division. [Laughter.]

I made the point of order, and under it I named two objections to the amendment. I claim that it is liable to both of these objections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the gentleman from Michigan can rely on both points at the same time.

Mr. OSCAR TURNER. As reference has been made by the gentleman from Michigan to a bill or to two bills I have introduced relating to this subject, I desire to state to the Chair what those bills are:

To enable all persons raising tobacco to sell their tobacco without license or the payment of any tax.

That I introduced in the extra session. The other is,

To permit farmers and planters to sell tobacco of their own production and that raised by their tenants without special tax, and for other purposes.

Neither of those bills are in substance the same as the pending amendment; because the effect of my bills was to permit, without limit, the farmer or planter to sell all the tobacco he raised on his own lands, or the tobacco raised by his tenants, without paying tax, and I understand the amendment of my colleague [Mr. McKenzie] limits the amount to one thousand dollars' worth; hence I do not think the point of order is well taken so far as my bills referred to by the gentleman are concerned. My bills are not the same in substance, for they are broader and enable the planter to sell all he raises free of tax, which I believe to be right and just, and which I hope will be done which I believe to be right and just, and which I hope will be done before this session ends.

Mr. MILLS. I was about to make the point which has just been made by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. OSCAR TURNER.] The amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky limits the quantity to be sold to $1,000. There is manifestly, therefore, a difference between the bills pending before the Committee on Ways and Means and this amendment. The bills now pending before the committee propose to cover the whole ground, and this amendment proposes only to cover a part of the ground. If this amendment cannot be admitted because it covers one part of the subject embraced in a bill pending before the Committee on Ways and Means it might be equally argued that nothing could be admitted that contained a single sentence or a single nothing could be admitted that contained a single sentence or a single word of a bill pending before a committee. Here is a bill, that in-troduced by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. OSCAR TURNER,] which covers the whole ground of the duties on tobacco. It provides:

That no farmer or planter shall be required to pay a tax as a dealer in tobacco for selling tobacco of his own raising or tobacco received by him as rent from his tenants who have raised the same.

The amendment proposes to limit the amount and authorizes growers to sell one thousand dollars' worth without tax. The bill I have just read would cover one million dollars' worth. This amendment contains only a part of the subject, and I submit it is not liable to the point of order.

Mr. McKENZIE. I hope the gentleman from Michigan will withdraw his point of order. This is desired by the raisers of tobacco

Mr. CONGER. I suppose that the gentleman made his amendment merely the foundation of his very eloquent speech, and that having accomplished that purpose he does not care what becomes of his amendment

Mr. McKENZIE. The gentleman is very much mistaken if he thinks I had only that purpose in offering my amendment. I am in earnest to accomplish this result. I do not think the gentleman from earnest to accomplish this result. I do not think the gentleman from Michigan is really serious in his opposition to this.

Mr. CONGER. If the rule means anything it means we shall not have the same subject-matter running through two or three bills.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky on the double ground that the substance of the amendment is pending in other bills before the House, and that it is therefitting the inhibition of clares 4 of Parls VVI which presides. fore within the inhibition of clause 4 of Rule XXI, which provides

No bill or resolution shall at any time be amended by annexing thereto or incorporating therewith the substance of any other bill or resolution pending before the House; and that it is not germane to the subject-matter of the bill under consideration, which relates entirely and exclusively to the tax upon spirits and the internal-revenue laws relating thereto, and therefore is inhibited by the latter part of clause 7 of Rule XVI, which pro-

No motion or proposition on a subject different from that under consideration shall be admitted under color of amendment.

While the Chair is in sympathy with the gentleman from Kentucky in regard to his amendment and would cheerfully advocate his measure if upon the floor, and will vote for it whenever it is pending before the House, regarding, as he does, the law as it now stands as oppressive and unjust to the raisers of tobacco, and especially the poor and small farmers, still he is bound in ruling on the point of order to sustain it against him on account of the inexorable rules of the House, which he would gladly see modified to meet the demands of this oppressed class.

Mr. KNOTT. I offer as an additional section the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That sub-section 2 of section 3244 shall not apply to distillers in registered distilleries who manufacture for their own use wooden stills; but each of said distillers shall give notice to the collector of the district in which his distillery is located of each still manufactured before the still is used.

Mr. KNOTT. The sub-section which I propose to amend reads as Manufacturers of stills shall each pay $50, and $20 for each still or worm for distilling made by him. Any person who manufactures any still or worm to be used in distilling shall be deemed a manufacturer of stills.

In order that the amendment I have just proposed may be properly understood, I will trouble the House with a brief remark upon the different methods pursued in distillation. Under one the beer is originally boiled in a copper still, condensed through a copper worm, originally boiled in a copper still, condensed through a copper worm, placed in another still, and redistilled in the same manner. Under another process the beer is originally boiled in a large wooden tank by the agency of steam. The spirituous vapor is condensed in a receiver and redistilled in a copper still. These wooden tanks, I am informed, are usually constructed by the distillers themselves, and may be made by any ordinary cooper in the neighborhood. They have to be renewed about once a year; and until last fall they were not regarded, as I am informed, by the authorities as stills subject to tayation under the section I have inst read taxation under the section I have just read.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to reserve all points of order on this amendment. I have not been able distinctly to hear what has been said.

Mr. KNOTT. Last fall it was held for the first time by some of the collectors that a distiller reconstructing this wooden tank laid himself liable to the payment of the special license tax of $50 for the privilege of reconstructing the tank, and the additional tax of $20 on it after it was reconstructed. This places upon each distiller the same burden for the reconstruction of his wooden that is placed upon the large copper still manufacturer, who may manufacture and sell a thousand or ten thousand stills.

Now, it evidently was never the intention of the law as it stands on the statute-book that such a construction should be placed upon It is unequal and unjust, and perhaps if judicially considered the law would not be held by the courts to apply to such vessels. But the cost of a judicial proceeding would probably exceed the tax on the reconstruction of the tank. Under the construction recently put on this clause a distiller who reconstructs his wooden tank is required to pay $70 in addition to the original cost of construction, which under ordinary circumstances is about $50.

I think this amendment will commend itself to the sense of justice not only of the gentleman who has charge of this bill, but also of the House, and I hope it will be passed without objection.

Mr. CONGER. There is nothing in the bill now before the committee that changes the rate of tax in any possible manner upon the manufacture or production of distilled spirits. This amendment proposes to change the rate of tax upon certain manufactured articles, and is certainly not germane to anything contained in the bill. I cannot see how it applies any more to anything contained in this bill than would a proposition to change the tax upon any other article subject to internal tax.

I hope this bill will not be cumbered with any additional subject. If it is, it may be made to embrace the entire list of subjects of internal-revenue tax. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. This is really a very small matter. So far as I know, or believe, there is but one collector of internal revenue in all the United States who puts the construction upon the law which it is the purpose of this amendment to remove.

I had in my possession a letter upon this subject from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; but I am not now able to lay my hand upon it. The substance of the letter was that such a provision as is here proposed would affect the revenue to a very small extent; I have forgotten now the exact amount.

The collector of internal revenue for one of the districts in Kentucky has construed this second subdivision of section 3244 to apply to this wooden apparatus; and under that construction he has required persons who make this apparatus at their own distillery to pay this tax of $50 upon it.

I have been rather inclined to think that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue would perhaps correct this matter if application were application has been made to him and he has declined to act upon it.

I make this statement to show the contribution of the co made to him; but I do not know how that may be. make this statement to show the committee that this involves a very small matter, and, as I understand it, affects the distillers in but one collection district in the United States.

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman hold that this amendment is germane to the subject-matter of this bill? Is it not an entirely different subject? In other words, this bill does not propose to change any rate of taxation whatever, or to construe any rate of taxation.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is true, the bill does not. But the question whether or not this is germane to the bill I do not think depends exactly upon that; because the bill itself relates to internal-revenue laws so far as they affect distilled spirits.

This is a matter of such small consequence that I care little about it one way or the other. So far as I am concerned I am willing that the committee shall vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order made by the gentleman from Michigan, [Mr. CONGER,] on the ground that this bill relates to the internal-revenue tax collected on distilled spir-As the amendment affects the internal-revenue tax collected on its. As the amendment affects the internal-revenue tax collected on spirits, the Chair rules that it is in order.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I desire to offer an amendment to the last section of the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. When this bill was last under consideration in the Committee of the Whole, and also this morning, we considered amendments in the form of additional sections. I object now to going back to the last section and reopening the consideration of that sec-

The CHAIRMAN. The last section has not yet been reached.

Mr. CARLISLE. That is true. The last section relates merely to the repeal of laws and parts of laws in conflict with this bill. I refer to the last section of the bill which contained any substantial matter of legislation.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. Knott, and it was agreed to upon a division—ayes 46, noes 38.

The Clerk read the last section of the bill, as follows: Sec. 18. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent herewith are hereby repealed.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I move to amend the section just read by adding that which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize any interference by the revenue officers of the United States with the exercise of the right of every individual to manufacture and convert the fruit grown upon his, her, or their own land or premises into such form for family use as he, she, or they may desire free from internal-revenue tax.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I may as well embrace this opportunity to occupy five minutes under the rules to say why I cannot support this bill, and I will include in my remarks the amendment just offered. Two years ago a wail went up from the manufacturers of whisky all over this land that they were oppressed. They asked Congress to allow them to keep their whisky in bond for two years longer than the year they were already allowed, making three years, and they agreed that in consideration of this extension of time they would pay 5 per cent. on the tax due. That bill passed this House and became a law. Now they come here and ask us to remit the 5 per cent. interest which they promised to pay on the tax, and it is alleged in addition that they ought to have what is called an "outage," that is, if they put one hundred gallons into the warehouse and when they take it out the quantity is reduced to ninety-two and one-half gallons they ought to be allowed for this difference, and no account is taken of the fact that the ninety-two and one-half gallons remaining at the end of three years are worth twice as much as the one hundred gal-lons put in the warehouse in the first place.

All this is claimed for the whisky interest, because, as is alleged on the other side, by gentlemen who claim to be advocates of correct morals and of temperance, whisky is one of the necessaries of life. If it had been said that it was a necessary of death, the statement would have been much nearer the truth. The fact is, you cannot make the stuff at all unless you kill something; you must kill the grain, and then rot it, before you can get the alcohol out of it; and the product when obtained kills the man who uses it; so that it is death at the beginning and death at the end.

Mr. McMAHON. I would like to ask the gentleman whether you

Mr. McMarion. I would like to ask the gentleman whether you do not kill the grain when—

Mr. PRICE. I do not yield to the gentleman; I have not the time.

Now the proposition here is that every man shall be allowed to make whisky out of anything he raises—out of potatoes or anything else. Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. My amendment does not go to that

Mr. PRICE. The amendment is based on the ground that because a man raises the article himself he ought to be allowed to make it into anything he pleases. Now the first Indian who learned to raise corn in this country, after he had raised his crop under instruc-tions of a white agriculturist, came to the white man and said: "I tions of a white agriculturist, came to the white man and said: "I want to know how to fix this corn so I can eat it out of a bottle like the white man." [Laughter.] This amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is in the same line. Because a man raises as much corn or as many potatoes as he pleases he is to be allowed to make the article into whisky in the interest of humanity and to promote the cause of temperance! It is claimed that because a man raises the crop on his own farm, therefore making whisky out of it will not hurt anybody! Now I never learned that a rattlesmake raised in a man's own carden is any less poisonous than one raised in the mount. man's own garden is any less poisonous than one raised in the mountains of Virginia or Pennsylvania. I have always believed the rep-

It is said that this is not a temperance question, that it is a matter of revenue. I grant that it is a matter of revenue on this floor at this time; and for that very reason I propose that these men who came in and asked this favor of Congress and had it granted to them shall pay, as they agreed to pay, the 5 per cent interest on their tax. Why, sir, have we considered what these taxes in two years would amount to? When we passed the law of which I am speaking, it was claimed that there were five million dollars' worth of whisky in bond which at the end of a year would have to pay a tax of $250,000. By the operation of that law we lent to these whisky manufacturers $250,000. for two years. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars with two years' interest at 5 per cent. would be a considerable sum of money.

This we give to the manufacturers of alcoholic liquors.

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. PRICE. Yes, sir.

Mr. CARLISLE. The official report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that for the whole of the last fiscal year this interest amounted to about $75,800.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman will remember that it was claimed on this floor that there were five million dollars' worth of whisky in bond at that time. I am only stating what was stated then. But suppose the interest amounts only to $75,000 per annum; why are we to give this amount to the whisky interest in this country?

A great deal of sympathy is manifested here—in words—for the agriculturist. But you do not do anything of this kind for the relief of the man who puts his corn into pork. If he puts it into whisky, he must have the benefit of legislation like this.

Mr. CARLISLE. He pays no tax if he puts it into pork.

Mr. CARLISLE. He pays no tax if he puts it into pork.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman will excuse me. If a man puts his corn into pork he has to pay tax every year to the State and the county; he has to pay tax to the road fund, to the school fund, and every other fund. There is no relief for him. Of two men, one puts his money into whisky and the other into pork. The man who puts his money into pork has to pay tax on it, while the man who puts his money into whisky pays nothing. That is the sum and substance of this hill. this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. McMAHON obtained the floor.
Mr. PRICE. If the gentleman wants to ask me a question—

Mr. McMAHON. No, sir; you declined to answer. Mr. PRICE. I declined only for want of time. I am ready to answer all the questions that the gentleman may put to me.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the gentleman would have to decline for want of time to answer the question I wished to put, for it would take him the rest of the day.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman knows very well that it is impossible for any man making a speech under a limit of five minutes to answer

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. Chairman, I have heard a great deal of sentimentalism from gentlemen on that side of the House on the question of the manufacture of whisky. What are you going to do for the $60,000,000 of revenue which is raised from the consumption of this article? Will my friend take it on his national-bank deposits?

Mr. PRICE. Do you want an answer from me?

Mr. McMAHON. No; I decline to yield, like you did. Does he want it on incomes?

Mr. PRICE. You will remember I did not ask you a question, and you are asking me a question now, and refuse to permit me to an-

Mr. McMAHON. Five minutes is too short a time in which to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PRICE. You ask me a question and refuse an answer. I did not do that to you.

Mr. McMAHON. You can answer after a while. Do you want it on incomes?

Mr. PRICE. I have no objection.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the gentleman want it as direct tax upon

Mr. PRICE. I have no objection if you want it so.
Mr. McMAHON. Then I hope the gentleman from Iowa will go into his district, if he is renominated for a third term, and advocate the imposition, as a direct tax on land, the $60,000,000 now raised on these irresponsible, bad, whisky-drinking democrats who consume sixty million dollars' worth. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, within the last year or two, has come to a different idea upon this question of revenue that is raised from whisky and distilled spirits and tobacco. He has recognized the fact that the internal-revenue laws produce nearly one-half of the annual expenses of this Government, including the interest on the public debt; and he has adopted, as it were, a new policy, and that policy has brought about in the State of North Car-olina and in the State of Georgia, to which my friend from Michigan alluded so feelingly the other day, a great change, so we have three or four times as many legal distilleries in the State of North Carolina to-day as we had one or two years ago. Why? Because a different system has been adopted, a system of conciliation; because the laws have been so modified or their enforcement has been put in such a shape these men have been regarded as following a legitimate business yielding immense revenue to the Government. And the bill which is now before this House is a bill carrying out this same idea; not the idea of the gentleman from Iowa to kill the goose which lays the golden egg, but to foster the goose which lays the golden egg.

Mr. PRICE. That is a slander on the goose.

Mr. McMAHON. The gentleman from Iowa is not sound on the goose, and I do not take his opinion on that question. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. Not that sort of a goose, I am not.

Mr. PRICE. Not that sort of a goose, I am not.

Mr. McMAHON. When it comes to a bill like this, when you let go a little $74,000 here and $100,000 there, in the long run you get a great deal more from the American people who pay your taxes, and good, honest, pious, and respectable people like my friend from the State of Iowa sit still and see the democrats and bad republicans disk the whicher and we it is the five arts while he as I say sits by drink the whisky and use it in the fine arts while he, as I say, sits by and grows rich by paying no tax as he does not use any of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. PRICE. I have done my best to keep the democrats away from whisky

Mr. McMAHON. If the gentleman keeps his efforts for the party he has influence with and persuades the one-tenth of the republicans who drink whisky to abstain from it he will accomplish one of the greatest reforms known in America. Mr. PRICE. I have done all I could on this side, too.

Mr. McMAHON. I am sorry the gentleman places so low an estimate upon his own influence as to have such little success as I am sure he has had in the past.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, ought to go through substantially in the shape in which it is recommended by the committee. Let us deal with these people in the right way. It will not do on one side of your face to have a pious look that the manufacture of whisky is an awful crime, that the drinking of whisky is a base crime, that the use of crime, that the drinking of whisky is a base crime, that the use or whisky in any shape is a bad thing, and then, on the other hand, tax it and get $60,000,000, as you will in this fiscal year, to run your Government. There is no fairness, there is no honesty, there is no decency, there is no politics, there is nothing in it but pandering to a prejudice which ought not to be tolerated in this country.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I wish to say a word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. Then I move to strike out the last word, and that gives me the opportunity of saving something on the word, and that gives me the opportunity of saying something on the pending question. I did not intend, when I offered the amendment, to have said anything on the subject, as the question had been largely discussed when it was last before the committee. But I am surprised to find gentlemen on this floor who are boasting whenever an opportunity is offered of our free and liberal institutions denying now to tunity is offered of our free and liberal institutions denying now to the farmers of this country, to the poor men, the right to convert the fruit which they raise into any form convenient for their use.

Now, the gentleman from Iowa I suppose does not use any whisky himself, and that being the case he should exercise a little charity for those who do. He is perhaps one of the "hard-cider" men. There is no objection, I understand, on the part of some gentlemen to making cider out of apples and allowing it to stand until it gets so "hard" that one mug full will make a man drunk for a week. [Laughter.] But when you come to a measure of relief which proposes that the farmers who have fruit too remote from market to be sold, who see that fruit westing under their fruit trees and come here and ask see that fruit wasting under their fruit trees and come here and ask see that fruit wasting under their fruit trees and come here and ask Congress to permit them, free from taxation, to convert that fruit to their own use, gentlemen say, "No; let them go and buy their whisky; let them pay the tax to the Government and pay the tax and the profit to the manufacturer, and pay the price for it that is asked," rather than permit them to convert what they have already on their own farms into an acceptable form for the use of their own families. That is all there is in the amendment.

In my own county I am satisfied that within the last ten years fifty thousand dollars' worth of fruit has been lost by reason of the apprehension of the men who own the farms and the fruit that if they attempted to convert any portion of it into spirits they would be pursued by the Government officers, even though it would cost the Government ten times as much to collect the revenue that would be derived from the distillation upon the spirit if they had been permitted to seek it. to make it. A single example with which I am acquainted, and I am done. Within the last two years a couple of young men, born upon the farm upon which they then resided, gathering their fruit from the orchard their father had planted, making a single barrel of peach or apple brandy in the still their father had erected, were pursued, the brandy taken from them, taken to Quincy and sold, and they were sent to Springfield to answer for this violation of the law, where they were imprisoned; and they were finally broken up by the prosecution by fees, fines, expenses of their attorneys, and all of the incidental expenses necessary in such cases. It is to avoid a recurrence of this, it is to avoid such hardships as this and the infliction of such punishments upon an innocent, deserving class that are entitled to our favor rather than to our censure and condemnation, I have offered this amendment; and the House will not be true to itself, it will not to make it. A single example with which I am acquainted, and I am this amendment; and the House will not be true to itself, it will not be true to the people of this country, if it rejects or denies or refuses this relief and allows this natural right to convert the product of this relief and allows this natural right to convert the product of their soil and of their own hands into a convenient form for use.

It is right to give them that privilege to so convert it, and it does not become us, boasting of our free institutions and of our constitutional liberty, to refuse them that right and power. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HASKELL. I renew it. Mr. Chairman, this amendment under one form or another has been voted down I think about twenty times in this committee, and I suppose it is hardly necessary for me to discuss the question, and I desire to say only a word. Under the present law every distillery in the country is a marked piece of property. There are a few hundred or perhaps a thousand of them, but every distillery is known to the law and its location recognized. Every one is watched by the officers of the Government. Every one is registered. It is made under the law one of the legitimate, so to speak, enterprises of the country, so far as the law can make it so at least. These amendments which have been offered here are in the interest of the evasion of the law, and their tendency is to increase the num-

These amendments which have been offered here are in the interest of the evasion of the law, and their tendency is to increase the number of distilleries to hundreds of thousands, to make it possible for every farm in the country to contain a "moonshine" distillery.

More than that, Mr. Chairman, reaching out onto the domain of morals, it offers to every farmer a bounty of ninety cents per gallon on every gallon he may make in his home. The rum and whisky with which to drink himself drunk "under his own vine and fig-tree" shall be more than free, or it allows him, when he shall have made his apple-jack or peach brandy, to drink himself into a state of maudlin intoxication free from tax, and then he may turn himself into a whisky colporteur to make drunk the families of his neighbors around him. You will have distilleries on every farm, I may say in every cellar; you will permit the old woman to fill her wash-tub with whisky, and her milk-pail and tin-cans and tea-pots with apple-jack to nourish the children upon, all under the shade of their own "vine and figtree," and without taxation. That is the object of the various amendments of this kind that have been offered. Simply a specious plan to promote drunkenness and evade the revenue tax on spirits, that is all.

Mr. SINGLETON of Ulinois. As I understand the gentlemen from

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. As I understand, the gentleman from Kansas is in favor of allowing a man to get drunk upon somebody Alansas is in favor of allowing a man to get drunk upon somebody else's whisky, and objects to their getting drunk upon their own.

Mr. PRICE. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a minute.

Mr. HASKELL. Is my time out?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time is not yet exhausted.

Mr. PRICE. I want to say in reference to the argument of my friend from Ohio [Mr. McMahon] for the revenue, that this same argument was raised a great many years ago, and I think the poet Cowper has treated the matter so much better than I could do that I will read a few lines from him: read a few lines from him:

The excise is fattened with the rich result
Of all this riot; and ten thousand casks,
Forever dribbling out their base contents,
Touch'd by the Midas finger of the State,
Bleed gold for ministers to sport away.
Drink, and be mad then; 'tis your country bids!
Gloriously drunk, obey the important call!
Her cause demands the assistance of your throats;
Ye all can swallow, and she asks no more.

Mr. McMAHON. Does the gentleman quote that as an argument

Mr. McMahon. Does the gentleman quote that as an argument for prohibiting the manufacture of whisky?

Mr. PRICE. It is a supplement to the argument of my friend from Ohio. Did the gentleman ask me if I am a friend of prohibiting the manufacture of whisky? I am.

Mr. Barber. Some stress was laid here yesterday on the attitude of distillers at Peoria, Illinois. I would like, with the permission of the committee, to have read the expression of sentiment by a large number of distillers in the city of Chicago, as found in the report of the hearing before the Committee on Ways and Means. It is very brief.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. BARBER. I thought I had the floor in my own right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was occupying the floor for one minute left of the time of the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. SPARKS. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois understood he was entitled to five minutes. I think he ought to have it.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Barber] will be recognized as offering a formal amendment and speaking in his own time, and the Clerk will read the paper which he has sent to the desk to be read as part of his remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

CHICAGO, 51 WEST WASHINGTON STREET, April 2, 1880.

Chicago, 51 West Washington Street, April 2, 1880.

To the honorable Ways and Means Committee, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

We, the undersigned, comprising all the distillers in the first district of Illinois, having seen and carefully considered all the objections raised by some distillers in Cincinnati, Ohio, and Peoria, Illinois, to the passage by Congress of House of Representatives bill No. 4812, or more particularly that part of the bill (section 18) relating to an allowance for natural shrinkage on spirits while in United States bonded warehouse, beg to say that after mature examination and consideration we fully comprehend that the provisions objected to will affect our business and interests precisely as it will affect other distillers, whether in the States of Ohio, Illinois, or elsewhere. We believe the principle to be right, proper, and just, and therefore desirable, and should receive the approval of all; that taxes should be collected only on goods which go on the market and enter into consumption, such loss happening without fraud or negligence, as set forth in the above bill. Believing further that the opposition to the bill becoming a law arises from a want of fairly comprehending its just and beneficial effects to the trade or from unworthy personal or sectional influences, we therefore again carnestly solicit and request favorable action on the part of the Committee of Ways and Means, and Congress, to the end that H. R. bill 4812 may pass and become a law.

Mr. BARBER. That is the per diem capacity of those distilleries. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that this bill as it came from the Committee has been very carefully considered, and I believe has met with the very general approbation of the trade throughout the country. And I regret that an attempt has been made here to give this the aspect of a controversy between the temperance men and the license aspect of a controversy between the temperance men and the license men or the anti-temperance men, if you please so to call them. There is no such element in it. It is simply a question of business convenience, a question of propriety in the revenue laws.

I can see no reason why we should tax the outage, which would not apply and require us to tax the outage of a bin of wheat which had been run through a fanning mill by the farmer. You might just as well justify the taxing of tailings, because the remainder of the wheat was so much better, as justify the tax of wastage because the residue was of greater or more perfect value.

We are drifting away from this bill as matured by the committee and approved by the trade of the country. I hope it will not be loaded down by these doubtful amendments which will jeopardize the final passage of the bill. I ask also that a dispatch received this morning from Boston by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Morse] be read as part of my remarks.

The Clerk read as follows:

We earnestly request that you will do all in your power to have the Carlisle bill passed in full as reported to the House, shrinkage clause and all.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to oppose the amendment. Mr. REAGAN. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. REAGAN.

Mr. CONGER. I have risen to oppose the amendment now pending, and ask to be recognized by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to oppose the amendment?

Mr. REAGAN. I move an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment already pending to strike out the last word.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I will oppose that amendment.
Mr. CONGER. I rose for that purpose.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized to oppose the amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. In legislating upon subjects which affect the material interests of the country it seems to me that the true theory of our Government should be to deal with those interests as they exist in the country, and that it is no part of the duty of this Congress to consider sumptuary laws as such or to consider questions of morals or to determine whether this Congress should be a temperance assortion of the country ciation or a collection of the representatives of the people to act upon their general interests. I am induced to say this because of the remarks made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HASKELL] and by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. PRICE] ridiculing the idea that we should allow the distillation of fruits and the making of brandies from them, and representing such permission to be injurious to the morals of the country.

The bill before us deals with the manufacture and sale of liquor. Now, if it is right to distill corn and wheat and other grains, I ask if Now, it it is right to distill corn and wheat and other grains, I ask if there is any wrong in distilling apples, peaches, and the other fruits of the orchard? We simply suggest that they all stand upon the same ground, with only the distinction which is called for by the nature of the case. In the large distilleries where grain is used in great quantities it may be that the restrictions are all proper. But the fact asserted by the gentleman from Illinois who offered this amendment is known as I suppose to nearly all the members on this floor, that bendered of the results of fruit peaches and apples that hundreds of thousands of dollars of fruit, peaches, and apples rot upon the ground because they will not bear transportation to a remunerative market. They can only be collected for this purpose in small quantities, owing to their character and the circumstances of the people who generally raise them. They desire the privilege of of the people who generally raise them. They desire the privilege or utilizing and preserving this fruit from waste and loss by being permitted to distill it into brandy. If you permit them to do it they can utilize the fruit of their orchards. They can convert it into valuable material entering into the commerce and consumption of the country. But if you impose on the small stills which alone farmers use for the distillation of fruit the regulations which apply to the large distilleries, they amount to a prohibition of using these fruits and utilizing them in that way for the use and benefit of the owners.

It would take nothing away from the revenues of the country to permit men to distill their own fruits into brandy; and as it would not take away the revenues of the country and would increase the profits of the owners, it seems to me the true policy and the just policy would be to adopt some such amendment as the one offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

[Here the hammer fell.]
The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment, which is to strike out the last word.

Mr. SPARKS. That will be withdrawn, and I will renew it.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to oppose it.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment, and it has not been withdrawn.

The question was taken upon striking out the last word, and it was not agreed to.

Mr. SPARKS and Mr. FINLEY. I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. CONGER. Then I understand that that side of the House is to be recognized, although we may stand here an hour claiming to be recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not understand any such thing.

Mr. CONGER. That is the fact, whether we understand it or not.
The CHAIRMAN. That is not the fact.

Mr. SPARKS. I think I will satisfy the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] before I get through that he is mistaken in his assertion that no opposition to this bill comes from this side of the House. I have no earthly sympathy with that sentimentality that brings into the consideration of congressional legislation this discussion of fanatical sumptuary laws.

Mr. PRICE. What is a sumptuary law? There is none here, and none has been talked about.

Mr. SPARKS. That which attempts to regulate by law what a man shall eat or what he shall drink. I do not think that is the proper province of legislation.

Mr. PRICE. We have not said a word on this side about what a man shall drink or what he shall not drink.

Mr. SPARKS. No matter whether you have or not; I am giving my views about it. I believe in the largest liberty of the citizen on this subject. I believe, therefore, that the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. SINGLETON] is a proper amendment and should pass; that men who have orchards ought to be permitted, without license or tax, freely for their own use to distill or press or do what they please with the fruits of their orchards. And I think an attempt to tax them for so doing is a great wrong. I believe that all men should be allowed without molestation to eat and drink to suit themselves and judge for themselves of the quality and quantity of what they drink; and further believe that opposition to this is bigoted fanaticism and unworthy of consideration in this House or any other legislative body.

But I now want to direct attention for a moment to this bill now before us. It is for that purpose that I arose. This argument has run into almost everything foreign to the real subject before us. What is this bill? Not long ago, I forget how long, these distillers and overgrown monopolists came to Congress and pleadingly asked to be relieved to a certain extent of certain restrictions and obligato be refleved to a certain extent of certain restrictions and onliga-tions incurred under the law in their business of distilling. What was it they asked? They asked to be permitted to hold their manufact-ured spirits for a certain period, not exceeding three years, before they paid the tax upon it. That was granted to them by Congress upon the condition that they should pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent, at the end of that time upon the amount of the tax due on the article at the date of manufacture.

They now, emboldened by the liberality then shown them, come to Congress and ask to be relieved from the payment of this interest on the tax, and also that they be further, and, as it seems to me, unreasonably, allowed to deduct for evaporation, wastage, or leakage up to a certain limit. That is, for every barrel of distilled spirits containing forty gallons they shall be allowed wastage or leakage to the extent of seven and a half gallons, for which they shall pay no tax whatever, though this seven and a half gallons were manufactured, and its loss, if there be any, is solely on account of this delay made at the instance and for the benefit of the manufacturers. Now, I think that is a demand on the part of these manufacturers which is unwarranted by any consideration of justice and is an outrage upon the common tax-payers of this country, and I never will vote for any such proposition.

The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] who has charge of this bill intimates that this leakage or wastage may not be in the ratio of 7½ to 40, but says that it is not to exceed seven and a half gallons upon a package of forty gallons or more. Now, sir, let me ask the members of this House if they believe, should this bill pass into law, that there ever will be a case in which that package will be over forty gallons and which will not leak the full amount of seven and fav, that there ever will be a case in which that package will be over forty gallons, and which will not leak the full amount of seven and a half gallons? These manufacturers I apprehend will carefully see to this, and will always under this bill be able to get rid of the tax on that seven and a half gallons out of a barrel, which they will be sure to have no larger than forty gallons. They ought not to be allowed to do this; they ought to be compelled to pay tax upon all they manufacture. That only would be fair to all the tax-payers of the country, and you can devise no other plan that will be see the country, and you can devise no other plan that will be so.

the country, and you can devise no other plan that will be so.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FROST. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPARKS. I have no more time allowed me under the rules.

Mr. UPDEGRAFF, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, to all the provisions of this bill, designed avowedly to make cheaper and freer alcoholic liquors, I am opposed. To the rebate of $1,750,000 and the unjust release of $75,000 of the 5 per cent. interest now due by the liquor manufacturers of the country, I am inflexibly opposed. It is a bonus of $2,000,000 to that trade. of $2,000,000 to that trade.

Among all the burdens from which the people ask relief, among all the struggling industries which may justly demand favor in view of the public good, but which it is constantly sought here to hinder and cripple, is the only answer of this Congress to the people to be, "You shall have freer and cheaper whisky. We will take $2,000,000 off of that traffic, and collect it from less favored industries, and from the comforts and necessaries of life."

But there is a strange confusion of views among the advocates of these measures. Even among distillers there is a conflict of interest, and a part of them favor and some oppose this measure as unequal and unjust.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] wants every family to have the right to distill eighty gallons of liquor untaxed for family use in the interest of temperance! He is for free apple-jack and reform! [Laughter.] I wish my friend much success in his temperance work in the good old North State, if he can get two barrels of untaxed peach brandy and apple-jack in every household for family

The gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. WILLIS,] with great frankness, and surely with business directness, declares he is in favor of this bonus to the liquor manufacturing interest, in order, as he says, that capital may be invited into that business and its products greatly enlarged. It may be that the majority of the people of this country do not believe the public good requires the stimulation or encouragement of that traffic. Every bushel of grain converted into liquor makes that much less for the food markets of the country.

When the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. YOUNG] in humorous terms dwelt on the superior whisky of his beloved Memphis it was indeed a ghastly jest. Various causes have been assigned for the peculiar misfortunes of that plague-stricken city. The gentleman has suggested another—it may be the true one—for ho says "many of his most reputable and respectable constituents there have invested large capital in this business." [Laughter.]

But the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUCKNER] goes so far as to declare that this revenue tax "interferes with the interests of the country for the sake of appeasing this miserable clamor about moral sentiment." Mr. Chairman, hundreds of thousands of the best citizens of this country have frequently and respectfully appealed to Congress to do what legislation may justly do to diminish the fearful cost and crime that comes from intemperance. to diminish the fearful cost and crime that comes from intemperance. No face government can justly or safely disregard the "moral sentiments" of any large class of its best citizens. The present great premier of England, just now so overwhelmingly returned to power, never uttered a truer or grander sentiment than when he declared, in speaking of this very question: "It is the duty of government to make it as hard as possible for a man to go wrong, and as easy as possible for him to go right." This is the highest and ripest wisdom of a free polity and the best safeguard of institutional government. It trust it may be applied to the precisel solution of this question trust it may be applied to the practical solution of this question.

Mr. SPARKS withdrew the pro forma amendment.
Mr. FINLEY. I renew it. Gentlemen on the other side who have opposed this amendment have talked about the loss of revenue to be incurred by the Government if the amendment should go into effect. Now, the revenue derived last year from the tax on all distilled spirits was over $52,000,000; the revenue from spirits distilled from apples was over $52,000,000; the revenue from spirits distilled from apples, peaches, and grapes was only a little over $900,000—less than a million dollars. So that the question of revenue is a very small matter. But the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. PRICE,] like the gentleman from Kansas, [Mr. HASKELL,] opposes this proposition in the interest of humanity. Let me say to my friend from Iowa, for whom I have very high regard, although he appears to be a little wild on this subject of temperance, that it would be absolute cruelty to his constituents not to pass this bill. He comes from a great sheep-raising country where they all drink whisky or spirits on sheep-washing days.

Mr. PRICE. Let me say to my friend that I have been preaching to them for thirty years the same doctrine I advocate to-day.

Mr. FINLEY. Now, to say that a farmer may make cider and drink it, but that he must not convert the product of his farm into spiritu-it, but that he must not convert the product of his farm into spirituous liquors seems to me to partake of nonsense. I believe in giving farmers the right to utilize their apples, their peaches, and their potatoes, if they want to, in the manufacture of peach brandy or apple brandy or anything of that kind to be consumed by their families, and I think it will do them good. I believe it is a great deal better than some of the lectures we hear on temperance.

Mr. PRICE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?
Mr. FINLEY. With pleasure.
Mr. PRICE. Is the gentleman in favor of fixing up all the corn, the wheat and barley, and potatoes so that it can be "eaten out of a

Mr. FINLEY. Oh, that is a very old joke. I will say to my friend that I do not believe in undertaking to legislate what a man shall eat and drink. I believe that a farmer ought to have the right to manufacture on his own farm for the use of himself and his family whatever he may wish to manufacture without interference by the Government. As to the question of revenue in this case, it is, as I have said, a very small matter. I hope the amendment will pass.

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not rise specially to speak upon the pending amendments, but to express the hope that there may be no further amendments offered save those upon which it has been agreed we shall have a vote in the House.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, is the result of a great deal of careful labor.

It is misunderstood, I think, by the Committee of the Whole. The bill is very largely recommended by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. It is an improvement on the present revenue system of the Revenue. It is an improvement on the present revenue system of the country. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue has recommended very many of the provisions embraced in it. None of them have been condemned by him; he simply, like a conscientious executive officer, declines either to approve or disapprove of the three amendments upon which it has been agreed we are to have a vote in the House. In all other respects the bill meets the approval of the Treasury Demonstrated.

We have had this bill before the Committee of the Whole for an entire week. We are told that next Tuesday the post-office bill is to come before us; the funding bill is still pending; five or six appropriation bills are yet to be passed. We have spent a week on this bill. We have discussed it all over on this side. We have had a host of amendments to be voted down. There are gentlemen on the other side whose constituents are interested in this bill. They are very deeply interested in it, and they are all fighting their own constituents deeply interested in it, and they are all lighting their own constituents when they tack on amendment after amendment and prolong debate on them. We are approaching the defeat of this bill. Whatever may be the fate of the three pending amendments the bill ought to pass in some shape, and ought not to be defeated.

It is said, Mr. Chairman, that it has been debated as though there were nothing in it of interest but this one question. Those who manufacture spirits pay $60,000,000 of taxes, and they want this bill even if those three clauses to which amendments have been offered are voted out. They need the bill. This is a pure matter of revenue, and not a matter of temperance, not a matter of liquor drinking, but purely a question of revenue. We collect this vast revenue; now, shall the system under which we collect it be protected or not?

Mr. HARRIS, of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have uniformly voted and struggled for the right of each person to manufacture the fruit grown on his own lands or those under his control without paying any tax. There are hundreds of persons in my district who live too far from market to dispose of their apples and other fruits. The law prohibits them from distilling them, and the result is they rot and become of no use to any one. This is wrong. It is the only means many persons have of making a living, and it is unjust and tyrannical in the Government to deprive them of their principal means of support. I hope this small boon will be granted.

Mr. CARLISLE. There seems to be but one way to get a vote on this amendment, and that is to have the committee rise and close debate. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope by unanimous consent we may vote without rising. If we cannot do that, why then let us rise. [Cries of Mr. Finley's amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word, and do so because I see there is a disposition to cut off all debate, and I take advantage of this opportunity to say a word on the pending question.

I desire to say to the committee—and I desire that it may there are perhaps two hundred firms in the United States who demand these two and a half millions of dollars be given to them. My friend from Chicago has read the names of seven of his constituents ask-ing for this, and other gentlemen have read the names of fifteen or twenty. Are there no temperance men in his district who will inquire of him and of me and every other man who votes on this question whether they will give to the manufacturers of whisky $2,500,000 to encourage that trade? I make the issue here boldly. With the fifty or a hundred thousand petitioners to this House for a commission to inquire into the use and abuse of intoxicating drinks, this House refuses to pass any law authorizing such a commission of inquiry; it turns a deaf ear to all the demands of thousands and hundreds of thousands. sands of our citizens on that subject. Gentlemen fortify themselves with the request of seven men in a district to give two and a half millions of money out of the Treasury virtually; they fortify them-selves to vote for the amendments and the whole bill. Let the issue come; let it go to the country; let these men who fortify their votes by the seven or eight or two hundred firms meet their temperance constituents if they want to. I court that issue before the people; I court that record we shall have in the House by a yea-and-nay vote. If it be so the temperance people of the United States are in such a fearful minority they are willing that seven or eight whisky-makers in a district shall control our votes here, let it be known and let it be recorded.

Mr. CARLISLE. All this discussion about the seventeenth section and the propriety of striking it out is out of order. This committee and the propriety of striking it out is out of order. This committee has passed from the seventeenth section as long ago as the day before yesterday, and I shall object hereafter to any discussion of the provision of that section. I move the committee rise, with a view of closing debate on this pending amendment.

Mr. McMAHON. Before that is done I wish to ask my friend whether the sub-committee has not reported a bill for the alcoholic sections of the sub-committee has not reported a bill for the alcoholic metals and the sub-committee has not reported as hill for the alcoholic sections.

commission to which the gentleman from Michigan refers, and whether that bill is not now on the Calendar for consideration?

Mr. CONGER. There have been attempts made to take that up and it has been refused. Gentlemen know it will not be acted on by this House. Gentlemen know the whisky interest controls here.

Mr. McMAHON. I dispute the gentleman's proposition; and I want to know why this bill should have precedence of any other bill on the Calendar. That is a statement that is not authorized at all by any of the circumstances attending the report or by any of the facts concerning the report to this House in reference to that bill; and the gentleman has not expressed himself in accordance with the facts.

Mr. CONGER. Very well; we will see when the session closes.

Mr. MCMAHON. Has it not already been reported? Is it not now waiting its proper turn for consideration? I think the gentleman will find that to be a fact if he examines.

Mr. SIMONTON rose.

Mr. CARLISLE. I now renew my motion that the committee rise for the purpose of reporting the bill to the House. I understand that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. Simonton] desires to discuss the seventeenth section of the bill.

Mr. SIMONTON. I prefer to announce to the House myself what I want to discus

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. CARLISLE. Not at present. I will state, however, to the gentleman and to other gentlemen who desire to discuss this bill that I will have under the rules of the House, I presume, one hour after the bill gets out of the committee, and as I do not desire to use any portion or perhaps very little of the time myself, I shall be willing to yield to any gentleman who desires it for a period not exceeding five or ten minutes. I want to get a vote, however, on the pending amendment, and for that reason I have moved that the committee rise.

Mr. FINLEY. Can we not have a vote by consent, without the committee rising? I hope the Chair will put the question to the

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the question to the committee. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. SINGLETON.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 65.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois. I ask for tellers.

Mr. FINLEY. The gentleman has a right to demand tellers, as no quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. SINGLETON, of Illinois, and Mr. Con-GER were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 63, noes 76.

Mr. KITCHIN. I make the point that no quorum has voted. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will direct the tellers to resume their

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 66, noes 84.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration, in obedience to the order of the Honse, the bill (H. R. No. 4812) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue, had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments thereto.

Mr. CARLISLE. I move the previous question on the adoption of the amendments and the ordering of the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. There was, however, an understanding in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union that there should be a privilege accorded to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Congers] to have a separate vote upon three amendments which were rejected in the committee, and which he will offer at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan should offer his amendments before the previous question is demanded.

Mr. GARFIELD. The amendments had better be offered before the previous question is seconded.

Mr. CONGER. My first amendment is to insert after line 83 the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That in case of the non-payment of the tax on any distilled spirits within one year from the date of the original warehousing bond for such spirits, interest shall accrue upon said tax at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from and after the expiration of said year until the tax shall be paid. Such interest shall be collected with the tax in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

Mr. CONGER. My second amendment is to strike out section 16, commencing on page 12 of the printed bill, and continue to page 14, line 36, which relates to the question of stamps.

My third amendment is to strike out section 17, on page 14, which provides for releasing the tax upon the evaporation or leakage of spirits in bond.

On these three amendments it was agreed that we should have a separate vote in the House.

The SPEAKER. On the three amendments offered by the gentleman from Michigan, as well as the several amendments agreed to by the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Kentucky now de-mands the previous question up to the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. CARLISLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. If there be no separate vote demanded on the amendments recommended by the Committee of the Whole, the Chair suggests that the question upon them be taken in gross.

Mr. CARLISLE. Before the vote is taken, I suppose I must claim my hour to close the debate. I do not desire to occupy any time myself, but some gentlemen have asked me to yield to them for a few

I yield now to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Simonton] for

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is proceeding for an hour by unanimous consent and has yielded to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

SIMONTON. I ask the Clerk to read what I now send to the desk, being part of the remarks of my colleague, [Mr. Young, of Tennessee,] which he made when this bill was before the House two days

The Clerk read as follows:

Does he not know that there is less tax paid and more whisky drank in his district to the square mile than in any other similar-sized territory in the United States? [Laughter.] At least no other locality having these characteristics in an equal degree can be found upon any standard map with which I am acquainted.

equal degree can be found upon any standard map with which I am acquainted. [Laughter.]

Now, I dislike to tell it, but I believe it is susceptible of proof that a large majority of my colleague's constituents have not allowed an hour of daylight to pass since they were three years old without testing the quality of some character of exhilarating liquid, [great laughter,] and that they never had a drink of good whisky except when they came to Memphis to be tried for violation of the revenue law or upon some other business. [Laughter,]

I protest, therefore, against this onslaught made by my colleague upon a large and profitable business in which so many of my constituents are engaged, as the only particular interest which his district has in the subject is the amount of whisky which his constituents drink, and the quantity manufactured in a few moonshime distilleries. [Laughter.] I hope, therefore, my colleague will change his mind and support the bill so that we may make good whisky, by keeping it in store for a while, out of the moonshime product of his district. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMONTON. When I alluded to the remarks of my colleague,

Mr. SIMONTON. When I alluded to the remarks of my colleague, on the day they were made, I was not aware of their full import. Since I have read them in the RECORD, however, they seem to me to reflect upon my constituents to such an extent as to demand some further attention at my hands. I am sure the gentleman intended them as a bit of pleasantry. He certainly did not mean that his words should be taken seriously. But it seems to me that his prancing humor and rollicking wit have run away with him. At any rate his remarks, though couched in the language of pleasantry and wit, contain year bread and uninet insignations against the results of the tain very broad and unjust insinuations against the people of the ninth congressional district of Tennessee.

The natural import of his language is to impute to my constituents a general dissipation with its attendant poverty and want of thrift, the characteristic of common violators of the revenue laws, &c., and that the trial of my people for such offenses was a notorious thing in the Memphis courts. Nothing is further from the truth. There is not, I believe, a single moonshiner in my district and has not been for years. I venture the assertion that there are as few violators of the revenue laws, and of the good order and laws of the land generally, in my district as anywhere in the whole country. There is among my people as little vagrancy, drunkenness, pauperism, or violations of law, and as much thrift, intelligence, honesty, and patriotism as may be found not only in the gentleman's but in any of the congressional districts in the land. The insinuation against my people natural to the language just read, and which I believe my colleague does not intend, is unjust and wholly untrue. And I believe he will disavow any intention to traduce or degrade the people whom I am very proud to represent here.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I ask the gentleman from Kentucky

Mr. CARLISLE to yield to me for a little while.

Mr. CARLISLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ten-

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I might perhaps be better able to reply to my colleague if I could incubate my remarks for two or three days, as he has done, and could possibly in that length of time formulate my remarks in language as chaste and eloquent as he has employed in his address; but I shall proceed at once, in order that he may have an opportunity for another reply, if he wishes to make one. I confess that I made a mistake the other day when I made the speech to which my colleague [Mr. Simonton] takes exception; and I find that I have gotten into trouble with other of my colleagues as well as him. I ought not to criticise the foibles of my fellow-men without frankly admitting my own. The truth about the matter is that I had been dining out the night before I made the speech that has given so much offense to my colleague, [Mr. Simonton,] and while I never drink myself, I do not know but what the fumes of the liquor drank by my associates on that occasion may have disordered my imagination and caused me to that occasion may have disordered my imagination and caused me to say things which were not in precise accordance with facts. [Laughter.] At least I am so advised by my colleague who sits behind me, [Mr. Whitthorne,] for he has just informed me that I did great injustice to his district as well as those of two or three others of my colleagues. [Laughter.] He insists that his own district was better entitled to the distinction which I have given to that of my colleague [Mr. Simonton] than any other in the State. [Laughter.] But I was the institute of the state. must do justice in this matter, and candor compels me to say that I really intended to mention the district so ably represented by my really intended to mention the district so ably represented by my distinguished senior colleague, Judge Bright. [Great laughter and applianse.] So it seems that my geography was at fault, and I located in the wrong place the district to which I allude. [Laughter.] Now I ask the pardon of my distinguished colleague [Mr. Bright] for having attributed to another district that which justly belongs to his, and I humbly apologize to my junior colleague [Mr. Simonton] for my inadvertence. [Laughter.]

It is somewhat surprising that I should have made such a mistake,

(but I am always blundering,) [laughter,] for I knew then as well as now that my friend from the ninth district was elected to Congress upon his well-known temperance record and that he holds when at home temperance mass-meetings in his district, every month, and is home temperance mass-meetings in his district, every month, and is one of the most distinguished followers of the great temperance apostle, Mr. Murphy. [Laughter.]

Mr. SIMONTON. My colleague had better take care, or he will compel me to rise to another personal explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. Very well, I am willing for you to have an opportunity to make every explanation you desire, though I do not think another one will be necessary, for I assure you that but for the supper the night before I never should have made the mistake you complain of. [Laughter.]

Now I want to say in all sincerity that what I said before was only a little piece of harmless humor, and I am quite sure that neither my

a little piece of harmless humor, and I am quite sure that neither my colleague nor any other gentleman can think that I intended the slightest unkind reflection upon either him or his constituents, for many of my best and truest friends are residents of his district, and many or my best and truest friends are residents of his district, and I know that in point of morality, respectability, and good citizenship they are not surpassed by any people in Tennessee.

I am glad to take this opportunity of saying that my colleague—
[the crying of an infant in the gallery at this point caused great amusement.] The speech of my colleague has created some sympathy for me in the gallery, anyhow, [laughter;] but perhaps to only a coming voter applanding my remarks though it may be that my a coming voter applauding my remarks, though it may be that my colleague has employed another ally to assail me, like the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. UPDEGRAFF.] [Laughter.]

As I was about to say when I was interrupted by applause in the gallery, [laughter,] the ninth congressional district of Tennessee never had, in my judgment, a better, more conscientious, upright, and wigilant Representative than it now has in the person of my friend Mr. Simonton, and he is a fitting successor of one of the ablest Representatives Tennessee ever had upon this floor, my friend Mr. William P.Caldwell. If his constituents do justice to him and themselves, they will not fail to return him. In his vote upon this question he has, I have no doubt, acted from an honest conviction of public duty in furtherance of what he believes to be the interest of those he represents. I hope now that my explanation has been satisfactory to my colleague. If it is not, I am willing to meet him at Sanderson's, which I suppose is the best place to settle a whisky quarrel. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. CARLISLE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. But-

Mr. CARLISLE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The temperance aspect of this case I do not propose to discuss. It has no place here and ought properly to be discussed in another arena; and my suspicion is that it is introduced here at this time not for the purpose of having any legitimate or proper influence upon the issue joined upon the pending bill, but rather for the purpose of intimidating some brethren who are thoroughly devoted to the temperance cause, and if possible arousing a suspicion in their minds that if they vote to perfect our system of internal-revenue laws they may be charged with having abandoned in a measure their advocacy of the temperance cause.

This bill has for its object the perfecting of the internal-revenue system, and has nothing whatever to do with the temperance cause. That question is not properly before this House, and it occurs to me that these temperance declamations while very good as oratorical ex-that these temperance declamations while very good as oratorical exercises neither throw any light upon the merits of this bill, nor do they in any wise tend to guide us in reaching a just conclusion in regard to any one of its features.

This bill is the result of the experience of nearly twenty years of administration of the internal-revenue laws. It was prepared after full and frequent interviews between the members of the Committee on Ways and Means and those who have administered the internal-revenue law for the last eight or ten years, and those who prepared the bill have addressed themselves, not to the favoring of any class, not to building up any particular interest, but simply to perfecting the system. What the Government wants is a fixed and certain revenue collected under a law wisely enacted and justly administered and one which weighs equally and impartially upon every branch of industry affected by it.

I will stop here to say that I have studied this measure carefully, for in reference to it I have been a little like the lover seated between the black and the blue eyed charmers; I "would have been happier the black and the blue eyed charmers; I "would have been happier with either were the other dear charmer away." Some of the gentlemen in my district oppose the passage of this bill, and I have studied the nature of that opposition and the facts on which it rests; and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] will bear me witness that I have labored to secure the fullest and freest investigation of every aspect of this question before the Ways and Means Committee. Representing a district that pays one-fifth of all the internal revenue collected on spirits in the United States, I have felt it to be my duty to examine the questions here involved with great care, because I do not want to be open to censure on the part of any one of the gentlemen I represent who are to be affected by its provisions.

The internal-revenue law is intended in all instances to collect tax upon the manufactured articles and not upon the article which is in upon the manufactured articles and not upon the article which is in the process of manufacture.

My honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. Garfield] has said very correctly that there are two ways of producing spirits intended for use.

One is by what is known as the system of redistillation, which gives a finished article in every respect, requiring neither time nor mechanical process to prepare it for the market. Upon that article you have assessed a revenue tax of ninety cents per gallon, and the manufact-assessed a revenue tax or fillety cents per gallon, and the manufacturers of the article pay that tax.

What else have you done? By a distinct enactment passed by the House and Senate you have relieved them from paying the tax upon the 5 per cent. which they lose in the process of redistillation. Why not tax them on that amount? Why not? There is the same reason for taxing the fusil-oils and foreign substances in one kind of whisky as in another? How is it with the Bourbon distillers? When their product comes from the still it is only in the wreet of manufacture. product comes from the still it is only in the process of manufacture; it is not then completed; it is never used in that condition, and we all know it. It still contains the fusil-oil and other elements which are poisons as deadly as prussic acid. What I insist upon as justice to them is that until their product is completely manufactured the tax should not attach to it. There is not a question about the correctness of that position.

rectness of that position.

What else do you propose? You say to one class of distillers that they shall not be assessed except upon their finished product. Formerly, as our friend from Kentucky [Mr. Carlisle] knows, having had large experience and practice under the internal-revenue law, this redistillation was never allowed in distilleries. Distillers had to turn out their raw product and pay the tax upon that. Now, by the law they were permitted to redistill their product, and they are enabled by the process of redistillation to remove from the spirit the fusel-oil and foreign and hurtful substances which the Bourbon distillers can remove from their spirit only by permitting it to ripen by age, and they—that is those who redistill—pay the tax on the balance, that is, the finished article. that is, the finished article.

Now, how is it with men engaged in the other branch of this industry? When their spirit in process of manufacture first runs from the still it is utterly unfit for use. The poisonous oils and other deleterious elements must be first expelled, and this is done by aging. It contains then all the hurtful oils which must be expelled or separated from it by some process. And the only process by which they can be expelled from this particular article is by ripening, and this requires from two to three years. When the manufacture of this article is completed, then the revenue tax should attach to it, and not until then.

What else? The whole course of your legislation in this country has always been to allow for evaporation and leakage until the present law was passed a few years ago, and against which this entire in-terest in the country protested. Now this bill proposes to place all branches of this great industry upon the same plane.

Gentlemen say that this business has been prosperous. That is not true in fact. One after another of the largest and wealthiest firms engaged in this business has gone down in the sea of bankruptcy. One of the constituents, I think, of my honorable friend from Pennsylvania, Judge Keller, as he stated before the Committee on Ways and Means has not a million of dellars in this gink hole writing for and Means, has put a million of dollars in this sink-hole, waiting for this unjust exaction to be removed.

My friend from Michigan, [Mr. Conger,] who is so concerned about the temperance aspect of this question, says that the Bourbon distillers, a year or two ago, asked that they might be relieved for a short period from paying this tax on their products, and stated that they were willing to pay 5 per cent. interest on that tax during that time. So they did, and you in your wisdom granted them that relief, because in the then condition of the country you knew it was but giving exact justice to them. Not that they esteemed it just to be compelled to pay the 5 per cent. interest, but it was better for them to pay that interest than to suffer bankruptcy and ruin.

What does the gentleman now propose? That these manufacturers what does the gentleman now propose? That these manufacturers shall pay 5 per cent. interest on all the product of their stills, and that while the article is in process of manufacture. Now, they ought not to pay this tax until the article is finished, until it is completely manufactured. Every man, whether he makes, deals in, or drinks Bourbon whisky, knows very well that it requires nearly three years to produce a Bourbon whisky which is ready for consumption. It is not till then that it can be in any proper sense regarded as a finished article.

Would you, then, assess a tax of ninety cents a gallon upon the raw material in the course of manufacture and make these men pay 5 per cent. interest on the amount which you ought not to assess or collect until the manufacture of the article is completed? That would be to exact from these men a greater rate of interest on the amount to become due the Government than this Government pays to its creditors—5 per cent. All that is asked is that there shall be no unjust discrimination against this branch of trade; that the measure of justice shall be the same to all engaged in this industry.

My honorable friend from Michigan [Mr. Conger] suggests that the My honorable friend from Michigan [Mr. Conger] suggests that the passage of this bill will reduce the revenue something like $2,000,000 a year. That is sheer speculation. The judgment of the best and ablest distillers and business men of this country is that if you place these men upon the same plane with the other distillers whom you have favored, it will increase the revenues much beyond what from present indications it will be reduced. There is no doubt about that. But suppose it will not increase it? Are you to cripple and burden a branch of this industry by withholding from it what is just and equitable? Is that the spirit in which to legislate? My friend says it will give this two millions to the whisky dealers. It does nothing of the kind. When you take the tariff off sugar it is simply as a matter the kind. When you take the tariff off sugar it is simply as a matter of justice to the men interested in its purchase or manufacture. When you reduce the tax upon whisky, it is a simple matter of justice to those engaged in manufacturing it or dealing in it. Whether we are temperance men or not, this is a matter of even-handed justice.

It will be recollected that one of the leading opponents of this bill, as stated by my friend from Illinois, [Mr. Fort,] has the largest distiller in this country. He does not however my a cent of tax to tillery in this country. He does not, however, pay a cent of tax to the Government. He exports the entire product of his stills. He was here just before the holiday adjournment—for what? To ask you to do that which in your justice you did—to take off the tax for leakage occurring between his distillery and the port of export. We did that—why? Because we said no man should pay tax upon that which he neither consumed nor sold. That is what we ask now, and that exporting distiller having secured his measure of relief would deny it to the Bourbon distillers, although they are entitled to it on the same ground and for a stronger reason.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman will remember that the liquor which goes out of the country does not pay any tax in any way.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that; but the gentleman from Michigan will remember-

Mr. CARLISLE. Will the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTER-WORTH] allow me a moment?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. CARLISLE. That which leaks out or evaporates from the package does not go out of the country.

Mr. CONGER. But all there is of it goes out of the country and pays no tax at all. Mr. CARLISLE. In this case that which evaporates from the packages does not go out of the country any more than in the other.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I was just going to make the same remark; that is, in either case it is lost absolutely and ought to pay no tax. We propose to make allowance here for what is a dead loss resulting from manufacturing. You say that men who finish their manufacturing by a mechanical process shall be allowed for leakage and shrinkage—why? We say that is just, and being just, it should apply equally and impartially to all branches of the great industry affected by it. If it is just to one, it is as clearly due to the other. [Here the hammer fell.] I hope the gentleman from Kentucky will allow me a few minutes more.

Mr. CARLISLE. I yield to the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. These men are allowed for leakage and shrinkage. Why? Because the article is not yet manufactured, is not in a condition to be used. Here are two branches of manufacture, adopting different processes. One turns out the article completely manufactured; and in that case there is a remission of tax. In the other case the tax is imposed upon the crude article; and as a result the law works an injustice, which this bill is intended to correct. result the law works an injustice, which this bill is intended to correct.

Before I conclude let me answer one other point. My friend from Illinois [Mr. Sparks] says that the seven and a half gallons will always be out of the package. Now, it is said upon this side that the value of the spirits naturally and necessarily increases. Let us put these two statements together. Upon this side it is argued that the whisky will be worth $1.50 per gallon. On the other hand my friend from Illinois argues that in order to save the ninety cents tax the manufacturers will throw away their $1.50 whisky. The two propositions are the same of the sitions taken together destroy each other.

It is said that this business is profitable. I can demonstrate that it has not been. I assert that the testimony of distillers all over the country, as taken before the committee, shows that the business has not been profitable. On the contrary, the Bourbon distillers have been freighted down, simply because you have discriminated against them. All I ask is that they be put upon the same plane with others in the same line of business. Having examined this question as fairly as I can from first to last, it seems to me that this is simply evenhanded justice. It does not rob the revenue; it is equal and exact justice between the different branches of this industry.

Mr. CONGER. Now I ask the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr.

Carlisle] to give me five minutes.

Mr. CARLISLE. I had promised to yield to the gentleman from

Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]
Mr. GARFIELD. Let the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] go on now.

Mr. CARLISLE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to consider the proposition made by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BUTTERWORTH.] He says that the distillers who redistill their whisky have a rebate of 5 per cent. on the redistillation; and he asks the same for the sour-mash distillers, whose product is ripened by time. They ask here seven and a half gallons on the package of forty gallons. What is the percentage?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman ought not to misstate the act. That is the maximum for three years.

fact. That is the maximum for three years.

Mr. CONGER. Very well. The proposition is for a rebate of taxation to the extent of seven and a half gallons upon the package of forty gallons, if that proportion should be found to have evaporated or to have been drank, or in any way to have been taken out of the barrel. This is a percentage of 20 per cent. and over.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No; not 20 per cent.

Mr. CONGER. If the gentleman will take seven and a half gallons from forty, the remainder will show that I am correct. Now, why should these distillers have this allowance of over 20 per cent.? The gentleman did not answer that part of the argument.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will, if the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman says that he wants "equal and exact justice" between these men. He also says that these distillers stated before the committee that they were not doing a good business. Now, the report shows that all the distillers who spoke upon the subject said that they were doing a swimming business now; were making up rapidly for all the losses of the last few years. No one of them makes any complaint on this subject. Even the gentleman who said that he had become bankrupt stated to the committee that his friends had saved his property, so that his profits now would save it to him. That was a Philadelphia gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY. In that case there was new capital of $900,000 which had been shrinking, and now, as appeared, it was beginning to build up. Mr. CONGER. Now, sir, I say on these three points there is for rebate of interest which was asked here a few years ago, and when, as the record of this House shows, it was asserted by myself and other gentlemen but a short time would elapse before these men would come and ask that also the interest be released, it was said it would not be asked, and yet it is. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is asked for that interest to be given up in the way of interest. There is $75,000 asked to be given up in the way of interest. There is $75,000 asked to be given up for issuing stamps for the benefit of these men alone, which the Government has to pay for and provide and do all the work about. And nearly $2,000,000 for leakage—and I want to emphasize it—for "suckage" from the barrels.

Mr. CARLISLE. Allow me to ask the gentleman a question. If there is to be any "suckage," as the gentleman calls it, by whom is it to be done?

it to be done?

Mr. CONGER. That is to be done by those interested in collusion with the officers of the United States.

Mr. CARLISLE. The officers have exclusive control of the spirits.
Mr. CONGER. Two million dollars might possibly, if a man had his price, find a purchaser. The inducement is bad for crooked whisky, and crooked manufacture, and bad gauging, and bad storehouse keeping. Let us at least try and not unnecessarily place temptation in the way of men intrusted with the carrying out and execution of the laws of the country.

Now, sir, I do not know the issue can be drawn more strongly than it is now, and when the votes are taken on this proposition I do not know that men can signify to the country and their constituents more positively, more decidedly what their views are on these questions than by such a vote as I hope we shall have of record.

Mr. CARLISLE. I yield now for five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD.]

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have already said all I care to say on the pending amendments to this bill; but I ask the attention of the House and the country to a matter which relates to the work of the Committee on Ways and Means, and especially to myself as a member of that committee. I think it will be interesting to the House to examine one of the methods by which news and public opinion are manufactured.

I hold in my hand a printed slip, about forty copies of which have come to me in the last five or six days from various quarters of the country. I will read the preliminary note and ask the members of the House to notice its character:

To the Editor

We are requested, by the publishers of several leading New York dailies as well as manufacturers of paper, to inclose to you the paragraph printed below. If you read it our object will have been attained. Your own interests will dictate what further use, if any, you will make of the suggestion it contains. We have no personal interest except to serve our friends, the publishers of newspapers in this and other States.

GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.

NEW YORK, April 21, 1880.

Below this letter on the same slip is a ready-made editorial which will have printed.

A MEMBER. Let it be read.

Mr. GARFIELD. The paper is as follows:

Mr. GARFIELD. The paper is as follows:

Whatever else may be doubtful about the intention of the authors of our tariff laws, they undoubtedly meant to place on the free list all materials used in the manufacture of paper. It happened that pulp of wood, which is by far the most important element in the manufacture of paper used by the daily and weekly press of the country, was not specifically and by name exempted from duty. Under a Treasury decision which lield that this verbal omission was fatal to the free admission of wood-pulp, a few manufacturers of that article have been able to impose an exorbitant tax on the general body of paper-makers, by whom it is of course shifted on the consumers, the newspaper publishers of the great cities—we, consequently, being impoverished so that a handful of monopolists may grow rich. The most powerful champion of these monopolists is Representative Garriers. Were his opposition to the bill withdrawn, the restoration of wood-pulp to the free list, where it belongs, would be accomplished in a few days. While his opposition continues the monopolists are secure. Can Mr. Garriers afford to continue his support of a most odious and oppressive tax which brings in no revenue to the Government, but which interferes very decidedly with the dissemination of knowledge among the people!

I am told that nine or ten thousand copies of this slip have been sent to editors of various newspapers of the United States. The advertising firm that transmits it does not claim to know anything concerning the truth of what is stated in the circular. No names are given of those who have asked the agency to send out this slip; but it is stated that certain publishers of leading New York dailies and certain paper manufacturers have requested the firm to distribute this slip. So without vouching for its truth-without pretending to know or care anything about it, and without saying who it is that makes these charges, this firm sends to nine thousand newspapers of the United States these charges against the Committee on Ways and Means generally, and closes with the particular charge that I hold the casting vote in that committee, and by my single vote prevent the action of the committee and consequently the action of this House on the which

I give this slip as a specimen of one of the ways in which opinions concerning public men and public measures are manufactured and circulated.

Probably five hundred newspapers, small and great, have already published this slip as an editorial. Few, if any, of them have printed with it the letter of the advertising firm that sent it; but the slip itself is printed as an editorial statement of the truth of the case to

Now, for myself and for the sake of the truth, I wish the House to note this method of manufacturing public opinion.

Mr. BAYNE. It shows Rowell & Co. are good advertisers.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Ways and Means consists of thirteen members. Five of the thirteen are republicans; eight are democrats. Now, this advertising firm and the editors who adopt their irresponsible card would have the American people believe that I hold the casting vote in that committee on this subject, and that during the six or eight weeks since the question of the duty on paper has been before the committee I have held the casting vote and have prevented the committee and the House from acting. I say in reply that every member of that committee, without distinction of party, knows that this statement of the circular is absolutely false and without any shadow of foundation. I say every member of the committee knows it; and yet not a day passes in which forty or fifty newspapers in the land do not contain this charge in almost the identical words of the advertising agency.

I say furthermore for myself, without disclosing any secrets of the committee, that it is perfectly well known that not only I but several of my associates upon that committee have for weeks expressed our willingness to have this subject brought into the House as a separate measure; but the chief question has been whether it should be brought in as a separate measure or as a part of a general tariff bill.

Mr. FROST. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly. Mr. FROST. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he is in favor of or opposed to free paper?

Mr. GARFIELD. I may not state what has taken place in the committee, but I will say for myself, only, that the protected articles in the tariff laws average about 45 per cent. ad valorem. The duty on paper-pulp and printing-paper pay 20 per cent. ad valorem, less than one-half of the average of all protected articles; but because this brings in only a small revenue to the Government, I am willing for one-and have been willing from the beginning of this discussionand I think I may speak for other gentlemen on the committee, to reduce the duty on paper and the materials of its manufacture as low as it can possibly be reduced without destroying or crippling the in-dustries with which it is connected. Beyond that I am not willing to go on any account, or under any pressure from any quarter. [Applause.]

Mr. CARLISLE. If no other gentleman desires to discuss this matter, I shall now ask a vote upon the various

Mr. BARBER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a few moments?
Mr. CARLISLE. Yes, sir.
Mr. BARBER. I ask the indulgence of the House for a very brief time. I had read here to-day the names of a number of distillers in the city of Chicago to show the House that the sentiment among distillers is not as represented by some gentlemen who have spoken upon this subject, or as entertained by the distillers at Peoria. My friend from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] has seen fit to intimate that I had the Now, sir, it is but fair that the sentiment of the trade in this country should be known. These expressions of sentiment were found in the testimony taken before the Committee on Ways and Means, and I may be permitted to add that but one or two of these establishments belong in my district. They are scattered throughout the three congressional districts represented upon this floor.

I am as much in favor of temperance, good order, and sobriety as any man on this floor. I am as much opposed to pauperism, crime, and disorder, the outgrowth of intemperance, and to all the evils that flow from excessive alcoholic drinking, as any man here. And I am ready to join in any reasonable effort to cure such evils, and did I suppose that any one of these interests was to the remotest extent involved in this bill, I should hesitate in regard to my action thereon; but I do not believe that any one of these interests is involved to

I have the honor, Mr. Speaker, to represent in part on this floor a great commercial emporium, one of the greatest in this country or in the world, and I believe that the people of that city, in keeping with the fundamental principles which underlie real prosperity, are in favor of the utmost liberality to all the great branches of trade and commerce. And I agree fully with the sentiment so well expressed by the gentleman from Cincinnati, that this is a measure affecting the revenue—not a temperance or anti-temperance measure, but rather an effort to perfect the internal-revenue laws of the country—in their application to an interest or branch of trade which already yields a large amount of revenue and promises increase for the future, and for these reasons I support the bill.

Mr. CARLISLE. Some things have been said in this debate to which I would like to reply; but, inasmuch as it is growing late, I believe it is my duty to call for a vote on the amendments.

The SPEAKER. Unless a separate vote be demanded on the several amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole, the Chair will submit the question on them in gross.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The next amendment, being the first amendment of Mr. Conger, on which a separate vote was to be allowed in the House, was read, as follows:

Add to line 83, on page 6, as follows:

Provided, That in case of the non-payment of the tax on any distilled spirits within one year from the date of the original warehousing bond for such spirits, interest shall accrue upon said tax at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from and after the expiration of said year until the tax shall be paid. Such interest shall be collected with the tax in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 63, noes 66.

Mr. CONGER demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 58, nays 101, not voting 133; as follows:

The SPEAKER. It is suspension day after the call of States. The Chair will examine the point, but as at present advised he thinks the bill will come up on Tuesday after the reading of the Journal if the House should now adjourn. House should now adjourn.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

Mr. THOMPSON, of Iowa, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:
An act (H. R. No. 2253) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee.

SPEECHES OF M. THIERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of State; which was read, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, April 24, 1880.

Sm: I have the honor to transmit herewith a package containing the first seven volumes of the speeches of M. Thiers, which Madame Thiers, the widow of that distinguished French statesman, desires this Department to present to the library of the House of Representatives on her behalf.

I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM M. EVARTS.

Hon. Samuel J. Randall, Speaker House of Representatives.

The communication was laid on the table.

NATIONAL BOARD OF HEALTH.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report of the operations and expenditures of the National Board of Health for the quarter ending March 31, 1880; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

ROBERT P. WILSON.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting the petition of officers of the Fifth Cavalry relative to the restoration to the Army of Robert P. Wilson, late captain Fifth Cavalry; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BOUNTY AND BACK-PAY CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, in response to a resolution of the House calling commutation of for information as to the cause of the delay in payment of claims for on War Claims.

bounty and back pay; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT POINT CONCEPTION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relative to the necessity for an appropriation to purchase a site for a light-house at Point Conception, California; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. McMahon, for two weeks from Monday, on account of im-portant business;

To Mr. VANCE, for next week;
To Mr. Myers, indefinitely;
To Mr. Pound, for ten days, on account of important business; and

To Mr. NICHOLLS, for two weeks from Wednesday next.

DESK OF THOMAS JEFFERSON.

Mr. WILSON, of West Virginia. A few days ago the desk upon which the immortal Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence was presented to the United States. Many members of this House desire that the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress upon that occasion shall be published. At their suggestion, I now ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein,) That there be printed 10,000 copies of the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress upon the presentation to the United States by J. Randal Coolidge and others of the desk upon which Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence, 7,000 copies to be for the use of the House of Representatives and 3,000 copies for the use of the Senate.

Mr. BREWER. Let that resolution go to the Committee on Printing.

The resolution was accordingly referred to the Committee on Print-

BELINDA CURTIS.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. On Friday last the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Mr. KIRKWOOD. On Friday last the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Ingalls] reported from the Committee on Pensions adversely a bill (H. R. No. 2407) granting a pension to Belinda Curtis, and it was indefinitely postponed. I was either not in my seat at the time the report was made or did not hear the report, although I was aware it was to be made. I desire to have the bill put upon the Calendar. The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the vote by which the bill was indefinitely postponed will be reconsidered, and the bill will be placed upon the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee. The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

CYCLONE IN MISSISSIPPI.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) authorizing the Secretary of War to send rations to the sufferers from the recent cyclone at Macon, Mississippi, and it was read twice by its title.

Mr. BRUCE. I ask unanimous consent that that joint resolution be passed at once. The people are in great distress, and I presume there will be no objection to considering it at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded, as in Committee of the Whole, to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the regular order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is the call of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think we ought to go on with the regular order. We shall reach this in a little while.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont insists on the

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not object.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Some Senator did object.

Mr. CONKLING. And then notice was given that it would be

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I gave notice that I would call it up to-day. If objection is made, I will move to postpone the consideration of the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin moves to postpone the pending order, which is the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 20, noes 25.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

this case up at any time outside of the morning hour, but I cannot vote to take it up in the morning hour. It is injustice to do it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Some time ago I moved to take it up out of the morning hour, but the Senate was not in favor of that motion. I became satisfied that if it were taken up at all it must be taken up in the morning hour, and consequently I gave notice on Thursday last that to-day in the morning hour, after the routine business of the morning hour had been disposed of, I would move to take

Mr. HOAR. We are in the habit of hearing in the Senate and in the country denunciations of men whose doctrines it is supposed tend to bring the public credit into disrepute. I do not see why the public faith is not quite as much brought into disrepute when the Gov-lie faith is not quite as much brought into disrepute when the Government refuses to pay an honest obligation which is not expressed in the form of a bond. We do not observe the public faith merely because the country is to make something out of it, but because good faith is something which is to be observed in and of itself.

It seems to me that this keeping, as is the habit of the Senate, honest claims against the Government from being discussed and decided is a reproach to the conduct of public legislation. I heard a very highly respected member of this body observe the other day about this claim that it was probably a bad one, it was so old. That was all the reason he expressed for objecting to its consideration.

These claims come here year after year. The Committee on Claims consider them. Then they never are taken up unless they are absolutely free from any objection. This claim was considered by the consider them. Then they never are taken up unless they are absolutely free from any objection. This claim was considered by the Committee on Claims very carefully, and the Committee on Claims reported to the Senate a recommendation that it should be referred to the Court of Claims with some very careful and stringent provisions as to its consideration there; and on full debate the Senate said no, it is not a fit case to refer to the Court of Claims, and recommitted it to the Committee on Claims with express direction to examine the testimony themselves.

Mr. CONKLING. And that was in the last Congress, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. HOAR. That was in the last Congress. Thereupon the Committee on Claims appointed a competent sub-committee, who gave a great deal of time, hours and days, to the consideration of the claim, reported it to the full committee, and the full committee considered it.

If the Senate now consider this claim and vote it down on full consideration, that is one thing, and a very proper thing if that is the judgment of the Senate; but I cannot see any distinction in principle between the repudiating of Government bonds and the perpetual and constant refusal to consider the private claims of individuals against the Government.

Mr. INGALLS. The burning zeal of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Mr. INGALLS. The burning zeal of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] for the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar finds an interesting commentary in the fact that since we have been under the Anthony rule we have consumed six consecutive days in the consideration of a bill for pensioning a scout, and have already employed all the time during the morning hour for five days in the consideration of the bill relative to the appointing of certain non-commissioned officers upon the retired list in the Army. This rule, as it has been administered at this session of Congress, is a delusion and a snare. Whenever it has suited the convenience of any Senator to object to a bill it has gone over, but the Calendar has remained practically as it was before, the entire time being consumed in the discussion of bills to which there was very serious objection.

In regard to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, it is within

In regard to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, it is within the memory of many Senators that this case has been under consideration at a previous Congress. It was referred to the Committee on Claims with express instructions to examine and report upon the merits of the case. That report is before the Senate, and unless it is acted upon there will be a practical denial of justice to a worthy man, as I believe, in favor of a sentimental adherence to a rule that is practically disregarded every day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I believe the rules of the Senate, which everybody observes, absolutely prohibit discussion on the merits of the question on a motion to postpone in order to take it up, so as not to waste time in taking sundry experimental jumps before we come to the stile. But the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Kansas have opened the merits of this question, about which I know

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Vermont pardon me? I think—
I am quite sure, I have said nothing about the merits of the case. I avoided it as scrupulously as possible.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As scrupulously as my friend could, but nobody could fail to see—that is, I think nobody could—that it was a discussion leading up to, and therefore involving, the merits of this question. Perhaps I am mistaken; if I am I take back all I have said; I do not think I am, however.

The theory of the rule that we are now acting under is that a case that has once been passed over shall not be taken up again unless it was passed over on account of the absence of some Senator, when it would not have been objected to at all if he had been here, until we have given all the other claims and cases on the Calendar a fair chance. There are one or two cases reported from the committee of chance. There are one or two cases reported from the committee which I am a member, of great importance to a great many persons privately and to public interests as well, that have gone over in this same way; but I have not felt at liberty to move to take them up, on the ground of giving fair play to others still below that have not been objected to. Without this rule I should be very glad to try the sense of the Senate on one or two cases of that kind.

In respect of cases of this general character of claims upon the good faith of the Government, every man who makes a contract with the Government, either express or implied, that creates any duty on the part of the Government to pay him anything, either by express contract or by implied contract, has a legal means open to him by act of Congress, and that is the Court of Claims, to try his question. All cases that fall inside of that provision should not be here at all. All those that fall outside of it, where there is no contract, express or implied, fall within the range of some sort of general equity or moral sense, governed by no particular rule, and I do not think the public faith is greatly involved in getting on as fast as we can with them all in that we do not take up any particular one. That is all I wish to say, except to hope that we shall stick to this rule as long as it is, for we shall do better by taking every case in its turn and so going through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin, to postpone the pending order, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the following report:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Ben Holladay, praying compensation for spoliations by Indians on his property while engaged in carrying the mails of the United States under a contract with the United States, and for damages and expenses incurred in consequence of the change of his mailroute in compliance with the military orders, and for property taken and used by the military forces of the United States, has considered the said petition and submits the following report thereon:

On the 26th day of November, 1877, the Senate Committee on Claims, having had this case under consideration, reported a bill (S. No. 346) referring the said claim of Mr. Holladay to the Court of Claims. The bill was accompanied by a report, of which the following is a copy:

"This memorial was presented in the Senate during the Forty-fourth Congress and was referred to the Committee on Claims. It was considered by that committee, and on the 17th day of January, 1877, it was reported back to the Senate, accompanied by a written report. Your committee have gone carefully over all the papers in the case, which are voluminous, and we adopt the report made by the Senate committee on Claims to the Forty-fourth Congress, which is as follows:

"The memorialist avers in his memorial, in brief, that he is a citizen of the United States; that from the year A. D. 1860 until the 13th day of November, A. D. 1866, he was contractor for the transportation of the United States mails on what was then known as the Overland Mail Route, between the Missouri River and Salt Lake City, in the Territory of Utah; that in the performance of his service in the transportation of the United States mails on the transportation of the United States m afty men; that he was, at great expense, compelled to erect buildings, houses, stables, stations, and shelters for the convenience, shelter, and protection of his men and animals along said mall-route and its tributaries; and also to provide, at great expense of cost and transportation, large supplies of food, forage, and wod.

"It is further alleged that, while so engaged in the discharge of his duties as such contractor, his service was interfered with, impeded, and obstructed by large and numerous bands of Indians, who murdered his agents, servants, and employes, captured and carried away large numbers of his borses and mules, burned his storehouses, station-houses, barns, stables, large quantities of forage, provisions, wag, properly conducting the business of the transportation of the United States over said route, and which he was compelled to replace at great expense and with tedions delays and damage in order to enable him to continue properly to perform such postal service for the United States Government.

"The memorialist further complains that after he had erected his buildings, as hereinbefore stated, and secured his supplies for men and horses, &c., at his several stations along said mall-route, he was compelled, in consequence of the Indian depredations, by military orders, to abandon a large number of his buildings and stations and to op grant order to the such as a secure of the supplies, and to change the line of compelled, on making such changes, to erect new buildings, stations, houses, barns, &c., with constantly increasing expenses and losses.

"The memorialist further avers that while so engaged in the transportation of the Government troops and the Government agents, and by them used for the benefit of the Government to the build day of January of that year his petition for his losses, as stated, that his claims were presented to Congress in A. D. discount to the work of the such as a second of the second his supplies and the such of the second his mall contractor, and did carry the Unit

""J. Sin: I am directed to furnish your line complete protection against hostile Indians, which I can only do by its removal from the Platte to the Cut-off route. As it now runs, I am compelled to protect two lines instead of one. You will therefore remove your stock to the Cut-off route, which will enable me to use troops retained for an active campaign against these disturbers of public safety.

""I am, sir, with respect, your obedient servant.
""J. M. CHIVINGTON, ""Colonel, Commanding District.

" BEN HOLLADAY, Esq.,
" Proprietor Overland Stage Line.

"'Your committee find that, in pursuance of this military order, said Ben Holladay removed his stage-line from the route it was then on, from Junction City to sixty miles northwest from Denver City, over and on to an entire new route, many miles—an average of thirty miles—distant from the old route, and for a distance in length of about one hundred and forty miles; that in making his change of route in accordance with said military order said Holladay was put to great cost and expense in removing barns, houses, stations, corrals, stock, provisions, and other property and was necessarily compelled to abandon other houses, stations, barns, and other property of value that could not be moved to the new route.

"'Your committee further find that large quantities of hay, grain, and other supplies, belonging to said memorialist, were taken by the military authorities, underdirection of military commanders of the United States forces, and by them used in the subsistence of Government troops then in service on the plains along the line of said overland mail-route, and for which no compensation was ever made; that the amount and value, respectively, of property lost and abandoned by reason of said military order, and of property so taken and used by the military authorities as a necessity for the use of the Government troops, and the cost and expense of changing said mail-route, do not definitely appear from the evidence in the case.

"'To summarize: Your committee find that the grounds of relief presented by memorial and evidence are of the three following classes:

"'First. For property taken and destroyed by hostile bands of Indians, which property belonged to memorialist, and was, at the time the same was so taken and destroyed, being used by him as a mail contractor in the business of the transportation of the United States mails through an Indian country, and at a time during which the Government of the United States, through its agents, the President and the Postmaster-General, had given assurances of protection against Indian depredations, and against which depredations the Government of the United States attempted, so far as in its power, through its military arm, to protect memorialist;

"Second. For property abandoned and lost necessarily, and the cost and expense of transferring other property, by reason and in pursuance of a military order of the United States Government; and "Third. For the value of property, hay, grain, and other supplies, belonging to memorialist, taken and used by the military authorities of the United States for the use and benefit of the Government of the United States." "As to the liability of the Government of the United States." "As to the liability of the Government in the judgment of your committee, in the judgment of your comment in equity and good conscience on the memorialist for the claims specified in the two classes last designated, there can, in the judgment of your comment in equity and good conscience on the facts presented in the class first specified. And your committee, in determining this question, have carefully considered it, not only no principle and in the light of that well-established relation existing between the Government and its contractors engaged in the transportation of the mails, but also in the light of legislative precedents. The question, while it bears a certain degree of sameness to the liability of the General Government to the individual clizen not engaged in performing Government service, to make compensation for damages resulting from Indian depredations, is not that case, but, on the contary, quite another and different of the contingency be decided in the affirmative, (and upon that question the committee do not pass). A fortion may the question as to the duty of the Government of afford protection to its mail contractors engaged in the business of transportation of the United States mails through an Indian country, and to make just compensation on fallure to give such protection, be decided in the same way. The case under consideration, furthermore, is peculiarly exceptional, from the fact that protection was repeatedly affirmatively guaranteed by the Government, and from other circumstances berein state under the continuent foundations of empire on the coast-line of the Pacific. Mail communication became a necessity between the East and the extreme West, and the track of that communication lay, of necessity, across a wilderness inhabited by hostile and savage men.

"To establish a mail-route and force the mails over it was an undertaking upon the part of the Government that challenges a parallel in the history of mail transportation, commands admiration, and is highly illustrative and characteristic of the indomitable enterprise and unyielding energy of the American people; for no government in the world ever before established weekly, much less daily, lines of mail service over hundreds and thousands of miles of waste desert and unsettled country even in the absence of dangers incident to a country infested with hostile bands of depredatory Indians. The Government availed itself of the private enterprise of its citizen, the memorialist, to perform this hazardous service, and the obligation, in equity and good conscience, to protect him and his property when Indian hostilities commenced, which was subsequent to the commencement of this service, was at once acknowledged by the Government. That the Government so understood it at the time is plainly evident from the fact that it did attempt to afford such protection by placing a portion of the United States Army along the line of said route, and by changing a portion of said line by military order, to the end that more complete protection might be afforded. If the Government failed in its protection, it was not the fault of him who undertook its business; and if it did fail without any lack of diligence or good faith upon the part of the contractor, and by reason of such failure the contractor suffered in the loss of his property, we are of the opinion that, under the exceptional circumstances of this case the Government should make that loss good. It should be borne in mind, moreover, that during most of the time covered by the depredations complained of there were peculiar and pres an equitable obligation of the strongest possible character upon the part of the Government to make just compensation for losses sustained by the contractor by reason of a failure to furnish full and adequate protection.

"'While, as has been said, the principle is not involved in this case, it may be said, in passing, that the obligation and duty of protecting citizens of the United States in their passage through Territories infested by hostile tribes of savages, or settling permanently in said Territories infested by hostile tribes of savages, or settling permanently in said Territories, have been frequently conceded by the Government. Congress has, year after year, appropriated public money and kept an army in the field, or ready to take the field for this purpose. Acts of indemnity by the Government for losses by private citizens, and by citizens engaged in the Government service, by depredations of hostile Indians have been very frequent. In the case of Magraw, mail contractor from July, A. D. 1834, to August, 1856, on route from Independence, Missouri, to Salt Lake, (almost this identical route,) the Government gave him, by special enactment, $17,750, for losses in stock, stations, and supplies, through Indian depredations, during the two years he was engaged in transporting the United States mails on said route. As early as A. D. 1836, Saltmarsh, Avery & Co., mail contractors in Georgia and Alabama, lost their property by the Creek Indians. The Government, by special enactment, paid them for their losses $9,779 (see Statutes at Large, volume 6, page 882.) In the case of Livingston, Kinkead & Co., merchants of Salt Lake City, one of the firm, not in the Government employ, but traveling on the business of the firm as a passenger merely in one of Magraw's coaches, had in his possession $10,000 in coin; the Indians attacked the coach and robbed the passengers; among other things they robbed this passenger of the $10,000. The Government pospecial enactment from a failure to protect him, which is carrying the Sterling. The Indians stole and carried away a portion of the cattle, and Congress, by a special enactment, indemnified Hogan for the loss. Numerous other precedents might be quoted to show that Congress has frequently recognized the existence of an obligation on the part of the Government, under exceptional and hard dian depredations.

"Your committee therefore, on both principle and precedent, feel constrained, under the peculiar and exceptional circumstances presented by this case, to recognize the existence of an obligation on the part of the Government to Indemnify the memorialist for whatever loss he sustained, through no fault of his own, by reason of Indian depredations, while engaged in transporting said United States and or Indian depredations, while engaged in transporting said United States and or a row to willing that the value and amount of property taken, or the loss suffered by the memorialist, should be determined on exparts affidavits alone; but believing that it is a case wherein the rights of the Government can only be properly protected by an excresise of the privilege of cross-examination and by a thorough investigation in a court of competent jurisdiction, wherein the Government shall investigation in a court of competent jurisdiction, wherein the Government shall investigation in a court of competent jurisdiction, wherein the Government shall investigation; but, for the reasons herein stated, would refer the claims of mediants's witnesses, but also to call witnesses of its own, shall exist, your committee decline to grant the prayer of memorialist, and for such purpose report back the accompanying bill and recommend its passage, with, however, the distinct statement that nothing herein stated shall be regarded as a rule or precedent fixing the liability of the Government to mail contractors in any case wherein the peculiar properties of the contract of the claims of memorialist to the Court of Claims."

"This report is adopted to the Committee on Claims, with instructions in the properti destroyed by the Indians, (February 2, 1865,) embracing part of Colorado, Nebraska, and a portion of Utah.

"The committee also examined at length Bela M. Hughes, of Denver, Colorado, who for several years, while Holladay was carrying the overland mail, was the attorney and general agent for said Holladay in his said business.

"The committee state that the testimony of the wintesses by it taken, namely, of the said Carlyle, Spotswood, Hooker, Street, Craig, George K. Otis, Mitchell, and Holladay, taken and printed under resolution of the Senate as well as the testimony of Colonel Charles G. Otis, of the United States Volunteers, in behalf of the claimant, taken by the committee under the same resolution.

"The last-mentioned witness was an officer on duty on the said stage line from the summer of 1865 to the month of July, 1866, and had personal knowledge of Indian hostilities, the expense of the erection of buildings, the cost of grain and hay, the price of horses, and the value of the station destroyed at Little Laramie, on the said stage line, during the period of his service in that disturbed region.

"The committee also exhibit to the Senate the affidavits of the witnesses here-tofore filed with the committee on behalf of the claimant, namely, of Pease, Flenus, Murray, Slade, Babecck, Bromley, Reid, Johnson, Eaton, Carlyle, Riddle, Lloyd, Ivins, Jerome, Thomas, Reynolds, Murphy, Hudnut, Quinn, Hughes, Brewer, Stewart, Spotswood, and Trotter, and printed under said resolution of the Senate last mentioned, together with the order of Colonel John M. Chivington, colonel commanding the district of Colorado, ordering in the year 1864 the change of part of the route on which the claimant was then transporting the United States mails.

"The committee state that the evidence submitted tends to show the state of Indian hostilities and depredations along and upon the overland stage line, owned by the claimant, at various periods of time, from the year 1864 to the fall of the year 1866, as well as that, for want of s which facts are embodied in other evidence taken before the committee.

"The winness states that all he knew of the business or operations of the stage line was in regard to that part thereof which was east of Fort Kearney. He was engaged on the line in 1864, when he was seventeen years of age, and quit at mineteen years of age.

"He gives some evidence in regard to three or four horses which had only strayed away while he was there, and were subsequently recovered, and which seem not to have been claimed as lost.

"He also stated that the stations of the line east of Kearney were principally constructed of logs and covered with earth and poles, but could give no estimate in regard to their value.

"Mr. Foote, called on part of the United States, stated that he was paid $1,500 for putting up the Pine Grove and Bridger's Pass stations, which were very plain.

"These stations, Mr. Foote states, were destroyed in 1867, after Holladay had sold out (Xovember previous) all his interest in the stage line, and the only damage to either of these stations derived by Holladay is for injury to and depredation of proper has station, May 19, and May 26, 136, of $2,100, the stations being destroyed after Holladay's ownership ceased.

"In regard to the loss of stock by Holladay Mr. Foote knew nothing, but gave evidence in regard to the price of corn at Fort Laramie in 1862, and at Fort Halleck in 1864, and rates the same at ten to twelve cents per pound at these places and dates. This proof is not applicable, as no claim is made for grain destroyed and taken at various dates on the stage line; and in his behalf the committee on the part of claimant is satisfactory in regard to the value of the grain destroyed and taken at various dates on the stage line; and in his behalf the committee on the house of David Street, the paymaster of the stage line, the widence of David Street, the paymaster of the stage line, and in his behalf the committee on the part of the same form less to the state line of the prices of grain in that regio that fort.

"This witness also testified in regard to the probable cost of the stations at Pass Creek and Medicine Bow, neither of which was destroyed, and neither involved in this investigation, save the injury to the corral at the latter. He also gave evidence in regard to the value of the property, houses and barns, burnt at Julesburgh, but the evidence of others is opposed to his testimony, and was given by those who had better opportunities to know the value of that property and its costs. He also gave evidence in regard to the probable cost of Little Laramie station, burnt on Spotswood's division in 1865; but the committee has preferred to take the valuation given by Mr. Spotswood, who had means of knowing the cost and value thereof, whose reputation was so well established by witnesses on both sides of this case, and whose demeanor before the committee left such a favorable impression of the witness. Besides, the witness Murdock was, at the time he was stationed on the stage line, not exceeding twenty-three years of age, a bugler in the service, and could not have acquired much experience in the cost and value of building, and more particularly in a country where the expense of constructing houses and barns—structures of any kind—was very great as compared with the construction in other places, and it does not appear that he had been engaged in any such work, and became thus competent to testify with certainty in the premises. This witness, Murdock, also testified that 'Holladay had a just and valid claim against the Government;' and further stated that 'all he found fault with was that he had claimed too much for property destroyed; but that he might be mistaken about claimed too much for property destroyed; but that he might be mistaken about

"But to conclude this point and confirm the opinion we have arrived at in regard to the loss of the station at Little Laramie, we take the evidence of Colonel Charles G. Otis, of the United States Volunteers, who was stationed on the stage line and was acquainted with that station, and who gives his opinion against that of the witness Murdock, and in his testimony before the committee says that he should think 'the cost of it would be $3,000 to $3,500, with its surroundings, stables, and think 'the cost of it would be $3,000 to $3,500, with its surroundings, stables, and corrals generally.'

"The witness Murdock testified that, in his opinion, '$10,000 would put up all the buildings that were at Julesburgh in 1883, when he saw them last. His evidence is controverted by the evidence of George K. Otis, who was familiar with the property there, and also by the evidence of Colonel Edward F. Hooker, both of whom were men of mature age and experience, and had been a long time conversant with business, and were less likely to err in a matter of computation of value than a young man of twenty-three years of age, who did not show that he had any experience in such matters, the evidence of Messrs. Otis and Hooker being maintained fully by the evidence of David Street, so long in the service of the stage line and familiar with the property of the same.

"Your committee also exhibit to the Senate the testimony taken on the part of the United States, printed under the resolution last mentioned, namely, Robert Foote, T. B. Murdock, and N. F. Frazier, which is elsewhere referred to in this report.

"Your committee also exhibit to the Senate the testimony taken on the part of the United States, printed under the resolution last mentioned, namely, Robert Foote, T. B. Murdock, and N. F. Frazier, which is elsewhere referred to in this report.

"After a careful examination of all the testimony in this case your committee have decided to adhere to the conclusion arrived at in their former report as to the right of the memorialist Holladay, in equity, to compensation on account of the claims made by him; and this opinion has been strengthened and confirmed by the examination of several important witnesses on the part of the claimant, whose exparte affidavits had been filled theretofore in the case, as well as other important witnesses who had not been called to testify previously."

"Your committee find, from the evidence adduced in this case, that in the summer of the year 1862, in consequence of Indian hostilities, about three hundred miles of the mail line of the claimant was so damaged, broken up, and infested by Indians as to compel its abundonment by the claimant, under approval of the Post-Office Department and of the officer in command of the millitary forces assigned to protect the overland mails, and to select a route farther south, involving the establishment of a new line altogether for a distance in length of over five hundred miles, and distant from one hundred to three hundred miles from the old line, thus transferring the transportation of the mails from the North Platte and Sweetwater route to the route known as the route through Laramic Plains, Bridger's Pass, and along Bitter Creek, and your committee find that this removal was an absolute necessity; that, as stated by General James Craig in his evidence before the committee, it was not possible to protect the line against the Indians, and it could only be kept up "with the consent of the Indians themselves," and that the claimant was promised both protection to his conduct of the mails and indemnity for his losses by the President of the Unit tails.)

"Your committee further report that the evidence tends strongly to show that the damages sustained by the memorialist Holladay, while carrying the mail of the United States, by reason directly of depredations and hostilities of the Indians along his route, was $369,739; which sum, added to the other sums above found, makes a total of $526,739 damages sustained by said memorialist in the discharge of his duties in the carrying of the mails. (See Appendix D for details.)

"The mails were, at a critical period, carried with a courage and fidelity which deserve recognition at the hands of the Government. The aggregate of the losses is large, but this surely is not a good reason why they should not be settled or paid. The memorialist has now been pressing his claim upon Congress for twelve years.

"Before concluding this report, your committee would call the attention of the Senate to the action of Congress in like case, cited in the former report of their committee, as well as to its action relieving John R. Beckley, a mail contractor injured by the results of war during the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865, in the State of Kentucky. There are many precedents for such action since the foundation of this Government, dictated by a sound discretion and sense of justice to its citi-

"We would also cite the action of Congress, in the claim of Elbridge Gerry, of Colorado Territory, for losses by Indian hostilities, the report of the Committee on Indian Affairs of the Senate therein made by Mr. Corbett, a Senator from Oregon, (No. 38, second session Forty-second Congress, dated February 12, 1872,) with the accompanying bill, which was passed June 10, 1872, and will be found at page 701 of volume 17 of General Statutes of United States, allowing him $13,000.

"The cost of removal from the North Platte and Sweet Water, or South Pass route, to the route through Bridger's Pass, along Laramie Plains and Bitter Creek, sometimes called the Cherokee Trail, or Butes Creek route, and the damages incident to it, is shown by the affidavit of Colonel Isaac E. Eaton (page 12) in the printed copies of evidence. He was superintendent of the Overland Mail Line under Holladay, in 1862, when the Indian raids, detailed in his evidence, were perpetrated. He states that Holladay was compelled to abandon twenty-six stations, worth $2,000 each, and a large amount of forage and other articles of value, necessary to the running of the line, of the amount of which he could form no true estimate; but Holladay, who had to pay for supplies to replace those lost on the old line, and abandoned under the enforced removal, states (page 63 of printed evidence) that the sum of $25,000 would not cover these losses.

"Under the circumstances, the line being changed in the face of hostile savages, it must be apparent that no exact computation could be made of the various articles of equipment existing necessarily at each of the twenty-six abandoned stations, as the removal was a retreat in the face of a vigilant and dangerous foe, in the midst of actual hostilities, and under the apprehension of destruction to the lives of the employés. There could have been no time for anything like taking account of the articles left behind. The hostile attitude of the savages is abundantly proven by General Craig, who stated that the line could only have been kept up 'by consent of the Indians; and the removal ordered was a wise measure in all respects." (Page 55 of printed evidence.) David Street, an officer of the line, (page 51 of printed evidence,) testifies to the abandonment of a great deal of valuable property, owing to the hasty manner of the removal; and also that the stations abandoned were of a substantial character, all of them; and has that the stations abandoned

"APPENDIX B.

"APPENDIX B.

"The cost of removal from the Platte River route to the so-called Cut-off route by order of Colonel Chivington, is shown by the evidence (page 56) of George K. Otis, who gave instructions for it, as he was then acting as superintendent of the line.

"He states that he made an estimate of the cost, knowing the number of teams necessary, the distance to haul, as well as an estimate of the loss of grain and hay in removal, and that he is well satisfied that it did cost $50,000; fully that, if not more.

"David Street (page 51 of the evidence) sustains 0tis in the statement he makes that the line was subjected to heavy losses in consequence of the removal.

"The evidence of the claimant is to the effect that he objected to removal, stating to the military officer that winter was on him, the stations then supplied, the grain-sacks emptied into bins, and the sacks sent off to be filled again, fuel procured, &c.; and that the stations had to be pulled down, hauled, and put up again; all which he represented to that officer.

"Edward F. Hooker (page 48 of evidence) states that, in his opinion, the loss of hay and grain, and putting up new stations, the labor of removal, &c., would cost not under $5,000 a station.

"George H. Carlyle (page 35 of evidence) stated that the sum of $50,000 for removing the station, and the loss of grain and hay and corrals, and wood, &c., was not too great. His evidence is very full on the subject, and minutely describes the process of removing stations, and the distance for removal from twenty-five to sixty miles.

"William Reynolds, superintendent of the line, (page 20 of the evidence,) also states matter of importance in regard to the damage by removal, showing the nature of the removal, its incidents, and extent of work necessary to accomplish the

"APPENDIX C.

"The damage sustained by the claimant for grain, fuel, hay, &c., used by the military forces in the line of the claimant in the Territory of Colorado, is proven by Carlyle, (page 35 of the evidence.) He states that the military forces took at one time twenty-nine head of oxen from the line at Fort Kearney, worth $100 a head, and one hundred cords of wood at Julesburgh, worth $30 a cord; and that from what he knew to have been destroyed and used by the soldiers, he did not consider $30,000 an overestimate of the damage inflicted by the military on the line of the claimant, and that when a receipt for anything used was wanted it was refused. He stated that they were in the habit of going to stations and getting whatever was wanted by them, grain or provisions, until to stop the raids a military order was procured, and that this damage was done between October, 1864, and December, 1865.

"David Street (page 51 of the evidence) also gave evidence that the line was subjected to serious losses in consequence of damage done and property taken by the United States soldiers.

"Then, George K. Otis states (page 56 of the evidence) that he made the estimate of the damages done by the military forces to the property of the claimant, and that he made the estimate of $30,000 after consultation with the division agents and men employed on the stage line; that no record could be kept of the property taken or used, or what was eaten up and consumed; but from the number of troops constantly passing up and down the road he was satisfied that at least $30,000 would be required to indemnify the claimant.

"William Reynolds, (page 30,) superintendent of the line from October, 1864, to March, 1866, stated that large amounts of grain and hay and wood were consumed by the military forces on the line, the property of claimant, while he was superintendent of the line, and several houses and stables used for fuel and other purposes.

"The value of horses, oxen, mules, hay, grain, harness, is shown by all the testimony in the case, especially by Street, Carlyle, Spotswood, Hooker, George K. Otis, Colonel Charles G. Otis, and General Mitchell; the value of horses fit for staging being shown to be from $150 to $250 on each, and mules for the same purpose even higher in price; the value of harness from $100 to $120 a set; oxen as high as $200 per yoke; hay, from $30 to $80 per ton; grain, from 15 to 20 cents per pound; these prices resulting from the state of war, the great demand, and the Indian outrages on the plains. See, also, evidence of B. M. Hughes (pp. 87, 88) in regard to this point, taken by the committee."

Mr. SAUNDERS. I suppose no vote is likely to be reached on that bill this morning. If there was I should certainly give way so far as I am concerned, but I should like to have Senate bill No. 550 far as I am concerned, but I should like to have Senate bill No. 550 taken up.

Mr. VANCE. Regular order.

Mr. CONKLING. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that before we take up anything, even the regular order, which I suppose any Senator can demand, there ought to be some arrangement made by which all that we have done this morning is not to be repeated over again in the case from which we have just passed. I suggest to the Senator from Wisconsin, if he will accept the suggestion, that he ask that the Holladay bill—for it will not be the unfinished business falling in the morning hour—stand as the first case on the Calendar, so that we may act on it before we forget all about this report and have to have it read again.

Mr. COCKRELL. I shall object to that if one objection will prevent.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Then I will move to-morrow morning, at the completion of the routine business of the morning hour, that this case be taken up.
Mr. CONKLING. That is right.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I move to lay aside the regular order and take up Senate bill No. 550.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska moves to postpone the unfinished business of the Senate for the purpose indicated.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 11, noes 15;

no quorum voting.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I will not insist. I see there is a disposition not to take up the matter.

Mr. VANCE. I am willing to yield to the Senator for ten minutes provided he thinks he can get through in that time.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I learn that the Senator from North Carolina has not finished a speech he had commenced. I was not aware of that when I made the motion.

Mr. PADDOCK. I understood the Senator from North Carolina to say that he would yield to my colleague for ten minutes to pass the bill to which he has asked attention.

Mr. PADDOCK. I have no doubt the bill can be passed in ten minutes. I am sure there will be no objection to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication 300 00 from the Secretary of the Senate, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of April 30, showing the balance standing to the account of the contingent and miscellaneous expenses of the Senate on the 30th of June, 1879, the amount that has been appropriated for that account since that time, and the purposes for which said sums have been expended; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The unfinished business is the consideration of the resolutions declaring that WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG was not and that Henry M. Spofford was elected Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term beginning March 4, 1877.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, about the time that I gave way for a motion to adjourn on Friday last I had been corrected in the statement which I had made that one Blanchard was the private secre tary of Governor Kellogg. On looking at the testimony I find that Blanchard was not classed as the private secretary of Governor Kellogg, but as a clerk in the governor's office; and while I submit to the correction so far as the name of the officer is concerned, I submit, in effect, it was the same thing. A clerk in the office of a governor of a State is one who is under the control of the governor and writes of a State is one who is under the control of the governor and writes and works at his dictation; and a private secretary is one who does the same thing. The point was that a dispatch, by the fraudulent use of the name of the registrar-general, had been sent to registrars throughout the different parishes in the State of Louisiana requiring them to send their returns, not to the office of the registrar-general, but to the custom-house, and that they were so sent; and it seems to me that, admitting that he was not the private secretary of the governor but more than the secretary of the governor.

me that, admitting that he was not the private secretary of the governor, but merely a clerk in the office of the governor—
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from North Carolina unless it is entirely agreeable to him. I know that the Senator does not desire to misstate the facts of this case.
Mr. VANCE. Certainly not.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. That being so, I will remind the Senator, and he will recollect it when his attention is called to it, that the telegram to which he refers was not sent to all the voting places in Louisiana requiring that they should send the returns to the custom-house, but only to the polls in the city of New Orleans. It was not sent outside the city of New Orleans at all.

Mr. VANCE. I do not think the testimony is explicit on that point.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator used the term "returns." It was not returns, but the registrar's books before the elec-

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator used the term "returns." It was not returns, but the registrar's books before the election, not the returns at all. They never went to the custom-house. Mr. VANCE. It is immaterial. The point was this, and that cannot be refined away by any explanation of the testimony, that the name of Williams, the registrar-general for the city, was fraudulently, and without his knowledge and consent, used for the purpose of procuring the registration returns to be sent to the custom-house instead of to his office. That is the point, and that was the fact. Whether this was done by the private secretary of the governor of the State or by a clerk in his office, is entirely immaterial. It is even stronger to suppose that it was done by a clerk; for that a mere clerk should take it upon himself to change the law and to direct of his own volition that the returns should be sent to a place to which it was not provided by law that they should be sent, is preposterous, and the inference is irresistible that he had some higher authority commanding him to do this thing.

and the inference is irresistible that he had some higher authority commanding him to do this thing.

Having adverted to what I consider to be the frauds in the registration in the previous portion of my remarks, I come now to what I consider the frauds in the counting of the returns. A large portion of that fraud is historic testimony. The iniquities which surrounded that transaction renders it unnecessary for me to dwell at any great large the residual of the residual to the residual of the residual to the residual to the residual of the residual to the residual of the residual to length upon it. It is not possible for me to add to or diminish one particle from the chaplet of infamy which has crowned that whole transaction; but so far as the testimony which was taken before this sub-committee of the Committee on Privileges and Elections in November last is concerned, I will briefly advert to it.

The first is the testimony of Mr. Jewett, who was secretary to the republican committee on registration in 1876 and was clerk to the re-turning board and is now a Federal office-holder in the custom-house of course, to be found on pages 822, 823, and 824.

His testimony is merely confirmatory of the historic knowledge which we have about the transactions of the returning board, to wit, that a large number of the returns that were sent in from the parish commissioners or the poll-holders in the various parishes of the State, electing certain parties, were set aside and changed by the action of the returning board and other parties declared to be elected. Quite a number, he testifies and admits, were served in this way, which made a difference in the total result of all the elections held at that made a difference in the total result of all the elections field at that time, and especially in regard to the Legislature.

Mr. Houser was the next witness who testified in regard to that matter, and he was a special watchman at the house of Governor Kellogg and a member of the metropolitan police force, and had been for three years, and therefore it seems to me had established, at least in the estimation of the governor and those who controlled the metropolitan police force, a reputation for honesty and integrity of character or he would not have been intrusted with so important a place as taking care of the governor at such a time and remaining so long in that confidential position as night-watchman. He says that for many nights of many weeks after the election returns had reached New Orleans this clerk Blanchard, of the governor's office, and this clerk Jewett, of the returning board, visited Governor Kellogo's house with the election returns, as he supposed and as they told him, and worked upon them in the governor's house and among the governor's friends every night for this specified period of time, changing them, as they told him, or at least working upon the returns.

Why that should have been carried on is best known to those who were cognizant of the matter; but how it could have been done consistently with truth and fair dealing is an entirely different matter, and one upon which we are at liberty to speculate as much as we please. It is true that Mr. Houser is included in the general denunciation heaped upon the witnesses by the minority report, of being from the slums of the city of New Orleans; but when we come to consider that he was a favored officer, a trusted and confidential police officer, it would seem that the charge that he was a man of bad character comes with a bad grace from that side of the question.

Again, I refer to Mr. E. A. Burke's testimony on page 547. Mr. Burke deals with the manner in which the returns from the Seventh ward were disposed of by the returning board. He says that in the third polling place or booth of the Seventh ward there was 172 majority cast in favor of the democratic candidates, sufficient to have turned the scale and elected the three members from that ward; but that the poll was not counted and returned by the commissioners within twenty-four hours as the law required; and one reason why it was not so counted was that Mr. Gondolfi, the clerk of Moore, (who had up to the day before the election been the registrar and the candidate of the republican party, and who then resigned and put Gondolfi in his place,) could not be found for twenty-four hours after the election, and that there was a great deal of scratching of the ticket, and it took them a long while to make out the returns; and when they were made and presented to the returning board it was announced that the twenty-four hours' delay would washe no difference but the that the twenty-four hours' delay would make no difference, but the vote would be counted; and yet when the vote was announced those three hundred votes, constituting 172 majority for the democratic candidates in that ward, were thrown out because of the delay of twentyfour hours

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, rose. Mr. VANCE. I should prefer not to yield. The Senator will ex-

Mr. VANCE. I prefer not to yield; the Senator will excuse me. Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The Senator will allow me to say this one thing

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield?

Mr. VANCE. For one remark, if the Senator desires.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. The poll at the third precinct of the Seventh ward was counted; and if the Senator from North Carolina will examine the testimony he will find that it was counted.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I am sorry to see that my friend, the Senator from Wisconsin, differs so widely from the testimony. The testimony, if I can read it, and I will read it at the proper time, makes the facts to appear just as I have stated them, that these 300 votes would have given the ward to the democratic candidates. In the argument of counsel before the committee in this case submitted in argument of counsel before the committee in this case submitted in behalf of the sitting member an allusion is made to these irregulari-ties, these technical defects in returns, and so forth, in the following language:

I think that in regard to the conduct of that returning board there may have been some disregard of some of the shadow that he says may be discarded, some of this tithing of mint and cumin may be left out; some of the shadow may be let go in order to get at what was right and what was true.

That is very liberal; and yet it is in testimony, not in that taken by this committee, however, that out of all the parishes in the State of Louisiana in that election of 1876 there was not a single protest filed upon which the returns were thrown out and the result changed that was filed in the time and in the manner required by law-not a that was filed in the time and in the manner required by law—not a single solitary one except in the parish of Concordia. In this case, where it involved the whole State of Louisiana, and the reversing of the entire verdict of the people in regard to all State officers, and the entire reversing of the verdict of the people of the United States in regard to the election of a President of the United States to preside over the destinies of the Republic for four years, these technical defects were more tithe of mint, and spice, and coming but when it came fects were mere tithe of mint, and anise, and cumin, but when it came down to rejecting three hundred votes that were polled in a democratic ward, the result of which would have placed the Legislature beyond dispute in the hands of the democratic party, then these technical defects become weighty matters of the law, and not a mere tithing of mint and comin.

nical defects become weighty matters of the law, and not a mere training of mint and cumin.

I go further and give another sworn statement of Mr. E. A. Burke. This gentleman does not have the honor to be from the slums; he is not an officer in the custom-house, and I believe he was never accused of perjury or of any other crime that would entitle him to the distinction of an office in the custom-house at New Orleans or entitle him to that reward at the hands of a grateful country; he is simply a lawyer of high character and standing, and a gentleman who has gone through all this contest and this fierce fight over the Louisiana election without a single spot upon his character. That is Mr. Burke; and from a sworn statement of his which I find upon the records of the proceedings, not before this committee, I find the following

Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator give me the page of the evidence

Mr. VANCE. I will, sir. Mr. KELLOGG. There is no such evidence in the record.

Mr. VANCE. I have just stated that it was not taken by this com-

Mr. KELLOGG. I beg pardon; I did not hear that. Mr. VANCE. On page 32 of the "Statement of Facts in Relation to the Election in Louisiana, November, 1876, by E. A. Burke, of counsel for the democratic and conservative party

Mr. KELLOGG. Is that in any congressional document?
Mr. VANCE. It is a document now being read to this branch of the Congress of the United States:

Personally appeared before me, Charles S. Rice, a duly appointed United States commissioner in and for the district of Louisiana, E. A. Burke, to me well known, who, upon being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that the vote actually east at the late election, held November 7, 1876, in Louisiana, for presidential

And then the result is set out as it came to him from the parish commissioners before it was handled by the returning board; and that result was that over 3,500 votes that were actually cast were never returned and never got to the office of the returning board at all, of which number more than 80 per cent. were democratic votes; that is, they threw out one republican vote for the sake of throwing out five democratic votes; and over 12,000 votes which were actually east were stricken out and refused to be counted, and of that number so stricken out and refused to be counted 80 per cent. were democratic; and that in fact and in truth nearly 1,400 votes were added to the list and counted in behalf of the republican party that were never cast, never upon the face of the earth except in the fertile imagination of the returning board.

That is what they made by this generous method of procedure with regard to the tithing of the mint and cumin; and yet when Governor Garcelon of the State of Maine undertook to tithe the mint and cumin up there and to count in a legislature because the returns were defective according to the technicalities of the law, the minority report says that it was one of the greatest crimes ever perpetrated in this country and likens it to the rebellion!

Well, let us get on. Take in connection with that the fact that the law of Louisiana—and that is a material fact which has often been inquired into, which I beg pardon for referring to, but it is necessary to make complete the testimony which we have taken—the law of Louisiana required the returning board to be composed of five members of different political parties, and when the returns came in to be composed of five members of different political parties, and when the returns came in to be counted in the fall of 1876 there were only four members of that board, two white republicans and two black republicans, and they absolutely refused to fill that vacancy with a democrat or with anybody else. The board was composed of men all of one party; I said two white republicans and two black republicans; but I do not mean in saying that the cost any discrepant values controlled to the land of the same of the two white republicans and two black republicans; but I do not mean in saying that to cast any disrespect whatsoever upon the black men in that board, and I beg their pardon if anybody supposes I did. They positively refused to fill that vacancy in the board, although they had the authority in the law to fill any vacancy occasioned by death, resignation, or otherwise, in the absence of the Legislature.

Now, sir, how is it possible that men could have had honest intentions if they refused to let one of their political opponents in to see what they did when the law required that it should be done? Is there any other evidence wanting to prove that a frand was intended there any other evidence wanting to prove that a fraud was intended there any other evidence wanting to prove that a fraud was intended to be perpetrated, and was in fact perpetrated right there? In the next place, the majority of the committee allege that the pretended Legislature was organized by fraud, that it was kept together by force, and that the election of Senator, which was held or pretended to be held by that Legislature, was secured by corruption. Now, sir, is there any testimony in regard to this? As to bribery and corruption, there were produced before the committee the affidavits of certain witnesses. The first one that I will call attention to is the affidavit of Jeremiah Blackstone, page 1236 of the printed report of the committee: the committee:

STATE OF LOUISIANA Parish of Orleans:

Parish of Orienns:

On this 17th day of April, in the year 1878, before me, a notary public in and for said parish and State, personally appeared Jeremiah Blackstone, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says that he was a member of the Legislature which was convened at the Saint Louis Hotel the first Monday in January, 1877.

That he was elected from the Seventh ward, parish of Orleans, State of Louisiana.

This very ward which we have been discussing.

This very ward which we have been discussing.

That prior to his election, and on or about the latter part of September, 1876, or about the 1st of October, 1876, he had a conversation with William P. Kellogg at the State-house known as the Saint Louis Hotel.

That the conversation was in regard to the approaching election. That WILLIAM P. KELLOGG stated that he would be a candidate for United States Senator; that WILLIAM P. KELLOGG did then and there give unto said deponent the sum of $1,000, which said money was to be used in promoting the election of the republican candidates from the Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth wards of the parish of Orleans; and it was further understood that if the republican candidates should be elected that they would pledge themselves to vote for William P. Kellogg as United States Senator. That in accordance with said agreement deponent paid to the following named persons the amounts as follows: Benjamin Franklin, $150; Pat. Griffin, (president of a club.) $300; Jim Kelly. $50; Joe Dray, $50; James R. Brown, $100; for music, liquor, cigars, &c., about $100.

That after the election, and while deponent was a member of the house of representatives, and on or about the 6th day of January, 1877, a message was brought to him by one of the pages of the house to meet Mr. Kellogg in his private office at the Saint Louis Hotel. Upon meeting Mr. Kellogg he stated to deponent that some of the colored members showed a disposition to go back on him and on their pledges to vote for him as United States Senator; that he requested deponent to use his influence among the colored members of the house, and also to bring to bear all of the influence that the ward clubs represented by their presidents or their most influential members might have; that Kellogg stated that it was a matter of life and death to him; that it was a necessity he should be elected to the United States Senate. That William P. Kellogg did then and there give unto deponent the sum of $1,000, which said money was to be used in securing the election of the said William P. Kellogg to the United States Senate.

That William P. Kellogg also promised deponent all the patronage in his district, and that he always would be cared for.

That deponent, out of the $1,000 paid him by William P. Kellogg, paid as follows: Jonas Hughes, of Assumption Parish, $150; George Bird, of East Baton Ronge, $200; Henry Blair, of Bossier, $100; J. J. Johnson, of De Soto, $50; Isham Nichols, of the Ninth ward, (a politician), $100.

That after the election of William P. Kellogg to the United States Senate, and on or about the — day of January, 1877, deponent was paid by Louis J. Souer the sum of $200 as an extra compensation for his services, and also for voting for William P. Kellogg as United States Senator.

This affidavit was signed and sworn to on the 17th day of April, 1878, before a notary public in the city of New Orleans. On or about the 1st day of June, 1879, he came on to the city of Washington as a witness summoned by Mr. Spofford, the contestant, who having this affidavit in his possession had the faint hope that he would stand up to it, and would affirm substantially what was set forth there when he reached here a change came over the special standard of the contestant. he got here. But when he reached here a change came over the spirit of his dreams. When he came to the city of Washington and was about to be put upon the stand he approached the agent and attorney about to be put upon the stand he approached the agent and attorney of Mr. Spofford, Mr. Charles Cavanac, and begged not to be put upon the stand, "for," he said, "if I go upon the stand I shall be obliged to deny everything that is in that affidavit; the money is too big." I am corrected by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. HILL,] who sits near me, by the statement that it was another witness named Milton Jones who said the money was too big; but Blackstone went to Mr. Cavanac and requested him not to put him on the stand for he would be obliged to deny the affidavit. He accordingly was not put upon the stand, but when the sub-committee reached New Orleans he was put upon the stand by Kellogg, whereupon he swore everything the reverse of what he had sworn before. I give this merely as a sample. In addition to the affidavit of Blackstone there was one made by one De Lacy to the same purport, that he had received bribes and had seen others paid bribes for voting for Kellogg; one made by Seveignes, that he was not present, although his name appeared upon the roll, and did not vote for Kellogg on the day of the election; that he asked to record his vote for KELLOGG on the day or the election; that he asked to record his vote the next day. There was one from Milton Jones, who went back upon his affidavit likewise, alleging to Mr. Cavanac, as I before remarked, that the money was too big, that he could not stand it. There was one from J. J. Johnson, and there was one from E. A. Miller, all members of the Legislature, who made these solemn affidavits, and told to various parties upon the streets of New Orleans what they afterward swore to in the affidavits, and when they came to the city of Washington and appeared before the committee they denied every word of it. One witness, by the name of De Lacy, went so far as to deny that he ever signed the affidavit, and swore the whole thing was a forgery from beginning to end, and tried to show that it was not the way he signed his name, and circumstantially gave reasons to prove that it was all a forgery.

It is said that the affidavits and the declarations of these men are not original affirmative evidence against the sitting member, as they swore one way when they made the affidavits and swore another way when they appeared before the committee; that one oath destroys the other, and they cannot be considered as affirmative evidence. But, Mr. President, you must recollect, and the Senate must recollect, that these men whose affidavits I have recited were all members of the socalled Packard legislature, and they were all charged with a conspircalled Packard legislature, and they were all charged with a conspir-acy between themselves and the sitting member and others to fraud-ulently procure the election of a United States Senator to be imposed upon the Senate, and their declarations are at least legal evidence against themselves and conclusive of their own guilt if they go no further. It does no good to say that they are from the slums and that they are men of bad character. Of course they are men of bad character. When a man will openly and unblushingly swear one thing to-day and go before a judicial tribunal and swear that it was a lie to-morrow, of course no worse character can be conceived. But a lie to-morrow, of course no worse character can be conceived. But whether they were good men or whether they were bad men, whether they were telling lies or whether they were telling the truth, they were the constituents of the sitting member; they were the men who sent him here to this Chamber. And it may be said of them, "of such is the kingdom of radicalism in Louisiana."

De Lacy—but before I discuss his testimony, I want to remark fur-ther that there is no better evidence to be had in a court of justice of the guilt of a criminal than the fact that he has told two or three different stories about the transaction concerning which he is charged. If he has told inconsistent and contradictory stories, it is always received as good evidence that he is a guilty man. If one of his co-conspirators or any person who is to suffer from the declarations of these inconsistent stories is found to be active and diligent in trying to suppress his testimony or trying to cover up the declarations that he has made in any way, then there is not a jury in any portion of this country, impanneled in any court that I know of where the English tongue is spoken, that would not consider the telling of these inconsistent stories and the endeavor to suppress this testimony as nconsistent stories and the endeavor to suppress this testimony as conclusive evidence of guilt.

Now we will take De Lacy. About the time that this case was reopened and there began to be a talk of taking testimony afresh in the case, De Lacy was a mere laborer in the custom-house at New Orleans. He came on here after having given this affidavit, and not only denied before the committee the substance of the affidavit, but denied ever having made it, and denied that his name was signed to it. He admitted that he committed the baldest perjury in doing so, either in one case or the other, and justified the lying and braved it either in one case or the other, and justified the lying and braved it out before the committee in a manner the effrontery of which I have never seen excelled. He returned to New Orleans and immediately rose from the position of a day laborer in the custom-house to that of inspector, at $75 a month. He was rewarded, in other words, by the Government of the United States by the office and by the money of the people for this perjury. I have known that it was very frequent and very proper in war to brevet a man upon the field of battle for meritorious gallantry, to recognize then and there in the presence of his comrades, while he was still hot from the conflict, how much the country was indebted to him for his service, but I never knew before a brevet conferred upon a scoundrel for perjury, in all the history of this country. He was absolutely brevetted from the rank of a laborer to the rank of inspector, and his pay increased accordingly, for gallantry in the field of lying. I suppose it may well be admitted that a man who could swear to what this man did, with the face which he put on before that committee, might be deemed Napoleonic in his capacity to tell falsehoods. capacity to tell falsehoods.

The whole of the affidavit members of the Legislature who came here as witnesses went back on their affidavits in precisely the same way; denied them, declared that they were untrue, and that every-thing stated in them was false; and every one of them, I believe, without exception, who had not already been appointed, received ap-pointment in the custom-house at New Orleans as soon as they got

The question might be asked again, suppose that is true, did the sitting member have anything to do with the reward conferred upon perjurers? I desire to say, Mr. President, that in treating this case I only wish to do my duty; that I am not moved by any personal animosity toward the sitting member, and if I say things that are hard it is simply in accordance with what I conceive to be the facts, hard it is simply in accordance with what I conceive to be the facts, and not with any desire to magnify anything or to apply harsh terms. Did he have anything to do with the rewards conferred upon these perjured scoundrels for their perjury by obtaining for them positions in the custom-house? When the sub-committee was in the city of New Orleans they had a subpœna served upon the officers of the telegraph company in that city and after a great deal of trouble they got a portion of the telegrams that had passed between the sitting member and his friends in the custom-house, Souer, Badger, Lewis, and others. Directly after the committee had returned to the city of Washington and renewed its sittings they obtained the remainder of Washington and renewed its sittings they obtained the remainder of the telegrams, at least all the company purported to have; but those telegrams were in some learned language, some foreign tongue inter-mixed with only a slight sprinkling of the vernacular, and were never translated for the benefit of the Senate and the committee. I supposed that when these telegrams were reported the sitting member, as an innocent man, feeling conscious of his innocence, would have risen at once and offered to translate the whole of them before Mr. KELLOGG. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. KELLOGG. I did state to the committee when those telegrams were presented that I would at any time translate any of the telegrams, and I wrote to the chairman of the committee on the 5th day of February last as follows:

day of February last as follows:

Sin: I said to the committee on the 21st ultimo that I was ready to translate any cipher dispatch now in the record, so far as I could, and of which I might have knowledge, if any of the committee desired me to do so. Yesterday, for the first time, I was able to carefully go over the printed proceedings, and I find this statement is not printed in the record. I therefore repeat this statement to the committee, so that, if any member of the committee desires to examine me touching the contents of any such dispatch, opportunity may be had before the testimory is closed and reported to the Senate.

General A. S. Badger, collector of customs at New Orleans, is here in this city, and will no doubt be ready, if desired, to answer any question which the committee may desire to put to him in regard to this case.

Very respectfully.

Signed by myself

Signed by myself.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to say that the statement of the Senator from Louisiana in reference to having written me a letter on the 5th of February is true; I have that letter in my hand now. The committee then had closed the testimony. I desire to state now, and I make the statement distinctly, that it was understood that the Senator from Louisiana could at any time make any statement he desired to make before the committee had closed the testimony. We offered to the Senator from Louisiana to the Senator from Louisiana the privilege of making or the statement. to the Senator from Louisiana the privilege of making any statement before the committee that he might desire. After the adjournment of the committee and the closing of the testimony I did receive from the Senator from Louisiana the letter to which he refers. The committee of course had no further request to make. Having made the offer by the committee, the committee made no further request of him, and his statement in the letter was based upon a desire that might be entertained by the committee.

Mr. KELLOGG. Just one word. By referring to the close of the testimony—and I am obliged to the Senator from North Carolina for giving me this opportunity—it will be seen that the close of the testimony on page 1220 is in these words:

At this point the testimony was closed for the present, and the committee adjourned the further consideration of the case to Monday, February 9, 1880.

It was on the 5th that I wrote the letter, and after that it was agreed that the statement in reference to Will. Stevens, a member of the senate, should be considered. My attorney and the attorney of Mr. Spofford agreed upon certain facts as to Will. Stevens's statement, and it was four days before that that I wrote to the chairman and then called personally upon the chairman, knowing there was to be a meeting of the committee in the Ingalls case, and a meeting to consider generally when the briefs should be filed.

Mr. HOAR. And at a previous day the offer was made.

Mr. KELLOGG. At a previous day. I had called attention to the fact that at a prior day I had made the offer made on this day and before the committee adjourned. Moreover I asked the chairman (and he is present and I thin will explore the transfer of the committee adjourned. he is present and I think will corroborate what I state) if that matter had been laid before the committee, and he said there would be a meeting of the committee, I think, the next day.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, I never was very expert in the learned languages, dead or living. I am a little in the position of the Ettrick Shepherd in the Noctes Ambrosianæ, who said he never could read any Greek except a little done into Latin and rendered into English. But there are some things in these cipher dispatches which are yet shrouded in the mystery that envelopes a great deal of these doings in Louisiana that I think I can understand. I will read one:

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Then follow the marks of the telegraph company that I do not understand.

General A. S. Badger,

Collector of Customs, New Orleans:

Please crown ash and Zebra fan permanently. Important. Hat all can while Pear absent. Hawley little easier. Pear away week.

AMITY.

What does that mean? We translate it thus, and the Senator will perhaps correct me if I do not translate it properly:

Please appoint Ash and Zebra-

That is too much for me; those are proper nouns.

Please appoint Ash and Zebra permanently. Important. Appoint all you can while Sherman is absent. Hawley is a little easier. Sherman away this week. Am I right or not? [Pausing for a reply.]

And he smiled a kind of sickly smile and curled upon the floor, And the subsequent proceedings interested him no more.

"Have all the nominations made you can while Sherman is absent because Hawley is a little easier; we can get more out of him." I presume, of course, it meant to get appointments out of him. Certainly there was not anything the matter with Hawley; he was not sick and this was not an announcement that he was recovering a little, that he was getting a "little easier."

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 5, 12.5 p. m.

General A. S. Badger, Collector of Customs, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Collector of Customs, New Orleans, Louisiana.

Bales Zebra, Ash, received. Violet send others immediately. Better not his handwriting. Gray Hubbard's wants approved. Write about Murrell.

Signed "Amity," which we say means the sitting member from the State of Louisiana. "Bales" we say means affidavits, as you will see when I read a little further along. Now I translate it this way:

The affidavits of Zebra and Ash (whoever they are) received. Tell Violet (that is Souer, who was his confidential friend in the Legislature and his financial agent, and he has a big office in the customhouse now)—tell Souer to send other affidavits immediately, but better not be in his handwriting. Certainly not.

WASHINGTON, D. C., 5, 12.30 p. m., May 5.

General L. J. Souer, Appraiser, Custom-House, New Orleans:

Appraiser, Oustom-House, New Orleans:
Friends say ask Zebra, others bales should also say never did wrong Terrier matter. Can't Violet Rose get corrected fan?
Now who is "Terrier?" "Terrier" means the sitting member. "Terrier" and "Amity" both. He can afford to have two names.
Friends say ask Zebra and others who made the affidavits that they should also say that they never did any wrong in the Kellogg matter. WASHINGTON, May 7.

General A. S. BADGER:

Resolution take testimony passed. Every republican voting or paired against, Terrier made speech. Delighted all friends. Will send. Tell Violet.

General A. S. BADGER, Custom-House, New Orleans:

Think it is important that boat be moon. See to this. Confer with Violet and Oak

Now I shall have to translate again. According to the cipher by which these dispatches have been read by that portion of the committee who have taken time to devote to them, "boat" means the witness Murray, who was the sergeant-at-arms of the Packard house of representatives, and who told about all this rascality and villany as it went on. "Moon" means all right, and so does "rainbow." Anything that throws a sickly kind of nightshade light over affairs is designated by "moon" or "rainbow."

Think it is important that boat be moon.

Think it is important that boat be moon.

To be sure they were getting up the witnesses then, and this man Murray had likewise made an affidavit that he had seen men bribed to vote for Kellogg, and he was coming on here with the other affidavit witnesses, and was the only one who stood up to his testimony after he got here. "I think it important that Murray be right. See to this. Confer with Violet;" that is, with Souer, he being the financial agent who helped to keep up the Legislature of Kellogg by advances of money, and "Oak," that is Lewis, a negro, who is in high office in the custom-house.

Washington Marie 2 20 c. "

WASHINGTON, May 8, 8.30 a.m.

General A. S. Badger, Collector of Customs, New Orleans: If grapes Pin Amity Moon Perhaps Dish try get Grapes immediately.

"Grapes," according to the cipher key, means members of the Packard legislature. "Pin" means fixed. "Moon" means all right. "Dish" means Spofford, and so on. Now let us see how this reads:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 8.

General A. S. Badger, Collector of Customs, New Orleans:

If grapes Pin Amity Moon Perhaps Dish Try get Grapes immediately. Watch. If so send cotton or Oak. Wrote yesterday.

I translate that to be this, and of course I will be corrected if I am wrong, because gentlemen on the other side are astute to correct me in all my misstatements of facts:

If the members of the Legislature are fixed, Kellogg will be all right. Perhaps Spofford will try to get grapes (members of Legislature) here immediately. Watch. If so, send cotton (Swazie) or oak, (Lewis.) Wlote yesterday.

If so, send cotton or oak; that is, to send Lewis or Swazie along with the witnesses immediately. And yet both of these men swore positively that they did not come here in the interest of Kellogs. One of them, this fellow Lewis, swore most positively that he came to look at the brigadier-generals in Congress, and that he had no interest in coming to serve Kellogs; that on the route he said nothing est in coming to serve KELLOGG; that on the route he said nothing to the witnesses about the case, and simply came along to see Congress in session. He was asked if he had not seen Congress in session before. He said, yes, very often, but he had never seen it in session when the brigadiers were in such high feather; and he came along just for that. Yet here is the order for him to be sent immediately, and to be sent in company with the witnesses, these members of the Packard legislature who had made affidavits:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 8th.

General Lewis J. Souer, U. S. Appraiser, N. O. :

Don't think grapes sent for present.

That is, do not think members of the Packard legislature will be sent for at present.

No appropriation.

The Senate had not yet made an appropriation for defraying the expenses of the committee.

Don't think Camelia spot can hurt. No cipher butter. What is it?

There the sitting member when he sent that dispatch struck a chord in tender sympathy with my heart, and with the heart of many men who live at boarding-houses and hotels. "No cipher butter." I think it would be pretty hard to cipher butter, which is involved in all these preparations of oleomargarine, &c. "What is it?" he asks.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 14.

Gen'l A. S. BADGER, Collector, New Orleans:

Pleased Chapron had butter approved. If Rose request terrier get Cotton back city. Moon here.

"All right here. If Marks request, get Lewis back to the city." That is the translation that I put upon it.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 19.

One of them, mentioned by name, is that man Seveignes, who swore in his affidavit in New Orleans that he was not in the Legislature at all when Kellogg was elected, but came in a day or so afterward and had his name recorded by permission as having voted in favor of Kellogg, and he was needed to assist in making the quorum. You see he was rewarded by an office also.

I read still another, Mr. President. There are a great many here, and it is very interesting reading. It is a mine from which chunks of the biggest kind of wisdom can be dug up:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 21.

That is to say, Terrier (KELLOGG) is doing all possible for Bull Dog. Orange has not raised a finger. I do not know who Orange is, and I can only say this, that he ought to be ashamed of himself if he had not raised a finger in helping this thing along. Kellogg exerts himself constantly. Some things are difficult to do.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 22.

Genl. L. J. SOUER, U. S. Appraiser, Custom-House, N. O.:

Sorghum is coming up to the scratch now and redeeming himself for his absence in a former case, but he still hopes that "Boat" (Murray) will be all right.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23d.

Gen. L. J. SOUER, U. S. Appraiser, Custom-House, N. O.: Tell Bull Dog leave when ready. Confident got matter shape so continued cases Wont trouble hereafter. Raum gone for two weeks.

Again, May 24:

White Watson Campbell approved yesterday.

Watson is another one of these fellows who made an affidavit. He is a minister of the gospel, so called, and went back on his affidavit, as you will see by reading his testimony, in the most complete and emphatic manner, and justified lying in behalf of the republican party by the Scripture and by the supreme court of Louisiana. He said he could show cases where the supreme court of Louisiana had justified lying and that the Scripture also justified it.

20 D. H. M. (233)

I can only read a few; I cannot possibly read them all. I propose now to read some of the answers to these telegrams to show what connection there was between them:

WASHINGTON, D. C., 7, 9,-

The witnesses had then arrived, but only a portion of them had given testimony-

WASHINGTON, D. C., 7, 9, N. O., 6:10 p. m., June 7.

Genl. A. S. BADGER, Collector of Customs, N. O.:

If Watson made Bales as Boat Canter better stop Jefferson if foundry Leopard Eagle pin Will answer gin Boat or parole.

A. (353)

That I have never been able to get the exact translation of, but I make it out to be this—and, of course, I shall be corrected if I am wrong: "If Watson made affidavit, as Murray swears, better stop summons, for foundry Leopard Eagle pin. Will answer gin boat or parole." That is a little too much for me. I cannot make that out. Now, let us see what answer is made to that:

NEW ORLEANS, June 7, 1879.

To Senator W. P. KELLOGG, Washington, D. C .:

Sent for foundry eagle yesterday. Temper screw doubtful. Adams must buck officer blank Jefferson returnable ninth have extended. A. S. BADGER.

That was a little too much for me; I could not get the whole of that certain. The next is June 7:

NEW ORLEANS, June 7, 1879.

WASHINGTON, D. C., 7-

To Senator W. P. KELLOGG, Washington, D. C.:

Sorghum fir dropped stonewall Monday last enable them disclaim parole. Guichard, Clover, Clipper, Watson, Jefferson to-day last walk conspiracy.

A. S. BADGER.

That is, as far as I have been able to translate it, "Guichard, Clover, Clipper, Watson, were summoned to-day to show the conspiracy. A. S. Badger."

Now I will read another one from the sitting member to General Badger:

There are three of that day-

WASHINGTON, D. C., 7, N. O., 6:15 p. m., June 7.

A. S. BADGER, Coll'r Customs, N. O.:

Officer instructed remain Till Seven witnesses summonsed Let no Vermont made bale fire temper screw absolutely must not toot witness Pin sure.

INDIGO.

Which I understand to mean, according to the cipher which I have applied to it, "the officer," that is the man in New Orleans who was instructed to summon witnesses for the different parties, "the officer is instructed to remain until seven witnesses are summoned; let no Vermont witness (who made affidavit) made bale fire temper screw absolutely." I cannot make that quite out. "Must not toot witness Pin sure," that is to say you must not bring or summon a witness until he is sure.

The answer to that is:

NEW ORLEANS, June 7.

To Senator W. P. KELLOGG, Washington, D. C.:

Do you mean water no dish or no terrier. Vermonts made bales which interest explain foundry gulfport rainbow. A. S. BADGER.

That is to say "do you mean you want no Kellogg or no Spofford witnesses." "Made bales," that is, "who made affidavits;" "which interest, explain foundry gulfport rainbow," all right. "Do you mean you want no Kellogg or no Spofford witnesses who made affidavits, which is it? Explain."

Here is the answer to that:

WASHINGTON, D. C., 7, N. O., 11:55 p., June 7th. Gen. A. S. BADGER, Collector of Customs, NO.:

Mean no terrier grapes made bales water best seven Vermont including foundry Eagle make pin absolute use own judgment Watson.

21 collect $\frac{1}{2}$ H., 89. (464)

That means "I want no members of the Legislature who made affidavits, but the 'best seven witnesses including foundry Eagle make pin absolute, use own judgment Watson," which I understand to mean, "I mean that I want no members of the Packard legislature who made affidavits, but the best seven witnesses including 'foundry Eagle,' who will make sure absolutely. Use your own judgment as to summoning Watson." That is the way I translate that. Then the answer comes from New Orleans, June 8:

NEW ORLEANS, June 8, 1879.

To Senator W. P. Kellogg, Washington, D. C.: Violet-

That is, Souer-

cotton Guichard foundry Clover Watson clipper eagle mercury if not wanted answer quick none made bales favor dish.

That is, none of them made affidavits in favor of Spofford. But it I hat is, none of them made amdavits in favor of Sponord. But it is impossible for me to go through the whole of these cipher dispatches; enough is shown to satisfy any man, it seems to me, that there was a systematic arrangement as soon as any man began to tell the truth upon what occurred in that Packard legislature in New Orleans, to have him appointed right at once to a Federal office and stop his mouth; and in confirmation of that, I beg to remind all who have not read the testimony, and all who have read it too, that there was a man by the name of Brown who appeared before the sub-committee in New Orleans, who testified that he had once held a little position in the custom-house and had been deprived of it, and that he was very poor, and that a custom-house officer, Marks, of high position in the custom-house (who in these cipher dispatches goes by the name "Rose") was his friend, and that he had applied to Marks, and Marks had promised to reinstate him or get him another little office that would enable him to make his bread, and that he went on three or four occasions and Marks put him off, and finally Marks said to him: "Brown, I can't appoint my friends now, I am compelled to appoint these d—d hounds and curs to keep them from squealing on Kellogg." That is the excuse Marks gives to his friend Brown; and if any evidence is wanted of the truth of that, let me say that Marks was a high officer in the custom-house, and an appointee and friend of Kellogg's, and a republican, as a matter of course, and that he was not only actually in the city of New Orleans but before the committee, only actually in the city of New Orleans but before the committee, and I believe was put upon the stand, and yet the sitting member never offered to contradict, by him, these words. Now, how was that done?

It would be too tedious to go over in detail every one of these witnesses. There was a man by the name of Deslondes, who was the republican secretary of state under Governor Kellogg's administration. He was out of office, and he commenced to drop out hints here and there in regard to the iniquities of this Legislature. He began to intimate that Governor Kellogg was not elected Senator, and that the State Legislature was not republican, and the State was not republican, and that Kellogg was not elected any more than he himself was. While he is indulging himself in these little recreations and amusements, all at once he receives an appointment in the custom-house, and his squeal is stopped.

Then a man by the name of Moore who had also been a customhouse officer, our same friend, who had been a candidate for the Legislature and register at the same time in ward No. 7, and had managed to carry the election in that ward by the use of fraudulent certificates as I have stated, was out of employment; he was wanting bread, and commenced walking the streets, and he commenced talking as he walked, and intimated that Kellogg was no more elected than he was, that the whole thing was a fraud, and how things were fixed up in his ward, and how these three members carried the quorum of the Legislature, and so on, and so on; and all at once he receives an appointment in the custom-house and his squeal is stopped, and we hear no more from him.

It is the same way with these affidavit-makers; they all commenced making affidavits, and as fast as they did so, or announced their purpose to do so, they received something to stop their squeal. De Lacy told a number of persons on the streets of New Orleans what had taken place about the bribery that he afterward made an affidavit to, and he comes on here to Washington and swears, as I have adverted to, not only to the denial of everything in his affidavit, but that he never signed the affidavit at all, and immediately the custom-house doors of New Orleans rolled back wide upon their hinges like the rates of the maning and indeed him and his caucal interests for gates of the morning and inclosed him, and his squeal is stopped for-

So it is with every one of them; and now that we have seen how the curs were stopped from squealing, so far as the action of the sit-ting member was concerned, let us see if anybody else had anything to do with it, because you must recollect that when proof begins to come home that the sitting member from Louisiana is not a properly qualified member, it begins to come home to higher places, and it begins to show that other people are perhaps not the proper occupants of office if justice should take place, and therefore it seems the Ex-ecutive Government must come to the rescue and stop this squealing that is threatening to disturb the republican party of the United

It will be necessary to advert to another straw, which shows sometimes how the wind blows, as it is said. We all know that even a newspaper report has some foundation for it as a general rule, and we know very well that no reports are sent off by the press association from this city without some substantial foundation to rest upon. About this time, about May 12th, when the thing was getting warm in relation to this contest, we find in the newspapers the following dispatch sent from this city to the press of New Orleans: dispatch sent from this city to the press of New Orleans:

WASHINGTON, May 12, 1879.

In view of the interest the leading republicans and the Administration take in the result of the contest for Kellogo's seat, it is certain that any republican who can be shown to have worked against him at home will stand a slim chance of any recognition from Hayes or the next Administration if it be republican. Kellogo is playing his hand for all it is worth, and don't intend to have any fire in the rear if he can help it.

And again, a few days afterward:

Washington, May 15, 1879.

Everything is not lovely in republican circles in Louisiana; in fact, quite the reverse. There are said to be some people in the party who are not helping Hon. WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG as they ought, and one of them holds a high position in

Hon. John Sherman and Attorney-General Devens have signified their willingness to aid Kelloge in this contest all they can, and some of the custom-house rolls are very likely to be revised pretty soon.

For instance, one of the cipher dispatches which I read announced that "Camelia was dismissed to-day," and to "send on all nominations that are necessary."

Mr. VANCE. Yes, sir. I believe it is not in evidence that they were sent by Roberts.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. W. H. R. are his initials. I assume that they were sent by him. They are not in evidence anyhow.

Mr. VANCE. Certainly not. I gave them as a matter of public news at the time in regard to the intentions of the Administration in material to the sitting member in this contest. That is all I cite them news at the time in regard to the intentions of the Administration in sustaining the sitting member in this contest. That is all I cite them for; and in support of the truth of these dispatches I have cited the cipher dispatches requesting that nominations be sent on and urging for the appointments to be made, especially while Sherman was absent, because Hawley was a little easier. And now I desire to say further that I find, not in the testimony, but in the brief which was filed by the counsel for the sitting member, a letter from the Assistant Savatow of the Tream Hayley the country have the statement the savatow of the Tream Hayley the country and the savatow of the Tream Hayley the country and the savatow of the Tream Hayley the savatow of the Savatow of the Tream Hayley the savatow of the Tream Hayley the savatow of the Tream Hayley the savatow of the Savatow ant Secretary of the Treasury, Hawley, the man who had got "easier," I am glad to say, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY, Washington, D. C., February 3, 1880.

Sir: In compliance with your verbal request of the 2d instant, I have the honor to inform you that the records of this office do not show that either W. J. De Lacy or Jules Seveignes was employed in the custom-house at New Orleans, Louisiana, during the month of June, 1879.

I am, very respectfully,

JOHN B. HAWLEY, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. W. P. Kellogg, United States Senate.

There is an assertion put forward that the rolls of the custom-house did not show the appointment of either of these men at that time, and yet here is the roll itself produced to the committee and sworn to by the clerk, in which the names appear, De Lacy in June, Seveignes July 1, and both of them swore that they were on the custom-house rolls at the same time in June. I read from the roll:

De Lacy, W. J., inspector from June 1, to June 27, at $90 per month.

De Lacy, W. J., inspector from June 1, to June 27, at $90 per month.

I stated it at $75. His promotion was greater than I thought. And here is the sworn roll now, and here is the gratuitous letter of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury contradicting the sworn roll in the interest of the sitting member. If that does not look as if the correspondent of that newspaper knew what he was doing when he penned these dispatches, I should like to know what you would call it. Seveignes swears in his testimony that he resigned on the 2d of June, and he was reappointed on the 1st of July as appears by the roll, so that he was on the roll in June, if he is to be believed. And there is another dispatch that will show very clearly why these men resigned. Nearly all of these witnesses who came on here did resign, or at least swore they did, and why?

New Orleans, June 1, 1879.

NEW ORLEANS, June 1, 1879.

To Senator W. P. KELLOGG, Washington, D. C.:

Will Terrier Jefferson Jockey before or after Dish Jockey Canter Mutton wants resign and have hat serve Jefferson. A. S. BADGER.

The meaning of which is that this fellow Canter Mutton—I do not know him; it is a kind of mutton I am not acquainted with; it is down South but it is not Southdown, [laughter]—Canter Mutton wants to resign and wants to have the pay of a Government witness. These fellows who had sounded all the depths and shallows of corruption and the perquisites of Federal office, found out no doubt that when they were summoned here as office-holders they could get nothing but their mileage, could not get any per diem, but having resigned as Government officers they could get both per diem and mileage and be restored after they got back, which would amount to more than the pay they would lose in the interim; and therefore "Will Terrier Jockey before or after Dish Jockey." That is, as I translate it, "Will Kellogg's witnesses swear before or after Spofford's witnesses swear. Canter Mutton wants resign and have hat (pay to) serve (as witness) Jefferson."

Another dispatch which I am tempted to read, although I have read many of them, and I fear I have fatigued the Senate, the last I will read, was from General Badger; and it is this:

NEW ORLEANS. May 29, 1879.

To Senator W. P. Kellogg, Washington, D. C.:

Getting good gnat. Don't encourage Setter for Salles place. Horse rainbow

Some fellow had been offended-

Salles removed ; besides, too many grapes there.

A. S. BADGER.

That is, "too many members of the Packard legislature in the custom-house; don't put in any more; don't encourage Setter for Salles' place." Which I think very good advice.

Now, although the clerk under the control of General Badger, collector of customs, New Orleans, in charge of the rolls, appeared before the sub-committee with the rolls in his hands and swore to their correctness and exhibited the rolls in proof of their correctness, swore that their names were there upon the list, here is another letter from General Badger, collector of customs:

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 5, 1880.

Hon. W. P. KELLOGG:

SIR: Previous to my leaving New Orleans I examined the custom-house rolls and found that the witnesses De Lacy and Seveignes were not employed in the custom-house during the month of June, 1879.

Very respectfully,

A. S. BADGER, Collector.

Yet the sworn rolls say they both were there; the men came here and swore they were on that roll; but so anxious was the Government, as it seems, to aid in this case, that this letter is volunteered and published in the brief of the sitting member as a contradiction of the sworn testimony of both the witnesses and the rolls in the custody of the Government.

But we are told in excuse for this vast number of members of the Packard legislature who are found in Federal office in New Orleans that there was nowhere else for them to go. The sitting member, on the day on which the report of this committee was read at the desk, got up and told us in substance that these poor men were bulldozed and driven out of their parishes, and that they had nowhere else to lay their heads, and that was one reason why thirty-five or forty of the their heads, and that was one reason why thirty-five or forty of the members of that legislature were now ensconced in the custom-house and feeding at the public expense. Is that so? How did it happen that most of these men got in there just after this case was to be reopened, when the excitement sprang up in regard to the seat of the sitting member? How did that happen? Where did they lay their heads from the month of January, in the year 1877, when they were members of this so-called legislature, and after it dissolved—where did they lay their heads they have their heads they have the statement of the search did they lay their heads up to this time when they commenced to squeal?

De Lacy swore that he went home and staid there a good portion of his time. Milton Jones swore the same thing. When he was before the committee in New Orleans he came from home, in one of the interior parishes, although drawing pay as a custom-house employé. Nearly every one of them had been home who had any home to go

Nearly every one of them had been home who had any home to go to, or any home worth going to, or anything to do at home. But all at once, as soon as the committee is appointed and the resolution to take testimony in the Spofford-Kellogg case is adopted, these homeless and houseless and friendless men began to and places to lay their persecuted heads, and very good places, too, and their squeals, which had been begun, were stopped, as I have said.

On the subject of bribery, before I pass from it, let me briefly refer to the testimony. The bribery of Blackstone, and of De Lacy, and of Milton Jones, and of J. J. Johnson, and of A. Milson, all members of the Packard legislature, is proven by their own confessions as contained in their affidavits and in divers declarations to other men.
Souer's testimony, a member of the Legislature, and the intimate friend of Governor Kellogg and the confidential agent of that gentleman up to this present time, as we see by the telegraphic cipher dispatches—Souer's testimony, from pages 1123 to 1124, shows that the Legislature, being unable to draw any money from the treasury of Louisiana, was kept together by advances made by him, and that he selected the poorest and the most dependent ones to make his advances to; and he admits that he did so for the purpose of keeping vances to; and he admits that he did so for the purpose of keeping them together and promoting the interest of the republican party. If you will read that testimony carefully you will find, in my opinion, sufficient to establish the proof of the bribery of these men by it alone.

As to the bribery of Senator Twitchell, read the testimony of Garrett, page 809, who likewise had a habitation in this very custom-house at one time. Twitchell is now consul in Canada. And Twitchell, as the other members of the committee say, proves his own innocence by his own oath; that is to say, the man charged with the crime comes into court and purges himself by stating that he is not guilty! Twitchell denies that he was bribed, and that ought to be satisfactory, it is thought by the other side, but Twitchell unfortunately had made admissions to other men, many others; he made admissions to Francis Garrett that he had received this bribe, or rather Garrett saw the bribe passed over to him. Garrett says he was in the room when the money was passed.

As to acknowledgment of the bribery of Milton Jones, read the tes-As to acknowledgment of the bribery of Milton Jones, read the testimony of Cavanac, page 993, and as to the bribery of De Joie and Stamps see the testimony of Flanagan, pages 599 and 600. As to the bribery of Dickerson, see the testimony of Dreifus, page 668, and Cavanac, page 926. As to the bribery of C. F. Brown, see Cavanac's testimony, page 926. As to the bribery of Simmes, McGloire, and Robert Johnson, see Murray's testimony, page 117. As to the bribery of Percy Baker, see Carnoy's testimony, pages 453 and 454. As to the bribery of the Packard legislature generally, see De Lacy's testimony, pages 152, 153, 154, and Watson's affidavit, page 334.

There can be no kind of doubt that there was bribery there, and the only way taken to avoid it is to say these were men of bad character. The very thing that is relied upon to rebut the charge of bribater.

The very thing that is relied upon to rebut the charge of bribery is that which, in my estimation, most confirms it, because the worse the character of the men upon whom the charge of bribery is made the more likely they were to have been bribed. As a matter of course, if they were men of good character they would not have committed the crime of receiving bribes. These very men have admitted their own guilt; but their corruption is otherwise proven. These very men left the Packard legislature, went over to the Nicholls legisla-ture, and took their seats—all of them who were elected beyond dispute—and there they formed a ring, as was sworn to by this man De Lacy—twelve of them—to sell their votes for all they could get, appointed an agent absolutely by the name of Demas to go about, in the language of the witness, and make their trades and contract for their votes.

That was the character of men upon whom bribery is charged in the Packard legislature. Men who are so willing to admit their own corruption it is very fair to suppose were corrupted if anything was offered to them, and the only means by which it can possibly be supposed that they were uncorrupted was because nobody had offered bosed that they were uncorrepted was decaded noted that they may have them anything in the Packard legislature.

Mr. President, it is said, though, in reply to all this that it has all passed by; it is all res adjudicata, a settled and decided thing, and can never more be inquired into. No matter how much fraud there was in the registration of voters preparatory to the election of 1876; no matter how much fraud there was in counting the returns of the election of 1876; no matter how much bribery there was in the pretended election of Governor Kellogg to the United States Senate in 1877, it cannot be inquired into, for it has once been decided upon, and now it cannot be reopened.

But, Mr. President, it is admitted by gentlemen upon the other side (and I refer to the report made in the Butler-Corbin case) that the principle of res adjudicata is as follows:

But the principle

Say the majority of the committee as it was then constitutedof res adjudicate can only apply where parties to the controversy have been before the court or body having jurisdiction thereof, and have been heard upon the merits of their respective claims, and a decision has been rendered thereon.

Now, if that is so, what are the facts of this case that would bring it within the principle, as admitted by the committee that represented a majority of the Senate at that time? Was this case heard by the Elections Committee and by the Senate upon its merits, and was it decided upon its merits after full, fair, free, and complete investigation, as the sitting member himself averred the other day? That was very far indeed from the case. When these gentlemen, Messrs, Ket-Logg and Spofford, appeared before the committee first, I gather from the report that they were requested to make their statements and to see how far they could agree, and if there was any possibility of ar-riving at a conclusion. They did make their statements, and after their statements were made and the issue as deduced from these statements appeared, then Mr. Spofford demanded the privilege of taking testimony to make his part of the case good; and the committee in the face of that demand decided that the testimony that had been taken before the Field and the Morrison committees and the various committees of Congress which had been down to Louisiana to investigate the affairs of that State, as far as applicable, should be used as testimony in the present case, to which the contesting member, Mr. Spofford, agreed, and then the committee closed down and would let him take no more, though he stood there protesting, "I have more testimony, and I want more witnesses to come before this committee." In the face of that protest a resolution was passed that Kellogg was entitled upon the merits of the case to the seat, and that resolution was reported to the Senate, and the contestant followed here, and through his friends upon this floor protested every inch of the way; and in the face of that protest the Senate adopted the resolution seating the sitting member from the State of Louisiana. And do you call that protest a state of the seat of th that res adjudicata? Do you call that a full, fair, complete investiga-tion of the case which shall close it as to the law and the facts for-ever, when not one single syllable of testimony was taken in the case, and when the contestant was standing there and clamoring for per-mission to produce witnesses, and that was denied him?

Why, Mr. President, no case upon the face of the earth can be found like this. Here are two or three cases upon the docket of a court, numbers 1, 2, and 3, and when numbers 1 and 2 are disposed of numnumbers 1, 2, and 3, and when numbers 1 and 2 are disposed of number 3 is called, and the issues are eliminated from the pleadings, and you prepare to go to the jury. The plaintiff gets up and says, "May it please your honor, I want to introduce witnesses to prove my issues;" and the court says, "No, you cannot have permission to introduce your witnesses. In the two cases, numbers 1 and 2, which went ahead of you, much testimony was taken about a matter very similar in character, and you can take that testimony and make the most of it. You shall not have a single solitary witness to swear in your case." most of it.

That is the case here precisely, except that there was no such case on the docket as this contested election between Spofford and Kel-LOGG; but roving commissions, with a view to ascertain how the presidential election went in the State of Louisiana in the fall of 1876, had been sent down there to summon Dick, Tom, and Harry, and take all the testimony they could in relation to the state of society and the state of the polls and the state of the bulldozing, and every other state that they could think of; and this contestant, who has a personal case, is denied the privilege of taking testimony, but is told he may eliminate as much as possible that is applicable to his case out of this general mass of testimony taken before these congressional committees; and you call that a full, free, and fair investiga-tion, and on such a state of things report to the Senate. And upon the rules of law, by analogizing this Senate to a court, a rule is to be transplanted from those tribunals by which the Senate shall be held to declare that never more shall the Senate look into this case, although the Constitution of the United States requires that each State shall be represented by two Senators chosen by the Legislature thereof. A technical rule of law is to be made here, Mr. President, to supplant your conscience and my conscience and the obligations which we are under to support the Constitution of our country, and to deprive a State of one of her most inestimable rights.

It may be satisfactory to us, it may appear to us as plain as the shining of the sun in the heavens, that this Packard legislature was not the Legislature of the State of Louisiana; that it never was authornot the Legislature of the State of Louislana; that it never was authorized to speak for that Commonwealth; and that it was as pure a usurpation, supported by the military of the United States, as ever existed; it may be as clear to you and me as the shining of the sun in the heavens that that is the case, and, if so, that the Constitution is violated every moment and every hour and every day that the honorable sitting member from Louisiana sits upon this floor and her proper representative is kept out; but resentative is the order to be the state of the sta representative is kept out; but res adjudicata is stronger than the Constitution of the United States. And we must touch it not!

No, sir; that will not do. That cannot be right.

Mr. President, the honorable gentleman who prepared the brief for the sitting member, a lawyer of eminence, regaled us with a citation from a very eminent legal authority, Dickens's Mutual Friend, in re-buttal of the testimony of one Barney Williams. An accidental citation from such a learned legal authority reminded me that perhaps the importance which is placed upon the plea of res adjudicata in this case might likewise have been derived from the same volume, for there was a character in that book by the name of Rogue Riderhood who had once a case in court and he came to the conclusion that the most precious of all pleas in law was what he called an Alfred David. Said he: "Precious be the obligations of an Alfred David." And so it seems to be in this case, precious is the application of the plea of res adjudicata, if it can be made to override the Constitution of the

It seems to me there is a legal and a logical absurdity in this whole case. Either the Packard legislature was the true one or the Nicholls legislature was the true one. Both could not be, any more than two bodies could occupy the same position in space at the same time. Neither could it be that the Packard legislature could be the legal one to-day and the Nicholls legislature the legal one to-morrow. Certainly on this matter of legality the two legislatures could not wind the property of the same plants. "ride and tie," to use a phrase employed when two men have only one horse between them; certainly they could not divide the empire like the old Roman consuls used to do when the command of the army was dual, and one of them would command on one day and one on the other. That certainly could not be.

If that Packard legislature was the legal Legislature at the time that it assembled and elected Senator Kellog, it was the legal Legislature until the term of its members expired. If that Spofford legislature was the lawfullegislature at any one time during the whole term for which its members were elected under the constitution of the State of Louisiana, it was the legal Legislature for the whole time, and though it may not have had a quorum to begin with, the noment its ranks were full and its quorum was complete its legality had relation back, and everything that it did was legal. Is there any denying that? Is there any refining that away? Is there any possibility of avoiding that conclusion? Sir, it seems to me not.

But we are told this is a dangerous precedent, a dangerous example to set; and gentlemen on the other side have taunted us "how often are you going to try a question, and whose seat is safe?" I will tell you. Mr. President, what answer I make to that. I am going to try you, Mr. President, what answer I make to that. I am going to try a Senator every time that it is shown to me that he is on this floor voting and exercising the duties of Senator in defiance of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. CARPENTER. I wish with the Senator's permission to ask a question for the purpose of ascertaining the precise point maintained by the Senator. The Constitution of the United States declares that by the Senator. The Constitution of the United States declares that each State shall be represented by two Senators on this floor, to be elected by the Legislature. It provides that this body shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members. Now, do I understand the Senator from North Carolina to maintain that after this Senate has taken up a case, heard it as long as it thinks necessary, and finally disposed of it by a resolution declaring who is entitled to that seat on the merits-do I understand him to maintain that that settles nothing, that the next week it may be taken up and decided the other way, and the third week put back again, and the fourth reversed and so on forever?

Mr. VANCE. No, sir; not so far. I do not hold "so on forever."

Mr. CARPENTER. During the term?

Mr. VANCE. I hold that if the Constitution had nothing to do with the question, the doctrine of res adjudicata would not apply in such a case as is presented in the Spofford-Kellogg case; that although the resolutions said it had been investigated upon the merits the record of that very committee and the record of the Senate showed that it had not been so investigated; and just as long as injustice is done, just so long as the case is not discharged according to the law of the land, then so long may it be reopened and reheard. That is the opinion I have.

Mr. President, I am willing to see every Senator's seat in this house disturbed and called in question and put in jeopardy whenever it is shown to me that he is here as the choice of an illegal mob in the streets of some city, instead of the choice or representative of the Legislature of a sovereign State. I am perfectly willing to have my own or any other Senator's seat, so far as I am concerned, disturbed, whenever that state of fact appears.

whenever that state of fact appears.

I will tell you what is a dangerous precedent. It is a dangerous precedent to let a man come here and sit on this floor by the dictate of an ephemeral body of men which assembled and assumed to call themselves the Legislature of a State, that dissolved and acknowledged they never were the Legislature of the State. That is a dangerous precedent. And I will tell you what is another dangerous precedent, Mr. President. It is a dangerous precedent to pass a resolution declaring that a Senator is entitled to his seat upon the merit of the question after a full and fair investigation, when in fact and in truth there has been no full and fair investigation, or any other kind of investigation, when his contestant was not permitted to bring forward his testimony. That is a dangerous precedent, and one that I am not willing to sustain as a member of this body.

The minority report charges that this is the work of partisanship,

The minority report charges that this is the work of partisanship, and attributes it to the anxiety of the majority of the committee to take advantage of their party power in the Senate. I shall not retort that allegation or that insinuation by saying that it perhaps accounts for the fact of the hurried and imperfect manner in which the previous investigation was slurred over and the refusal to allow Judge spofford to take testimony, in order to get a member seated before that party majority should dissolve. But they say that nothing is changed but the party majority in the Senate. Well, sir, to some extent that is true. The events which are in the past, of course, cannot change. That which has been is a thing which always shall remain just as it was. All the facts in the case were then just as they are now and just as they will remain until time has pessed into even are now and just as they will remain until time has passed into eter-But other things have changed. For instance, the amount of light that has been thrown in upon this dark transaction has changed. The amount of proof that has been discovered is now different from what was then known when this investigation was first undertaken. In that respect there has been a material change of other things besides the party majority. As a matter of course there would have been no second investigation, I suppose, if the party majority had not changed, because the previous party majority had refused absolutely to make such investigation, and it was hopeless to apply to it again.

I want to call attention briefly, and then I shall have closed, to the difference between this case and the Corbin-Butler case as I understand. The Corbin-Butler case occurred not so long ago but that it is still fresh in the memory of most of the Senators present. case there had been an investigation by the taking of all the testimony that was desired by any of the parties. Let me read a little from the report, which will put the Senate in possession if they should have forgotten any of the facts of the case:

Mr. Butler filed a printed statement, setting forth the issues of fact and law upon which he claimed the seat.

Mr. Corbin also filed a like statement, setting forth the issues of fact and law upon which he claimed the seat.

Replies to the statements thus made were also filed.

On examination of the issues thus made up, there seemed to be no material issue of fact between the contestants, and the question as to which of them, or whether either, was duly elected by a legal Legislature, was one of law.

I am reading from the minority report.

In considering this petition the facts which have been presented to this committee are precisely the same which were presented on the former consideration of this case. Not a new fact has been presented, nor offered to be presented, and not an old fact has been withdrawn or modified, nor offered to be withdrawn or modified. The arguments now made have been made from the same statements and briefs filed on the former hearing, and not a new question of law has been presented except the issue of res adjudicata. No charge of fraud has been made against the former decision. No allegation that testimony was before excluded which ought to have been admitted, or that testimony was admitted which ought to have been excluded; no request by either party to produce testimony has been denied, and no pretense that testimony then offered and excluded can now be produced. The jurisdiction is the same; the parties are the same; the subject-matter of contest is the same; the facts are the same, and the questions of law are the same. The petition now before us is a mere, sheer, naked proposition that the Senate at a subsequent session shall revote on the identical questions, facts, and issues on which the Senate voted and decided at a former session.

That case differs from the present one in this: that in this case there never was a complete and fair and full investigation; that in this case the contestant, Judge Spofford, tried to take testimony but was refused permission; that he demanded to be heard and that demand was refused. In this case there are new questions of law, there are new questions of fact arising, and it is not precisely the same question. Therefore it is a better case than that of Butler-Corbin; and yet in Therefore it is a better case than that of Butler-Corbin; and yet in the case of Corbin and Butler, in which, as we have seen from the minority report, and which is not denied by the majority report, the precise state of fact and the precise state of law was the same upon the second petition as it was upon the first, and yet nearly every republican Senator on that side of the House voted to take up that case and to rehear it and try it over again in spite of the plea of res adjudicata. There were 28 republican votes in a closely divided Senate for that position.

So that according to the doctrines announced and adhered to by both the minority and the majority reports in the Butler-Corbin case, if that case was not res adjudicata (and a large portion of the republican gentlemen of the Senate decided that it was not) then this one cannot be, for it is entirely different in that the testimony of the contestant, Judge Spofford, was refused upon application.

There is another consideration. The Legislature which sent General BUTLER to the Senate was the Legislature which time estaberal BUTLER to the Senate was the Legislature which time established, which proved to be the true and lawful Legislature of the State of South Carolina. The Legislature which brought the honorable sitting member from Louisiana to the floor of the Senate was a Legislature which eventually proved that it was not the proper and legal one, because it dissolved and gave up the ghost. Now, who on the face of this earth recognizes that Legislature? Not a living soul with authority so to pronounce will now say that that proved to be with authority so to pronounce will now say that that proved to be the legal Legislature of Louislana.

The Legislature that elected Judge Spofford to the Senate, the Nicholls legislature, was recognized by the executive of that State; it was recognized by the people of that State; it was recognized by the Executive of the United States; it was recognized by the judicial powers of the United States; it was recognized by the Congress of the United States, at least in one branch, and inferentially in other cases by both branches; and it was recognized by the men who held seats in the Packard legislature themselves; and I may add that the universal assent of mankind is that the Nicholls legislature was the right one.

The Packard legislature never did but one recognized act. They never legislated on anything but to elect Governor Kellogg to the Senate; and it never received from any human soul any recognition except from the United States Senate when it seated Governor Kellogg. It only lived long enough to elect a Senator, and the Senate only recognized its existence long enough to take him in and seat him upon this floor, and then it died. This body had such an ephemeral existence, that over its tombstone might be written the same as was written on the grave of a very young child who lived only three

Since I am so soon done for, I wonder what in thunder I was begun for.

You may search the records of mankind, the literature of the English tongue, and you will find no act that legislature ever did perform except the election of a United States Senator, and you will find no recognition of it by any human authority except by the Senate of the United States in taking that Senator in upon this floor, and then immediately it went back upon its own record. Would it not be perfectly the senator in upon this floor, and then immediately it went back upon its own record. mediately it went back upon its own record. Would it not be perfectly and absolutely preposterous to say at this late day that that was the Legislature of the State of Louisiana? If the governor of the State of Louisiana and the Legislature itself and the judiciary and the people of Louisiana, and the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States and the judiciary of the United States and the men who constituted the Packard legislature themselves did not know whether or not this body was a legal legislature, who can know it?

who can know it?

[Laughter.]

Mr. President, it is absolutely and perfectly preposterous. As for me, I am not afraid to take this position. I know the minority report undertakes to put me on trial. They say these men who have been received under pretensions of loyalty to the Constitution are to be tested as to the truth of them. In other words, gentlemen upon this floor from the South are to be tried and not Kellogg and Spofford. I am willing to be tried. The time to do right has come, and I am willing to do it let the consequences be what they may. In my ford. I am willing to be tried. The time to do right has come, and I am willing to do it let the consequences be what they may. In my opinion, a candid opinion, under the Constitution of the United States and the facts which have been proven before this Senate, the sitting member from Louisiana is not entitled to sit here. He sits here in defiance of the Constitution of his country, and if so I shall vote to eject him from that seat and put the properly constituted and authorized representative of the State of Louisiana into the place, let the consequences be what they may. Other gentlemen may entertain different opinions; I do not know how that may be; I speak entirely for myself

I have detained the Senate longer than I designed when I began to speak. The facts are so voluminous, there is so much testimony to be looked into, that it is almost impossible to do justice to the subject in less time than I have consumed, and I cannot pretend that I have done it justice.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is so late that I suppose further discussion will not be had on these resolutions to-day. I move to lay aside the pending and all prior orders and take up Senate bill No. 550.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. There is a good deal of executive business. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. GARLAND in the chair.) The Senator from Illinois moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I withdraw the motion for the Senator from

Nebraska

Mr. SAUNDERS. I hope the Senate will take up Senate bill No.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I hope the special order will not be laid aside.
Mr. SAUNDERS. It will take but a moment.
Mr. SAULSBURY. Let a gentleman take the floor on the question

Mr. SAULSBURY. Let a gentleman take the floor on the question of privilege and then the Senator from Nebraska can ask to have it laid aside informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Nebraska to ask the Senate to lay aside the special order informally for the purpose of taking up the bill indicated by him.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to suggest that a bill cannot be laid aside informally by a vote of the Senate. It requires unanimous consent to do that, so that the regular business may keep its place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senate give unanimous consent?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Does it require unanimous consent?
Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator yield until the floor can be taken on the special order?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Certainly. I withdraw the motion for the time

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I desire to make some remarks on the regular order, the Kellogg case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, upon which the Senator from Missouri has the floor.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed an enrolled joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) authorizing the Secretary of War to send rations to the sufferers from the recent cyclone at Macon, Mississippi; and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President

Mr. SAUNDERS. Now, the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] yielding, I renew my request to take up Senate bill No. 550.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there unanimous consent to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 550) to extend the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska shall be, and hereby is, extended so as to include all that portion of the Territory of Dakota lying south of the forty-third parallel of north latitude, and east of the Keyapaha River and west of the main channel of the Missouri River; and when the Indian title to the lands thus described shall be extinguished, the jurisdiction over said lands shall be, and hereby is, ceded to the State of Nebraska, and the northern boundary of the State shall be, and hereby is, extended to said forty-third parallel, as fully and effectually as if said lands had been included in the boundaries of said State at the time of its admission to the Unior; reserving to the United States the original right of soil in said lands and of disposing of the same: Provided, That this act, so far as jurisdiction is concerned, shall not take effect until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that the Indian title to said lands has been extinguished; nor shall it take effect until the State of Nebraska shall have assented to the provisions of this act.

Mr. COCK FELL. Loffer the following amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I offer the following amendment— Mr. SAUNDERS. Let me put in one from the committee first. The committee have authorized me to make another amendment, which I wish to move first.

Mr. COCKRELL. Very well.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I move to strike out the words "and hereby is" where they occur in lines 9 and 10, and where they occur in line 11, so as to read:

The jurisdiction over said lands shall be ceded to the State of Nebraska, and the northern boundary of the State shall be extended to said forty-third parallel.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to insert in line 9, immediately after the word "extinguished," the words "if it shall ever be extinguished;" that is, if the Indian title shall ever be extinguished.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have no objection to that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to the amendment of the Committee on Territories

Mr. HOAR. The amendment has not yet been reported from the

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "extinguished," in line 9, it is proposed to insert "if it shall ever be extinguished;" so as to read:

And when the Indian title to the lands thus described shall be extinguished, if it shall ever be extinguished, the jurisdiction over lands shall be ceded to the State of Nebraska.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to. Mr. COCKRELL. At the close I move to add:

Nor shall this act create any liability or obligation of any kind whatever on the part of the United States to extinguish said Indian title.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the Senator to add "or in any way affect the Indian title thereto."

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to that.
Mr. TELLER. Would that do any good?
Mr. DAWES. I do not know that it would, but I do not think it would do any harm.

Mr. COCKRELL. There can be no objection to that, as a matter

Mr. TELLER. It is well enough for Senators to look after the interests of these Indian reservations, but it does seem to me a remarkable thing that in the Senate we should put words into a bill that everybody admits will have no meaning whatever. Does anybody suppose that because we put this piece of land in the State of Nebraska the Government loses its title to the land or that the Indians lose any title they may have under any stipulation of a treaty? Then why put in these unmeaning and needless words?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, as modified, to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.
Mr. INGALLS. I wish to know whether the words "and hereby Mr. INGALLS. I wish to know whether the words "and hereby is," after the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, remain in any portion of the bill. I was not able to learn from the reporting of his amendment at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. COCKRELL. They remain in the fourth line.

Mr. INGALLS. Those words, in my judgment, should also be stricken from that line. After the word "be," in line 4, I move to strike out the words "and hereby is."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was read.

Mr. THURMAN. I have never read this bill, but I have just heard it read at the desk, and it strikes me as something anomalous that requires explanation. Are we going to extend the line of a State to embrace territory within it, and at the same time say the State shall have no jurisdiction over the Indian territory thus acquired?

Mr. SAUNDERS. No jurisdiction until the Indian title shall have

Mr. SAUNDERS. No jurisdiction until the Indian title shall have been extinguished.

Mr. THURMAN. But it is a mere promise to give the lands to the State in future. How can you extend the line of a State so as to include new territory and at the same time say the State shall have no jurisdiction over it. That passes my comprehension.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Probably as good an answer as I could give to the Senator from Ohio would be to say that the very same words were used in the act attaching the Platte district to the State of Missouri. That was done with the same provision exactly used in this bill, that the jurisdiction should not extend over the territory until the Indian title had been extinguished.

Mr. THURMAN. If it meant to say that the act should not take

Mr. THURMAN. If it meant to say that the act should not take Mr. THURMAN. If it meant to say that the act should not take effect until that happened, and the President should make a proclamation to that effect, then I could understand it; but how you can include by words of present significance a territory in a State and at the same time say that the State shall have no jurisdiction at all, is what I cannot understand. While I am up, as I know nothing about it, I wish to inquire of the Senator how much new territory does this embrace?

Mr. SAUNDERS. It will make somewhere probably about eight-een townships. The territory is about sixty miles long, a sort of irregular triangle. It is on an average about eight or nine miles wide and runs a length of sixty miles. It is one mile wide at the west end. The purpose is simply to straighten the line. I have a map of it here if any one wishes to look at it.

Mr. THURMAN. It is eight miles wide at one end and one mile at the other and sixty miles long?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes. There are about eighteen townships of land all told.

Mr. KIRKWOOD. It runs up to the Niobrara River?
Mr. SAUNDERS. As the line of the State of Nebraska now stands it runs up the Missouri River to the mouth of the Niobrara River, and then up that stream until it comes to the mouth of the Keyapaha, then up the Keyapaha until it strikes the forty-third parallel of north latitude, then running west to the western boundary of the State. What we are asking is to extend that line east of the Missouri so as to get on the forty-third parallel as the north line of Nebraska and the south line of Dakota.

Mr. ALLISON. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska what the character of this land is that is to be transferred?

Mr. PADDOCK. About the average character of the whole Sioux reservation. It is a part of that.

Mr. SAUNDERS. There are two or three large streams running through it, furnishing bottom land.

Mr. ALLISON. Good agricultural or pasture land?
Mr. SAUNDERS. Yes, sir.
Mr. TELLER. Good land?
Mr. SAUNDERS. I should like to read for the information of Senators the act to extend the western boundary of the State of Missouri to the Missouri River, which has been adapted to this case

Be it enacted, &c., That when the Indian title to all the lands lying between the State of Missouri and the Missouri River shall be extinguished, the jurisdiction over said lands shall be hereby ceded to the State of Missouri, and the western boundary of said State shall be then extended to the Missouri River, reserving to the United States the original right of soil in said lands, and of disposing of the same: Provided, That this act shall not take effect until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that the Indian title to said lands has been extinguished; nor shall it take effect until the State of Missouri shall have assented to the provisions of this act.

Approved June 7, 1836.

Approved June 7, 1836.

Mr. THURMAN. That is just as I suggested. The act itself was not to take effect until the Indian title was extinguished and the President should have issued his proclamation; but if I understood this bill aright-perhaps I did not understand it correctly, as I have never seen it—it takes effect in presenti.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is the same act.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to interfere with the bill at all.

The State of Nebraska is a very small State, and no doubt needs these two hundred and seventy square miles!

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to state to the Senator from Ohio that the acquisition of the territory is a matter of very little account to the State of Nebraska; but a part of the boundary is on a dry creek the State of Nebraska; but a part of the boundary is on a dry creek a portion of the year, and it is not a proper boundary. The Keyapaha is a very small, insignificant stream, and a dry creek is a very poor boundary for a State. The desire is that the established parallel, the forty-third parallel, shall be the boundary. That is the object sought to be accomplished, and not the acquisition of the territory, which is to be accomplished, and not the acquisition of the territory, which is a matter of very small importance.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to say just one word. The proposition is merely to include this strip of land within the territorial limits of the State without bringing it under the lawful jurisdiction of the State until the Indian title shall be extinguished. That is the proposition.

Mr. PADDOCK. Of course there will be no jurisdiction on the part of the State until the title is extinguished any way. This is a defined permanent reservation, and of course the State would have no jurisdiction over it, even if it had been originally within its limits.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not urging that as an objection to the bill, but as a reason why we should dispose of it.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska whether this bill includes within the State of Nebraska the entire old

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska whether this bill includes within the State of Nebraska the entire old Ponca reservation, so that no part of it is left out?

Mr. PADDOCK. It does not interfere with the Ponca reservation at all.

Mr. DAWES. It does not cut it in two?

Mr. SAUNDERS. Oh, no.
Mr. PADDOCK. Not at all.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.
Mr. TELLER. Let the bill be read as amended. The Chief Clerk read the bill as amended.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Nebraska, is there not a jurisdiction in the United States, so far as offenses comis there not a jurisdiction in the United States, so far as offenses committed by white men are concerned, over the Indian reservation?

Mr. SAUNDERS. If so, it belongs to the Territory of Dakota. We are not interfering at all with the title.

Mr. HOAR. Then the difficulty suggested by the Senator from Ohio is not answered to my mind. I should like to know whether this becomes a part of the State of Nebraska; and if the State of Nebraska at once accepts, so far as jurisdiction is concerned, when the Indian title may not be extinguished for twenty years, under what authority can the United States punish one white man for an offense upon another in a State? If it is a part of the State, the United States cannot deal with this offense merely because it is on an Indian reservation. Indian reservation.

Mr. SAUNDERS. How do they do with the Indians residing in the State of New York?

Mr. HOAR. The United States does not punish white men who commit offenses one on another on an Indian reservation in the State of New York. I do not understand that it does.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I ask the question for information.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest why not strike out in the sixteenth and seventeenth lines the words "so far as jurisdiction is concerned," the entire act to take effect when the President shall make his proclamation? That answers all the Senator's purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts offer an amendment?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir; although I confess I do not understand the subject as well as the Senators in charge.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I think that this subject was thoroughly discussed at the time the Platte purchase was added to the State of Mis-

Then why not employ the same language?

Mr. SAUNDERS. We have.

Mr. BLAINE. The exact language?
Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator will pardon me, he does not follow the language. The words "so far as jurisdiction is concerned" are not in the Missouri act. That is just what makes the distinction.

Mr. SAUNDERS. The Missouri act reads:

Provided, That this act shall not take effect until the President shall by proclamation declare that the Indian title to said lands has been extinguished; nor shall it take effect until the State of Missouri shall have assented to the provisions of My amendment makes this bill conform to that act.

Mr. PADDOCK. There can be no objection to the amendment.
Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Nebraska will observe that in his bill the words are not that the act shall have no effect but only that it shall not take effect so far as the jurisdiction is concerned. Those words are not in the old Missouri act, not in the statute. Therefore the operation of this bill is to attempt to make the territory a part of a State and to provide that the State shall have no jurisdiction over it. If it be a part of the State, certainly the United States can have no jurisdiction over it except as it has over all State territory.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What is the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts!

Mr. HOAR. The proposition is to strike out the words "so far as jurisdiction is concerned" from the bill, which makes it exactly correspond to the act to which the Senator says it does correspond.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I have no objection to that amendment.

Mr. BLAINE. The Senator from Nebraska will observe that the committee undoubtedly, when framing the bill, referred to that act. One of the most elaborately discussed propositions of that day was the Platte purchase. The wording of that act by Colonel Benton was done with great care and to avoid the very points which have come up in this discussion; and as it is a precedent of such great moment it seems to me it would be wise in our legislation to follow it

Mr. SAUNDERS. The bill was intended to follow it.

Mr. PADDOCK. There can be no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SAUNDERS. There is no objection to the amendment. Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that we shall get into trouble with this bill in the shape we are putting it in, at all events. This is well known to be on the southern line of a portion of the Territory of Dakota. From the present indications Dakota will be a State probably in the next two or three years. I have no doubt that Dakota has a population at this time sufficient to entitle her to a Representative in Congress, and I know they will be here at the next Congress asking to be admitted, and undoubtedly will be admitted. When the State of Dakota is admitted the Indian title will remain unextin-State of Dakota is admitted the Indian title will remain unextinguished. The Government will probably admit Dakota when it demands admission, with some provision with reference to the Indian lands and Indian title, and here will be a little strip of land a mile wide at one end and eight miles wide at the other which will be neither in a State nor in a Territory, which will neither be subject to the laws of Dakota nor to the laws of Nebraska. I should like to inquire in what kind of a condition the people who are living there, whether they be white or red, would be placed.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do not think there is a single person living in the district of territory involved in this bill. So far as the intercourse laws are concerned. I should like to inquire of the Senator if course laws are concerned, I should like to inquire of the Senator if he thinks a change of that district from the Territory to State limita-he thinks a change of that district from the Territory to State limitations changes the state of the intercourse laws.

Mr. TELLER. That has not anything to do with the question. It will neither be in a State nor in a Territory, but will be between two States subject to the jurisdiction of neither.

Mr. PADDOCK. I think the Senator's conclusion is a wrong one.

Mr. TELLER. It may be that it is wrong.

Mr. PADDOCK. It certainly is wrong, because until the act itself takes effect the State does not obtain jurisdiction; it is not a part of the State until the law takes effect; it is still within the limits of the Territory

Mr. TELLER. If the honorable Senator from Nebraska will wait until I get through he will understand more about it, or less, I do not

Mr. PADDOCK. Less.
Mr. SAUNDERS. I cannot hear what the Senator says.
Mr. TELLER. It is not my fault. I am talking as loud as any decent man ought to talk.

This piece of ground will not be in Nebraska or Dakota, because we This piece of ground will not be in Nebraska or Dakota, because we put in here a provision that it shall not be in Nebraska until the Indian title is extinguished. That is an indefinite period. It may be for a thousand years. Then it will not come into Dakota, because it would be very unfair when we admit the State of Dakota to include after the passage of this bill this very piece of ground in Dakota; and so where will it be? What government will have jurisdiction of it? Neither of the States. I suppose the General Government will, as a piece of ground that is included in neither State; and it will be a remarkable condition of affairs for the Government to have a little a remarkable condition of affairs for the Government to have a little strip of ground a mile wide at one end and eight miles wide at the other and sixty miles long, without any government over it at all. The truth is, it ought to be put in the State of Nebraska, with some provision that the Government shall reserve the right to manage the Indians and take care of them as it does now. There is no objection to the Government having an Indian reservation within a State if when the Government puts it in the State the Government reserves the right to have exclusive control of the Indians, and that they have done in some instances in Nebraska, as I recollect in their organic act. organic act.

Mr. PADDOCK. Does the Senator understand that every inch of this territory is now within the limits of the Sioux reservation

Mr. TELLER. Certainly I do.

Mr. PADDOCK. It is a part of the Sioux reservation. Therefore, of course, the intercourse laws are in force absolutely, and no other laws so far as that tract is concerned, and putting it into the State does not change the state of the law in respect of offenses that may be committed there. It will be in the Territory until this law takes effect

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. HOAR.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now let the bill be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill as amended.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the northern boundary of the State of Nebraska shall be extended so as to include all that portion of the Territory of Dakota lying south of the forty-third parallel of north latitude, and east of the Keyapaba River and west of the main channel of the Missouri River; and when the Indian title to the lands thus described shall be extinguished, if it shall ever be extinguished, the jurisdiction over said lands shall be ceded to the State of Nebraska, and the northern boundary of the State shall be extended to said forty-third parallel, as fully and effectually as if said lands had been included in the boundaries of said State at the time of its admission to the Union, reserving to the United States the original right of soil in said lands, and of disposing of the same: Provided, That this act shall not take effect until the President shall, by proclamation, declare that the Indian title to said lands have assented to the provisions of this act; nor shall this act create any liability or obligation of any kind whatever on the part of the United States to extinguish said Indian title, or in any way affect the Indian title thereof.

Mr. INGALLS. I observe by an inspection of the map that this projected line bisects the Fort Randall military reservation. What I want to know is, this bill taking effect when the Indian title is extinguished, and the jurisdiction of this entire country being then ceded to Nebraska, if by operation of law we shall not then give the reservation to Nebraska without intending to do so.

Mr. EATON. "Reserving to the United States the original right of soil in said lands and of disposing of the same" is the language

Mr. INGALLS. But here is not only an Indian reservation but a Mr. INGALLS. But here is not only an indian reservation but a military reservation that comes down south of this rectified frontier of Nebraska, and we provide that the entire jurisdiction of this territory shall be ceded to Nebraska when the Indian title is extinguished. Now, if we pass the bill in this shape do we not necessarily, without intending to do so, cede the portion of this military reservation that lies south of that line, and thereby perhaps very seriously interfere with the authority of the United States in that reservation? I suppose the intention of the Senator from Nebraska is to except from the operation of this act not only the Indian reservations, but the military reservations.

Mr. SAUNDERS. It was supposed that that was covered by saying that the right to dispose of the soil was reserved to the Government of the United States.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. It seems to me this bill is very immature and it ought to go back to the committee. I therefore move its re-committal to the Committee on Territories. They can report it back in a better shape than it is now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senater from Illinois moves that the bill be recommitted. The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WITHERS. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. No. 5896) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, with sundry amendments. I give notice that I shall call up the bill to-morrow for action.

CLAIMS AGAINST NICARAGUA.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, on conferring with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] I learn that he does not desire to address the Senate to-day, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up bill No. 1650, which is to aid the Government to facilitate the action of the Government in negotiating a treaty with Nicaragua for the purpose of settling the conflicting claims of the citizens of the two governments. I shall be absent from my seat in a very few days, and, if anything is done with this bill, it should go early to the House of Representatives for their action.

Mr. KERNAN. Suppose we take it up now. We have time to act on it to-night.

Mr. HAMLIN. That is what I ask.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BRUCE. Will the Senator yield a moment that I may give a

Mr. HAMLIN. I cannot give way. This is an important matter. By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1650) authorizing the President to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect any convention between the United States and Nicaragua for the adjustment of claims which may be duly concluded between the two governments was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the select committee to inquire into all claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua with an amendment, which was to add to the bill:

SEC. 7. That the appointment of none of the officers named in this act shall be made until after a convention as herein provided for shall have been made and ratified by the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be glad to inquire whether there is any precedent for a bill of this kind. The Constitution provides that treaties of the United States, as well as laws, shall be the supreme law of the land; and treaties between the United States and other governments usually, and I believe invariably claims treaties, provide for the method, by way of commissioners and agents and so on, of determining the respective claims. Now, here is a statute that, so far as I remember, is entirely new. I may be wrong about that; and I assume I must be from the fact that my friend from Maine has reported this hill providing in advance of any treaty for a certain rassime I must be from the fact that my friend from Maine has reported this bill providing, in advance of any treaty, for a certain organization that is to take place when a treaty shall be made, in respect of claims between the United States and Nicaragua. I shall be glad to have my honorable friend from Maine tell me what are the precedents for legislation of this character.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, perhaps the very brief report which submitted had better first be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, I should like to hear that.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Ham-LIN April 20, 1880.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, I should like to hear that.

The chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. Ham-Lin April 20, 1880.

The select committee of the Senate to inquire into the claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragna submit the following report: The resolution under which your committee were appointed, and under which they have acted, is in the following words:

"Resolved, That a select committee of five Senators be appointed by the President of the Senate, who shall sit during the recess of Congress, to inquire into all claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragna for Indemnity for lives of relatives taken, wounds and other personal injuries inflicted, and property taken, injured, or destroyed, which have heretofore been filed in the Department of State, and now remain pending and unsatisfied; and shall ascertain and determine what amounts, and to what persons, the government of Nicaragna is liable to make compensation on account thereof, and report the same, with the evidence in reference thereto, to Congress at its next session."

It will be seen that the resolution provides that said committee "shall ascertain and determine what amounts, and to what persons, the government of Nicaragna is liable to make compensation on account thereof, and report the same, with the evidence in reference thereto, to Congress at its next session."

The committee have given their careful consideration to the subjects embraced within the resolution under which they have acted. The claims which have been presented to the committee as filed in the Department of State number one hundred and eight, upon which an aggregate of $6,092,000 has been claimed as justly due from the Nicaragnan government. Of the number of claims stated there are forty-eight in which no specific sum is claimed. Besides, several other claims not filed in the Department before the passage of the resolution have been submitted to your committee. It is assumed by your committee, from a and recommend its passage.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry made by the Senator from Vermont, I can say that there is no precedent, I believe, precisely like this; but there are some precedents where we have passed resolutions suggestive of the negotiating or amending of treaties. I recollect one particularly in relation to China.

The object of this bill is simply, as is stated in its title, to aid our Government, to facilitate in negotiating a treaty. If a treaty shall be negotiated, all terms and conditions will be therein specified, and we shall then have adopted a law to meet a convention so framed and ratified by the Senate. The object of this bill is therefore to aid the Government. It is an expression of the legislative department that such a commission should issue. We express that opinion, and our Government through its Executive may use that with all propriety in saying that these claims of long standing should be settled. It will tend to induce the negotiation of such a convention as would lead to that result. That is the main object of the bill, and about the only object. There is an amendment providing that no appointment shall be made until the treaty is negotiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the correlation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This bill involves considerations that I should like to have explained much more fully than the Senator has thought it fit to explain them in the present session of the Senate. Therefore I move that the doors be closed for the consideration of this matter. I can see that it involves considerations which need a much more The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves, under the sixty-fourth rule, that the doors be closed in the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the doors were closed. Without disposing of the bill the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; after which the doors were reopened and (at five o'clock and seventeen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Burch, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House joint resolution No. 297, authorizing the Secretary to send rations to the sufferers by the recent cyclone at Macon, Mississippi.

It further announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; that the Senate non-concurs in the House amendments thereto and asks a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that Mr. EATON, Mr. DAVIS of West Virginia, and Mr. WINDOM were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SINGLETON, of Mississippi. I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, for the purpose of moving that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate thereto, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The motion was agreed to. The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. Singleton, of Mississippi, Mr. Wells, and Mr.

MONROE.

REMOVAL OF PAWNEE AND OTHER INDIANS.

Mr. MANNING submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Whereas, on the 4th June, 1879, the Committee on Indian Affairs reported through its chairman, and the House adopted, the following resolution:
"Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform this House, first, at what date the Pawnee, Modoc, Nez Percés, Ponca, and Cheyenne Indians were removed to the Indian Territory; second, what the populations of said Indians were respectively at the time of such removal; and third, how many have died in each tribe since such removal and the cause, so far as known, of such mortality."
And whereas the Secretary of the Interior has not yet furnished the House with the information called for in said resolution: Now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the House of Representatives, That said Secretary be again directed to respond to the inquiries in said resolution contained, or to state why he cannot do so.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING.

Mr. MANNING also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6054) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase additional lots of ground adjoining the new building of engraving and printing; which was read a first and second time, (the second reading being in full on demand of Mr. CAMP,) and referred to the Committee on Public Building ings and Grounds.

MARY A. RANDOLPII.

Mr. MANNING also introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6055) granting a pension to Mary A. Randolph, of Panola County, Mississippi; which was read a first and second time, (the second reading of the bill being in full on demand of Mr. CAMP,) referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

THOMAS W. MAHAN.

Mr. PHILIPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6056) for the relief of Thomas W. Mahan, of Cole County, Missouri; which was read a first and second time, (the second reading being in full on demand of Mr. Camp,) referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

REMOVAL OF CHARGE OF DESERTION.

Mr. HATCH introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6057) removing the charge of desertion and for the relief of certain named soldiers of the Twenty-first Missouri Volunteer Infantry; which was read a first and second time, (the second reading being in full on demand of Mr. CAMP.)

Mr. HATCH. I ask that this bill be referred to the Committee on

Invalid Pensions

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rules it would properly go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. HATCH. I have submitted the bill to the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he does not object to the reference to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill will be referred as the gentleman from Missouri proposes.

Mr. BROWNE. What is the object of the bill?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a bill to remove the charge of desertion from certain soldiers. The gentleman from Missouri desires that the bill should go to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HATCH. It is a bill to remove the charge of desertion against certain Federal soldiers of a regiment raised in the district where I live. I prefer to have all the facts laid before the committee of which live. I prefer to have all the facts laid before the committee of which I am a member.

Mr. BROWNE. Under the rules the bill should go to the Commit-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana is correct. The bill under the rules would go to the Committee on Military Affairs, unless otherwise ordered by the House.

Mr. BROWNE. I move to amend the motion of reference so that the bill shall go to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 48, noes 66.

Mr. BROWNE. A quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HATCH, and the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. BROWNE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 76.

Mr. BROWNE. A quorum not having voted, I ask for the yeas and

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw the motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and will let it go to the Committee on Military Affairs under the rule.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and will be printed.

Mr. HATCH. I ask that the memorial accompanying the bill be swinted.

Mr. CAMP. If the printing of the memorial is asked for I desire to have it read. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The memorial will go into the petition-box. Mr. CAMP. I do not object to the printing of the memorial, but call for its reading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not in order to present a memorial under this call except from a State or territorial Legislature.

ISAAC COHEN.

Mr. FORD introduced (by request) a bill (H. R. No. 6058) for the relief of Isaac Cohen; which was read a first and second time, (the second reading being in full on demand of Mr. CAMP,) referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

G. N. WHISTLER.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6059) for the relief of G. N. Whistler, first lieutenant Fifth Artillery; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. DAGGETT introduced a bill to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy; which was read a first time by its title.

Mr. CAMP. I ask that the bill be read in full.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill the second time in full.

Mr. SPRINGER, (interrupting the reading.) It is evident that the session of this day is to be taken up by the unnecessary reading of long bills. There is no way of preventing this because every member has the right to introduce a bill and to have it read. The Clerk is now reading a very long bill, and it would take a great deal of time to complete the reading. I move that the House do now adjourn.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Pending the motion to adjourn,
Mr. ALDRICH, of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 297) authorizing the Secretary of War to send rations to the sufferers from the recent cyclone at Macon, Mis-

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. Martin, of Delaware, for ten days;
To Mr. Ladd, for one week, on account of ill health; and

To Mr. ATHERTON, for eight days.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] that the House do now adjourn.

The question being put, there were—ayes 85, noes 33.

Mr. FINLEY. I call for the yeas and nays.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 25, noes 111.

Mr. LOWE. I call for tellers on the yeas and nays.

The question being put on ordering tellers, there were ayes 22; not one-fifth of a quorum.

So tellers were refused, the yeas and nays were not ordered, and

the motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at two o'clock and twenty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Mr. TELLER presented a memorial of citizens of Rio Grande County, Colorado, remonstrating against the proposed change recommended by the Public Land Commission in the method of disposing of the public lands; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WALLACE presented the petition of Spang, Chalfant & Co., of Etna, Pennsylvania, manufacturers of iron and wrought-iron tub-of Etha, Pennsylvania, manufacturers of fron and wrought-fron tubing, employing three hundred and seventy-five hands, praying for the passage of the Eaton bill providing for the appointment of a tariff commission; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BUTLER presented an extract from the proceedings at the State board of health of Charleston, South Carolina, touching the powers of the National Board of Health in the matter of State quarters. antine; which was referred to the select committee to investigate and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread and report the best means of preventing the introduction and spread of epidemic diseases.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia, presented the petition of the Atlanta Rolling-Mill Company, of Atlanta, Georgia, manufacturers of rails and bar-iron, employing four hundred and ninety-three hands, and the petition of the Ridge Valley Iron Works, of Ridge Valley, Georgia, manufacturers of pig-iron, employing one hundred and fifty hands, praying for the passage of the Eaton bill providing for the appointment of a tariff commission; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HAMLIN presented the petition of S. P. Brown & Co., of Dover, Maine, manufacturers of woolen goods, employing seventy-five hands, praying for the passage of the Eaton bill providing for the appointment of a tariff commission; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BAYARD presented the petition of the McCullough Iron Company, of Wilmington, Delaware, manufacturers of sheet-iron, employing three hundred hands, praying for the passage of the Eaton bill providing for the appointment of a tariff commission; which was ordered to lie on the table.

MARIETTA SOLDIERS' MONUMENT.

Mr. MAXEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3347) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish four pieces of condemned ordnance for the soldiers' monument at Marietta, Ohio, to report it back with an amendment; and by instruction of the committee I request the immediate consideration of the bill. The amendment removes all possible objection to the passage of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs was, in line 6, after the word "of," to insert "cast-iron," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be authorized to furnish to the Soldiers' and Sailors' Monument Association of Washington County, Ohio, from the condemned ordnance of the United States, four pieces of cast-iron cannon for the soldiers' monument recently erected in the public park in the city of Marietta, Washington County, Ohio.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

LOAN OF TENTS, ETC., TO NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. MAXEY. I am further instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 104) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend certain tents, flags, &c., to the governor of the State of New Hampshire for the use of the mili-tia of that State at their general muster to be held the present year, to report it with an amendment; and for the reason which was stated to the committee by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. Blair,] that immediate action was necessary, the committee instruct me to ask for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consid-

Mr. WITHERS. I object until we get through with the morning business. This system of reporting bills and having them immediately considered, it seems to me, is rather taking advantage of those of us who have bills on the Calendar and would like to have them considered.

Mr. MAXEY. I gave the reason, which no doubt the Senator from Virginia did not hear, that unless the joint resolution passes at once it will be useless. They want the articles for an encampment which is very soon to be held. Mr. WITHERS. When?

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from New Hampshire can tell you exactly.

Mr. WITHERS. There will be time after the morning business is concluded.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, I can explain—his objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He did not.

Mr. BLAIR. If the Senator from Virginia will hear me one moment I think he will do so. I should like the attention of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. MAXEY. It was at the request of the committee I made the motion. I am not in the habit and I do not think it is customary to object to a personal request of that kind, but it is the privilege of a Senator to do so, if he desires, ef course.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes to the Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) to authorize the loaning of certain tents and artillery to the Union Veteran Corps, composed of ex-Union soldiers, for the purposes of a reunion to be held at Wichita, Kansas, in the month of October, 1880, reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of William H. Gill, praying the passage of a bill authorizing his restoration to the Army, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1710) for the relief of William H. Gill.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

WYOMING, MONTANA AND PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Committee on Railroads, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1670) to authorize the Wyoming, Montana and Pacific Railroad Company to build its road across the Mr. BURNSIDE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1488) to provide for promotions in the Army of the United States, submitted an adverse report thereon; two letters from the Secretary of War, which I ask to have read. By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I think we ought to have some explanation of the bill.

Mr. DELLER. There are two letters here from the Secretary of War saying that there is not only no objection, but it is desirable that this action should be had. This railroad company meets Fort David Russell almost when it starts. Within five or six miles it is compelled to enter upon that line. Fort Laramie is one hundred and fifteen case hundred and eighty miles still further away but Fort David fifty or one hundred and sixty miles still further away, but Fort David Russell they want the privilege of passing immediately. A letter from the Department shows that the War Department agree to it, and say it is desirable in fact.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no doubt about it being a desirable thing te do, because it will save freights.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. Let the bill be read again.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. TELLER. I ask to have the amendments read, one of which limits the right of way to one hundred feet.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment reported from the Committee on Military Affairs will be read.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Russell," in line 6, it is proposed to insert the words "and Fort Laramie," and at the end of line 7 to Provided, Such right of way shall not exceed one hundred feet in width.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Wyoming, Montana and Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the Territory of Wyoming, is hereby authorized to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations, upon such line as may be approved by the Secretary of war: Provided, Such right of way shall not exceed one hundred feet in width.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I see that the Secretary of War has to approve the location, which is proper, but I ask the Senator why he wants a hundred feet through the military reservation? That is

Mr. TELLER. I will say that in all the western country that is the amount we have for all our roads. We have taken one hundred feet. I believe it is the suggestion of the Department that it should be a hundred feet.

Mr. INGALLS. Let us hear the letters read.
Mr. TELLER. Let the letters from the Department be read.
The VICE-PRESIDENT. The letters will be reported.
The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Washington City, May 3, 1880.

Sir: Referring to Senate bill 1670, introduced by you, authorizing the Wyoming, Montana and Paoific Railroad Company to build its road across the Fort Russell military reservation, I have the honor to inform you that the General of the Army has verbally reported to the Department that there is no military objection to the passage of this bill, should a provision be inserted therein that the line crossing the reservation shall not exceed one hundred feet in width.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEX. RAMSEY, Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, May 4, 1880.

Washington City, May 4, 1880.

Sir: I am in receipt of your letter dated the 3d instant, requesting to be informed whether any objection exists to allowing the Wyoming, Montana and Pacific Railroad Company to build its road across the Fort Laramie reservation. In reply thereto I have the honor to inform you that the General of the Army reports that "there is not the least possible objection, but the contrary; a railroad to Laramie will be very advantageous."

A provision should be made, however, that the road crossing the reservation should not exceed one hundred feet in width.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ALEX. RAMSEY.

ALEX. RAMSEY, Secretary of War.

Hon. H. M. TELLER, United States Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the committee.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the Wyoming, Montana and Pacific Railroad Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations."

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MORGAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1712) providing that the President of the Senate shall submit to the Senate and House, when assembled to count the votes for President and Vice-President, all packages purporting to contain electoral votes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the select committee to take into consideration the state of the law respecting the ascertaining and declaration of the results of the Elections of President and Vice-President of the United States.

Mr. KIRKWOOD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (8. No. 1713) granting an increase of pension to Captain John H. Looby; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BAYARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1714) for the relief of Thomas Y. De Normandie; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOOTH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1715) for a public building at Sacramento, California; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HAMPTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1716) granting a pension to Thomas J. Mackey, late special provost marshal; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1717) creating Yakima land district in Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to intro-

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1718) to increase the efficiency of the marine-hospital service; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

STATUE OF GENERAL DANIEL MORGAN.

Mr. HAMPTON. The joint resolution (S. R. No. 84) to furnish a bronze statue of General Daniel Morgan to the Cowpens centennial committee of Spartanburgh, South. Carolina, was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs adversely and postponed indefinitely. I ask to reconsider the vote indefinitely postponing the joint resolution, in order that it may again be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the vote by which the joint resolution was indefinitely postponed will be regarded as reconsidered, and the joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ARMY LINE OFFICERS.

Mr. FERRY. On the 12th of April I introduced a bill (S. No. 1614) to regulate the promotion and fix the rank of line officers of the Army. I have a tabulated statement of the promotions from first lieutenants to captains in the Army from 1870 to 1879 inclusive. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, to accompany the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I have no objection at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That shall be the order.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the first amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3035) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate, insisted upon its disagreement to the second and third amendments of the Senate to said bill insisted on by the Senate, and agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. O. R. SINGLETON of Mississippi, Mr. Erastus Wells of Missouri, and Mr. James Monroe of Ohio managers at the conference on the part of the House.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) to authorize the loaning of certain tents and artillery to the Union Veteran Corps, composed of ex-Union soldiers, for the purposes of a reunion to be held at Wichita, Kansas, in the month of October, 1880.

The joint resolution was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment in line 12, after the word "service," to insert "and without expense to the United States;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, Said tents and artillery can be spared without detriment to the public service, and without expense to the United States, and that proper security shall be given for the return of said public stores in proper condition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS OF MILITARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. RANDOLPH. The Committee on Military Affairs instructs me as its chairman to ask the Senate that some day, I will designate as its chairman to ask the Senate that some day, I will designate next Tuesday, the 11th instant, be set aside for the consideration of the bills on the Calendar that have come from that committee. It will be found by examining the Calendar that of three hundred and twenty-five or three hundred and thirty bills now upon it, over sixty-five, sixty-six I think, come from the Military Committee, and according to the progress we have been making with the Calendar, no considerable number of these bills can be reached during the present session. It has been the practice of the Senate since I have been a member of the body to occasionally give to a committee with so much work before it, and with very many reports made to the Senate, this indulgence. I ask, therefore, that some special day or that a part of some day be set aside for the consideration of the cases on the Calendar that have come from the Military Committee.

some day be set aside for the consideration of the cases on the Calendar that have come from the Military Committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator indicate a day?

Mr. RANDOLPH. I will indicate next Tuesday, the 11th.

Mr. TELLER. If it requires general consent, I shall object to it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. TELLER. I do not see why the Military Committee should come in ahead any quicker than any other committee.

Mr. RANDOLPH. I should like to answer briefly, simply because that committee, as will be found by examination of the Calendar, has very much more business on the Calendar than the proportion of the committees of the Senate. I have just said that of three hundred and thirty or three hundred and thirty-five bills now on the Calendar sixty-five or sixty-six are from the Military Committee. I think that should give some weight to that committee's claim and request before the Senate.

Mr. FERRY. I desire to ask the Senator from New Jersey if it is his purpose to have the bills considered upon their merits irrespective of mder the Anthony rule.

Mr. FERRY. I would object to that as far as I am concerned. I think as we have the Anthony rule now during the ordinary morning hour, if a day or more be set apart to consider cases upon the Calendar they should be considered upon their merits. Let the cases be disposed of as we reach them. Cases that have merit now are subject to one objection simply because the objector does not understand the case, or has not given it the attention which other Senators have.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded, which is the consideration of the Calendar of General Orders under the Anthony rule, so called.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I gave notice yesterday that after the routine business of the morning hour had been gone through with to-day, I should move to postpone the consideration of the Calendar for the purpose of taking up the Holladay case. I now move to postpone the present and all prior orders for that purpose.

So the motion was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Wisconsin moves that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of Ben Holladay.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (S. No. 231) for the relief of Ben Holladay was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

An amendment was reported from the Committee on Claims, after the words "United States," in line 8, to strike out:

For spoliations by hostile Indians on his property while carrying the United States mails, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route; for property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of the United States; and for losses of property and expenses incurred in changing his mail-route, in compliance with the orders of the United States commanding officer.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

On account of his contract with the Post-Office Department to carry the United States mails, and in full payment and satisfaction for all losses sustained by him by reason of his having carried the mail on a route different from the one specified in the contract under the order of the military authority of the United States, and upon the request of the President, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route; and in full satisfaction for the property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, I have looked at this report in order

Article was which the amount is made up. I fail to find to find some detail upon which the amount is made up. any detail of the amount of damages unless it is found in the appendix to this report, No. 216. I find there that the charges are for horses, $200 apiece, invariably almost, and the same for mules. This committee cite as a precedent a small bill reported by a former Senator from Oregon, (Mr. Corbett,) where it seems that the same amount was charged by the claimant for horses, but it was reduced in his bill from $200 to $50 apiece, and where $150 was charged it was reduced. to $37.50.

But, Mr. President, it is a little queer as to the report of the damages suffered by this party—

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator will allow me, I think I can make an explanation which perhaps may be satisfactory to him. The horses and mules lost by Mr. Holladay were horses and mules used by him as stage horses and mules, and were of a superior quality. The horses referred to by the Senator in the bill introduced by the former Senator from Oregon were not stage horses, but stock. horses on the prairies.

Mr. MORRILL. I read from the report in relation to the horses reported in the Elbridge Gerry case. It states:

It will be borne in mind that Holladay, the claimant, sustained his losses while carrying the transcontixental mails through the same region at a period when their transportation was of highest importance to the whole country.

That is, horses in the same region and at the same period in one case are valued at $50 each, and in the other at $200 each.

I do not understand that there is any difference stated in the report of either claimant as to the value of the horses. They both claimed $200 each. But the report is curious in this; it states:

The testimony tends to show that the damage to the memorialist of this removal of line under the Chivington order, embracing as it did the transfer of houses, barns, hay, grain, and other articles, and rebuilding structures necessary to the line, was in the neighborhood of $50,000.

Again, it states damages thus: Was in the neighborhood of $30,000.

Mr. President, I do not understand that we have ever established Mr. Fresident, I do not understand that we have ever established a principle so broad as is laid down here, of guaranteeing mail carriers under contract against all losses. I supposed that they were paid large prices, knowing that it was a hazardous service, and therefore I should like to know if the Senator reporting this bill can give us the amount that was paid to this claimant for the transportation of the mails from 1860 to 1866?

of the mails from 1860 to 1866?

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I am not able to give it.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that is a very important consideration. The Senator says he is not able to give it. I should like to see whether the party was under contract and paid the price of hazardous service for carrying these mails. I understand that the sum paid from 1860 to 1866 was very large, and before this bill shall pass I should like to have some account of the amount that was paid to this contractor. But, Mr. President, while I do not wish to do anything that is wrong in relation to this claim—if the party has a just claim I am willing that he should be paid; but I do not think that a committee of this body is the proper tribu nal to take an account of the damages that he had suffered. It ought to go to the Court of Claims, and where they can have some testimony possibly a little different from what has been brought here in behalf of the Government. I ask gentlemen to look at the testimony that is brought in here in behalf of the Government.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. MORRILL. Certainly.
Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. During the last Congress the Committee on Claims reported this claim back with a bill recommending that it be sent to the Court of Claims for trial and adjudication.

Mr. MORRILL. I understand that, and I think it was a mistake that Congress did not do it.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. It was a mistake that the Senator from Vermont who is now addressing the Senate contributed very largely to, if it was a mistake.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. President, if you will look over the testimony that is brought here in behalf of the Government, you will find it very meager indeed; and I do not doubt but what the committee properly rejected the most of it as weak and inconsequential. There were but four witnesses, so far as I can find, who were brought here to give any testimony in behalf of the Government of the United States. All the remainder is entirely ex parte. One of these witnesses was a boy from seventeen to nineteen years of age, another was a bugler, and so on. It will be seen that the Government has had no proper showing in this case.

Then, again, the question comes up, and is relied upon as appears by the report of the committee to some extent, that the Government itself has given this party some claim to remuneration because it promised military pretection; and yet it will be seen that a large share, and much the largest share of the damages so far as I can asshare, and much the largest share of the damages so far as I can ascertain, was incurred prior to any promise of giving this military protection. The protection, it appears, was promised in 1864. It will be seen by the Chivington correspondence that he only proposed to grant it in 1864; and yet a large proportion of these details of damages occurred from April 16, 1862, along to 1864, but largely in 1862. On the whole, Mr. President, it does seem to me that this is a very grave question that ought to be settled by some positive law. If we are to allow this claim it will unquestionably establish a precedent for all the damages that ever have been received on the part of contractors since the foundation of the Government. I know of a case in my own State.

in my own State

Mr. HOAR. I wish to call the Senator's attention, if he will permit me, in regard to a fact about which he has fallen into error. The Senator from Vermont seems to understand that the date of the promise of military protection was in 1864. He is in error upon that point. What happened in 1864 was the date of the removal. Colonel Chivington was ordered, and it was his duty, to furnish Mr. Holladay's line complete protection against hostile Indians, but he says, "I cannot do that at all, unless your line is removed from the line of contract to another line"—

Which I can only do by its removal from the Platte to the Cut-off route. As it new runs I am compelled to protect two lines instead of one. You will therefore remove your stock to the Cut-off route, which will enable me to use troops retained for an active campaign against these disturbers of public safety.

Mr. MORRILL. And that the Senator will find is dated December

Mr. HOAR. That is the thing that is dated December 2, 1864.
Mr. MORRILL. That is the thing, and the only thing I find of any promise on the part of the Government to furnish military protec-

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Chivington had been ordered to furnish military protection prior to that time; but the Government found that it could not protect the route on which Mr. Holladay was then running his stages, and consequently directed him to remove his route from thirty to fifty miles south of where he was then running.

Mr. MORRILL. Well, Mr. President, I only take it as I find it here in the report. It is a little curious that so many of these mules and horses should have been in such equal and capital order as to be worth exactly $200 apiece, and that the harnesses were all in fine order and charged at a rate equal to the cost of new harness. "Twelve sets of harness, at $20 apiece," and so on throughout. "Five sets of four-horse harness, at $110 each."

There does not seem to be any reduction in the prices of horses.

There does not seem to be any reduction in the prices of horses, mules, or harness on account of wear and tear, and the price of barley and oats was computed at the highest rate, I suppose, without any regard to the testimony, although I see that there is some testimony that it was not valued at so high a rate at that time at some places. But, Mr. President, I merely rose to say that while I shall vote to refer this case to the Court of Claims, I shall vote against this bill.

Mr. KERNAN. Mr. President, I desire that Mr. Holladay shall have whatever he is justly entitled to. My trouble with this bill is that I fear it is impossible for any one, from the evidence which the committee have taken, to determine with any certainty that all this property, at the value put down here, was destroyed under circumstances which should call upon the Government, even in the broadest sense of equity, to indemnify Mr. Holladay.

If you look at the report beginning on page 11, you will find, what strikes me as extraordinary, that on "April 16, 1862," there were "twenty-two mules and horses at $225 each" taken; "April 17, 1862, nine head mules at $200 each." I skip a great many other items. "April 18, 1862, five mules at $200 each;" "April 20, 1862, two mules at $200 each;" "April 23, 1862, five horses at $175 each;" "eighteen mules at $200 each;" "March 23, 1862, five horses at $175 each;" "March 1862, cipt mules and horses at $125 each;" "April 21, 1862, six mules and horses at $175 each;" "March 1862, thirteen mules at $150 each."

And so going through you will find a great number of horses and mules in the months of March, April, and June, 1862, amounting to between two hundred and three hundred mules and between one hundred and two hundred horses. My difficulty is that a claim of this kind, if the Government is to be liable for it, should be sifted in some between two hundred and three hundred mules and between one hundred and two hundred horses. My difficulty is that a claim of this kind, if the Government is to be liable for it, should be sifted in some court where you can get at the facts in detail and see that this property was destroyed. Where so much is claimed for destructions in different places on the same day it is difficult to know what was really destroyed by the Indians and what may have been stolen by somebody else, and what may have been lost or destroyed in other ways. My judgment is and always has been that this matter ought to go to a court. It is answered by the gentleman in charge of the bill that when it was up in 1877-78 the committee reported in favor of sending it to the Court of Claims. That is true; and I have the bill they reported in my hand. While I have not looked at the Recorp, I remember for myself that I objected to that bill on the ground that it not only authorized but directed the court, as I thought, to adjudi-not only authorized but directed the court, as I thought, to adjudicate the claim on the affidavits which were then in the report before us, and some of which I read to show how entirely loose they were and wholly ex parte. I remember this, but I have not looked at the RECORD to see all that occurred in the Senate. I have the bill which was then reported. I criticised it then. I will read it now. I will read the whole bill, for it is very short. It is Senate bill No. 346 of the Forty-fifth Congress, the very one referred to in this report on page 5. I remember how it struck me at the time I objected to it.

Be it enacted, de., That the claim of Benjamin Holladay, now before Congress, for spoliations by hostile Indians on his property, while carrying the United States mails, during the existence of Indian hostilities on the line of said mail-route; for property taken and used by United States troops for the benefit of the United States; and for losses of property and expenses incurred in changing his mail-route, in compliance with the orders of the United States; and some is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims for adjustment, upon the affidavits and orders now before Congress, and such additional testimony as either party may present, to ascertain the amount of losses of property and expenses sustained by him as aforesaid, and render judgment thereon.

I then looked at some of the affidavits, and did not think they were sufficient to authorize anybody to find that any considerable amount of property had been actually destroyed by Indians. It was to be referred to the Court of Claims by that bill to ascertain upon these affidavits, and it is true "such other evidence," but these affidavits were to go there, and if the Government could not hunt up other evidence. were to go there, and if the Government could not hunting other evidence, would not the court adjudicate on them? Did not that bill make these ex parte affidavits evidence before the court? We objected to it and thought it ought not to go there on ex parte affidavits, particularly such as we called attention to then, if I remember aright. I think justice to Mr. Holladay should be done, but it should be done by having the claim sent to a tribunal before whom he can bring his wifersesse. And let them be green everyinged and let him if he can his witnesses, and let them be cross-examined, and let him, if he can, satisfy a court that between two and three hundred mules were desatisfy a contribute between two and between one hundred and two hundred horses, and that they were worth this sum—a very high price You can go through this report, which I have no doubt is made up as well as the committee could on exparte affidavits, and you will find that here is a sum of money awarded out of the Treasury, $526,739, without having it scrutinized by a court. It is done as well as any committee can do it, I concede; but it is on evidence which is very doubtful to my mind. I do not want to vote to do him injustice, and yet I cannot vote for this bill with the evidence I have glanced through, for it is so uncertain.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know my friend from New York does not wish to do injustice. If he will examine the RECORD showing the action when the case was considered by the Senate before, he will find that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Thurman] said it was not a subject proper for the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims; that if the claim was a just one the Senate ought to decide upon it. It was on his motion recommitted to the Committee on Claims with power to take the tesrecommittee to the committee on Claims with power to take the testimony of such witnesses as the claimant or the Government might offer; and that committee did take that testimony. The Senator is mistaken in supposing that this report is based upon exparte affidavits, for here are twenty or thirty depositions taken that cover the entire ground, taken on interrogatories and cross-interrogatories.

Mr. KERNAN. I have stated nothing to the contrary of that. I said that when the case was here before, the bill then presented proposed to send the case to the Court of Claims on ex parte affidavits, with instructions to find other evidence if they could; and I remember that that was so. If they could have got evidence which satisfied ber that that was so. If they could have got evidence which satisfied me that he lost this large amount of property, worth these very large prices, hay in round numbers at thirty tons—fifty tons—and corn in the same way, I should be willing to let it go; but all I mean to say is, that I cannot find enough to satisfy my own judgment on the evidence reported, ex parte evidence as it is—and most of the same affidavits that were here before I presume were used—that the Government was a reach same as the same affidavits that were here before I presume were used—that the Government was a reach same as the ment owes any such sum as this.

Again, this involves a pretty important principle—
Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator from New York will allow me, I will give information that I was not in possession of when I took the floor a few moments ago.

Mr. KERNAN. I am very glad to get any information.

Mr. MORRILL. I find that the contract price for the service from July 1, 1861, to June 30, 1864, was $1,000,000 a year, and we paid the contractor $3,000,000 for that service. Then from June 30, 1864, to September 30, 1864, a lesser price was paid, $840,000 a year.

Mr. HOAR. For the same service?

Mr. MORRILL. For the same service—$210,000 for that quarter.

If the party having the contract had lost largely from 1862 to 1864, it would hardly seem that he would take a contract for a lesser sum than the service had been contracted for originally. Then from October 1, 1864, the service was let at a still lower rate. The first service was from Saint Jo to Placerville. The last service was from Saint Jo to Salt Lake City, and for that $365,000 per annum was paid to June 14, 1868, and after that it was reduced to $347,648.

Mr. PADDOCK. But the distance was reduced correspondingly as the Union Pacific Railroad was extended.

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose it was.
Mr. PADDOCK. At the time the large amount was paid the line was some twelve hundred or fifteen hundred miles long, and there were some seventeen hundred head of stock, mules and horses, employed along the line.

Mr. MORRILL. Let me say one thing more. I see by the report that there is an intimation that this case has been before the House. Let me say one thing more. I see by the report Upon an examination of the record-book showing the claims presented there I do not find in that book any reference to this case by bill, petition, or otherwise. Even if the party having this claim urged it in 1866, it was not presented here until ten years after; and I do not find in the record made by the House that it was presented there at

Mr. KERNAN. I think any gentleman who will look through this statement of items will find in 1865 large amounts of property taken and allowed for, mules, hay, horses, Sharps rifles, and all manner of property. Now, if the Gevernment is liable for all the property that was taken from this man in 1865, I am sure that if gentlemen will examine these papers they will find that there is not evidence here that would authorize us to vote this sum of money or to declare that the property was actually destroyed so as to make us liable on any equitable rule

Mr. Holladay takes this contract at the large price which has been named; he receives his pay; and now we are to pay him for horses stolen from him. Certainly there was no Indian war raging all through down to 1865, and I presume no one supposes the Government guaranteed to him——

Mr. TELLER. I should like to call——
Mr. KERNAN. I will assume that there was an Indian war all the time.

Mr. TELLER. And a year longer than that.

Mr. KERNAN. Very well. Where was the contract that said we should pay for all the mules the Indians might steal while this gentleman was carrying the mail there, in peace or in war? He was carrying it for $1,000,000 a year, I understand; and yet the claim is that the Government must make him good for Sharps rifles, for provender, for furniture—we find all these in the list—and then mules and horses and grain in round quantities all through. I cannot conceive that we were under obligations to thus protect him in his property, and if we were, I am not satisfied that there is any such amount due from the Government, and therefore on this evidence I cannot vote for the

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I have great respect for the legal ability and for the sense of justice and candor of the honorable Senator from New York, [Mr. KERNAN,] and I wish to submit to the Senate and to him some considerations which it seems to me would in his mind qualify what he has said.

This man made a contract to perform the mail service which formed a commercial link of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific coasts before the construction of the Pacific Railroad. He made it in a time of profound peace so far as the territory over which he was to perform that service was concerned. He made it under circumstances which the committee think and the Government thought, as represented by its agents, bound the Government to afford the necessary military protection if a war broke out with Indian tribes on that route. That was his contract.

Having made that contract and being engaged in the performance of it, there broke out a fierce, bloody, and dangerous Indian war, and the route over which he was to travel with his large number of coaches was so infested and occupied by hostile Indians that it became impossible without certain destruction to keep up that important commercial communication, the only alternative being communication around Cape Horn with our Pacific States; and thereupon the military officer of the United States came to this man and said: "I order you to transfer your stock to another route which you have not contracted to go on, because otherwise if I undertake to protect you on the contract route, as I feel bound to do, I have got to leave the settlers unprotected because I have not troops enough to do both." And thereupon Mr. HOAR. I refer to the order of Colonel Chivington.

Mr. KERNAN. I want to suggest—
Mr. HOAR. Let me state this point consecutively if you please.
Thereupon that man obeyed that order and undertook, over the new route, a dangerous one and requiring military protection, to keep up this link so important to the commerce and business of this country, this mail communication, the only communication with our Pacific coast, and in the course of that service many of his drivers and servants and in the course of that service many of his drivers and servants were slain and a large number of his horses and mules killed and the supplies which he had laid in to support them destroyed by the Indians. Now, does any man in the Senate doubt that under these circumstances it is reasonable to compensate a man who, under the orders of the United States Government, over a new route, under took to keep up this important mail communication? Will the Senator Now York down that respective that it is a strong lain.

took to keep up this important mail communication? Will the Senator from New York deny that proposition that it is a strong claim on the equity and justice of this Government?

In the next place he comes to Congress and he gives date and day and act of what happened in 1866; and the two Houses of Congress, neither of them disputing his right to some compensation, differed as to the mode. Then he came to the Senate again, two or three years ago, and the committee said this matter ought to be sent to the Court of Claims it being a prepar matter for indicate incoming the feats. ago, and the committee said this matter ought to be sent to the Court of Claims, it being a proper matter for judicial inquiry into facts and amounts, but they said that the Court of Claims shall give such weight as they deem proper—and to this I ask the consideration of my friend from New York—the committee said in their bill: Let the Court of Claims give such weight as they deem proper to the man's affidavits, and let all other testimony be taken and cross-examined.

why was that proper? It was because the Court of Claimined.

Why was that proper? It was because the Court of Claimined never had jurisdiction over this matter for ten years, and therefore the man could not have preserved by law depositions; he could not have preserved the evidence of witnesses who had been cross-examined at the time. It was all gone, lost. There was no legal provision by which it could have been saved. Therefore, as his only remedy for ten years had been an application to Congress which always deals with claims against the Government on affidavits, it was reasonable in changing the jurisdiction that the man should at least have the benefit of having considered such evidence as if Congress had dealt with the matter would have been the sole evidence, for by the lapse of time he might have lost all or a portion of the rest of

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. BRUCE in the chair.) The morning hour has expired.

Mr. HOAR. I ask leave to finish this statement which will take me five minutes more, if the Senate please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will proceed, if there be no objection.

Mr. HOAR. That seemed to the committee reasonable; but it seemed otherwise to the Senate, to the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New York. They did not, however, amend the bill by saying that the affidavits shall not be considered in the Court of Claims. They went further. They said not only that but that the Court of Claims shall not under any circumstances consider the case; it is a matter fit for the consideration of the Senate, and we decide that this bill shall be sent back to the Committee on Claims; that they shall have authority to send for persons and papers; to administer oaths; to have a hearing on both sides, and that on such a hearing this matter shall be decided.

I think that that judgment of the Senate it is bound to stand by, and that it is not just to this man to say one year when he wants to go into court, "You shall not go there because the Senate ought to decide it," and then when he comes back and the Senate committee have decided it say, "Oh, well, no matter what they have decided, you shall go back to the court again." Vote down the bill for his relief, whatever its provisions are, and however just it is, on the ground simply that somebody else ought to decide, not the particular tribunal he applies to. I submit to my honorable friend from New York that that is unjust and unfair and a position which on reflection he will not himself stand to he will not himself stand to.

Having decided that this case ought to be dealt with by the committee of the Senate, and it having been so decided, the matter comes to this precise question: The honorable Senator from Wisconsin, a gentleman whom I have no doubt this Senate would unanimously confirm for chief-justice of the Court of Claims if he were nominated confirm for chief-justice of the Court of Claims if he were nominated for that office and there were a vacancy, after patiently hearing witnesses on both sides and giving notice to the Government, found out what he thought a mule was worth on the plains in the summer of 1862 in the midst of an Indian war. The Senator from Vermont thinks the Senate should discuss that question and vote him down because his notion of the value of mules at that time and place, he not having heard a witness or considered the question specially, or taken any testimony, differs from the conclusion which the honorable Senator from Wisconsin corres to.

I submit that the Senate cannot transact business on that theory, and that in doing justice to the hundreds of claimants we shall be bound to trust our committees if we deem them honest and faithful in their conclusions as to the price of mules, and that it is not expedient that that shall be added to the subjects of public interest which are to be debated and discussed at great length here. And that is the whole case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of its unfinished business.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I desire to give notice that after the routine business of the morning hour has been gone through with to-morrow I shall again move to take up this case.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. F. KING, A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. I. F. King, one of its clerks, announced that the House had concurred in certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and non-concurred in other amendments of the Senate to the said bill.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to the seat held by WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG as a Senator from the State of Louisiana. Mr. VEST. Mr. VEST. Mr. President, in the absence of any argument on the other side of the Chamber and from those who oppose the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections, we are left simply to surmise the grounds of those who advocate the claim of the sitting member from Louisiana to remain in this body. I say that no argument has been made on the opposite side of this Chamber against the resolutions of the committee. A report is before us coming from the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, destitute of argument, destitute of facts, and consisting alone of partisan abuse; I use the words deliberately and advisedly. Sir, there can be no graver question presented to the American Senate than that involved in the issues now before this body. A sovereign State, and the fairest and most unfortunate of all the States of this Union, mangled and torn by the sharp teeth of the wolves that gathered about her, is a suppliant before us, and her sister States can alone give her justice. Leaders of before us, and her sister States can alone give her justice. Leaders of the republican party, eminent statesmen who stand before the coun-try as the dictators of its policy, join in the minority report, in which this extraordinary language, the only salient point in it, is presented to the Senate of the United States:

The men whose professions of returning loyalty to the Constitution have been trusted by the generous confidence of the American people are now to give evidence of the sincerity of their vows. The people will thoroughly understand this matter, and will not be likely to be deceived again.

It requires no sensitive scrutiny to know the meaning of this insulting and offensive statement. Because the Senators upon this side of the Chamber, or, as the Senator from Maine [Mr. Blaine] elaborated it, "the Senators from sixteen States, lately in rebellion or sympathiz-ing with rebellion," do not construe the law as announced by the minority of the committee, and do not believe that the sitting Senator from Louisiana is entitled to his seat in this Chamber, they are denounced as false to their oaths of allegiance to the Constitution, and unworthy the confidence of an honest people. Sir, I have no language suitable to this presence in which to express my contempt for a charge like this.

I desire in this discussion to say nothing more partisan than the nature of the issues involved necessarily must cause. It is useless to disguise the fact that the American people look with peculiar solicitude upon the decision of this case, because it reminds them of the fact that the Administration now in power in these United States obtained that power from the very abuse which to-day is sought to be reiterated in the Senate of the United States. Sir, when instead of argument we receive abuse, it is adding insult to injury. What is this declaration of the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections upon a question involving the existence of the Constitution itself but an appeal to the partisan passions of the hour? What is it but a declaration to the people of the United States that the republican party propose to merge and whelm all the other issues in the single fact that sovereign States of this Union have dared to trust in the Senate of the United States men who risked life and fortune and all in common with their fellow-citizens in those States, and what is this but an insufferable taunt of the most despicable order?

The crop of cant springs perennial and eternal with the republican party. The cotton crop may fail from the ravages of the caterpillar. Wheat may perish with rust or weevil. Corn may be destroyed by drought or floods, but the crop of cant is more certain with the republican party than "seed-time and harvest." Who does not know that all this virtuous indignation about the Constitution simply means indignation because the description because the description to the constitution simply means indignation because the description because the description because the description because the description of the constitution simply means indignation because the democrats in this Senate do not intend to allow the outrage committed upon a sovereign State by a partisan majority to remain unredressed, or that the republican party shall profit by their unconstitutional and illegal action?

"The men whose professions of returning loyalty to the Constitution. have been trusted by the generous confidence of the American people." We heard this refrain at the extra session, and it promises to be the catch-word of the coming canvass. "The men who struck at the life of the nation must not be trusted to make its laws. The confederate brigadiers are traitors to the Constitution they have sworn to defend." And yet the world knows and the past proves that the test of patriotism and loyalty to the Constitution is simply voting the republican ism and loyalty to the Constitution is simply voting the republican ticket and giving the offices of the country to the republican party. When did Longstreet, or Mosby, or Key express penitence for the part taken by them in the rebellion? Show me one word from either of them indicating regret for having led the charging columns that dashed their tattered grey against the Union lines. No, they have not repented, but they have done what covers every transgression, they have given their adherence to the republican party and supported its ticket.

Today in the leading republican paper in this city, in the Republican Today in the leading republican paper in this city, in the Republican ticket.

To-day, in the leading republican paper in this city, in the Republican, which I have now in my hand, is a declaration from General Mosby, now the accredited minister of the United States to a foreign country, now in full fellowship with the republican party, now a great apostle of the party of God, morality, progress, and reform in regard to his part in the rebellion:

I said this four years ago, and my words are now prophecy fulfilled: "I feel a just pride in their glory, and am as jealous of the military honor of the southern people as any man on their side. A generous foe would not ask to deprive us of it. I know that General Grant would not."

And to-day this gentleman stands the accredited minister of the United States Government abroad, and says that he feels as much pride in his record as a confederate soldier as he did when his flag waved in terror for four long years before the national capital. By what and when and how did Mosby, Longstreet, and Key, the Postmaster-General, obtain the confidence of the republican party? When they voted the republican ticket, and to give the offices of the country to the republican party; when they said, we give the spoils of the National Government, we vote this ticket, this mystic piece of paper that wipes away all sin and hides all transgressions. Why, sir, there is not in all the pharmacopocia, from the days of Hippocrates, any drug with such miraculous effect as that tiny piece of paper on which is written the names of the republican candidates at an election.

Not all the water of the Jordan; not the pool of Siloam itself; not the famed talisman of Saladin presented to the royal Richard ever had the medicinal and healing virtues of a republican ballot! It And to-day this gentleman stands the accredited minister of the had the medicinal and healing virtues of a republican ballot! It casts oblivion over the blood and carnage of Shiloh and Chancellorsville, hides the serried ranks of Longstreet and the black flag of Mosby which for four long years waved in terror before the national capital; and it even stills the groans of Libby and Andersonville!

There's a drop, said the Peri, that down from the moon, Falls through the withering airs of June, Upon Egypt's land; of so healing a power, So balmy a virtue, that even in the hour That drop descends contagion dies, And health reanimates earth and skies.

But even this mystic drop compares not in efficacy with the drop of a radical ballot into the box of a returning board, although from the bloodiest hand that grasped musket or saber in the army of the confederacy.

Who has not seen the repentant sinner coming forward to the mourner's seat, while the ecstatic melody burst from gladdened hearts:

In my hands no price I bring, Simply to the cross I cling.

In every orthodox creed repentance is current coin; but not so with our republican brethren. There is no welcome from them to an empty-handed sinner, no matter how full he may be of repentance. He must come with the radical ticket in his hand, prepared to vote it early and often.

Mr. President, I assert that there is not a confederate brigadier in this Chamber who would not be appointed to any office within the gift of the Administration, and receive the votes of republican Senators in confirmation, if without one syllable of repentance for the past he should promise allegiance to the republican party for the future. Ay, sir, even my friend from South Carolina, "the Hamburgh butcher," who has been cartooned in the illustrated republican papers as a leader of the Ku Klux, with a sword ten feet long and spurs weighing ten pounds each, riding until midnight "fetlock deep" in negro gore—even he, by sacrificing honest conviction and real manhood, could be accredited abroad, and grace with his many accomplishments a foreign court.

And now let us examine the nature of this crime against the Con-Stitution, as it is denounced by the minority report.

On January 20, 1877, WILIAM PITT KELLOGG presented his credentials to the Senate as Senator from the State of Louisiana, for the term of six years from March 4, 1877, said credentials being signed by Stephen B. Packard as governor of Louisiana. In October following Henry M. Spofford presented his credentials for the same office, signed by P. B. Nicholls, the actual governor of Louisiana.

Kellog claimed to be elected by a body styling itself the Legisla-

'are of Louisiana, which assembled in the State-house at New Orleans on January 1, 1877, and remained there for some weeks, guarded day and night by armed men, and afraid to venture abroad among the people they pretended to represent.

Sir, in all the history of civilized government—and I call the at-Sir, in all the history of civilized government—and I call the attention of the country and of the Senate to it; reiteration does not take away the horrible reality—I call the attention of the country to the fact that these men claiming to be the Legislature of the State of Louisiana and to represent the people of that terribly afflicted and distressed community were afraid to venture beyond the metropolitan police to face their own constituency. The evidence in these twelve hundred pages of perjury and fraud and stupendous lying shows that these men slept under guard with sentinels at the doors. Representatives of the people! Trembling and cowering in an agony of fear lest

The drums should beat at dead of night, Commanding fires of hell to light The darkness of it's scenery.

They were afraid of their own constituents; they were afraid the sovereign people of Louisiana would break down the barriers of the metropolitan police and would wipe from existence this mob which then proposed to inaugurate a system of robbery and plunder in the State.

The evidence in this case, which I have no time to go through, now before the Senate, shows that even when their officers ventured upon the street they were immediately arrested by the lawful authority of the Commonwealth. And yet this rabble claimed to be the Legislature of a sovereign State! While this was the case with the Packard mob, what was the condition of the lawful Legislature of that State The conspirators were in session in the hall of the State-house which they had seized by force—not such force as would have been over-whelming, but because they had over them the flag of the United States, that flag which I assert to-day can go from one end of the South to the other without one word of reproach, much less of con-tumely or insult. Their jurisdiction was confined to the precincts of tumely or insult. Their jurisdiction was confined to the precincts of the building in which they are and slept and legislated, and of all they did or attempted there remains to-day but this election, the misshapen and distorted Caliban of American politics, conceived in fraud and brought forth in the cavernous recesses of the State-house.

On the other hand, the Legislature which elected Spofford met at the same time in the Odd-Fellows' Hall in New Orleans, and proceeded openly in the usual manner and with the sanction of the whole people of the State to pass laws, collect taxes, and transact all necessary

I do not know that I can better portray the condition of affairs than by quoting from the report of the gentlemen sent to Leuisiana in 1877 by President Hayes, and some of whom are recognized leaders of the republican party:

of the republican party:

Governor Packard—we shall speak of both gentlemen by the title they claim—was at the State-house with his legislature and friends, and an armed police force. As there was no quorum in the senate upon his own theory of the law his legislature was necessarily inactive.

 Governor Nicholls was occupying Odd-Fellows' Hall as a State-house. His legislature met there and was actively engaged in the business of legislation. All the departments of the government of the city of New Orleans recognized his authority. The supreme court, nominated by him and confirmed by his senate, was holding daily sessions and had heard about two hundred cases.

The time for collecting taxes had not arrived, but a considerable sum of money in the form of taxes had been voluntarily paid into his treasury, out of which he was defraying the ordinary expenses of a State government.

The Nicholls legislature had a quorum in the Senate upon either the Nicholls or Packard theory of the law; a quorum in the house on the Nicholls but not on the Packard theory.

Packard theory.

The Packard legislature had a quorum in the house on its own theory of the law, but, as already stated, not in the senate, and was thus disabled from any legislation that would be valid even in the judgment of its own party.

This report was signed by Charles B. Lawrence, JOSEPH R. HAWLEY, John M. Harlan, John C. Brown, and Wayne MacVeagh, and dated April 21, 1877.

I do not prepose to examine in detail the evidence showing that there was no legal quorum in the Packard legislature and that the election of Kellogg was a sham and pretense. It is enough to say that after a sickly and fevered existence of a few weeks this mockery vanished like a foul mist before the sun, and fifty-one of the men who had been its members went over to the Nicholls legislature, and on the 24th of April, 1877, participated in the election of Mr. Spofford. Stephen B. Packard, the pretended governor, was pacified by the Administration with the appointment of consul to Liverpool, confirmed by a republican Senate, and now fills that office. No honest man can believe for a moment that either in law or fact there was but one Legislature, in 1877, in the State of Louisiana.

As a specimen of the proceedings of the conspirators who sought to overthrow the State government of Louisiana and to seat Mr. Kellogg in the United States Senate, I quote the following statement of Mr. Will. Steven, a member of the Nicholls senate. While a prisoner Steven's vote was counted blank, and Baker and Kelso, two pretended contestants for seats in the Packard senate, were admitted while Steven was thus held in custody, although Lowis Transde and while Steven was thus held in custody, although Lewis Tenada and H. C. Mitchell had been elected by the returning board and were then sitting in the Nicholls senate.

STATEMENT OF WILL. STEVEN RELATIVE TO HIS CAPTURE.

On January 1, 1877, I was one of the holding-over senators who formed the senate of the State of Louisiana, convened on that day in Saint Patrick's Hall in the city of New Orleans.

I was one of a committee of three appointed by the chair to inform Governor Kellog that the senate was duly organized and ready to receive any communication he might have to make, &c. The other members of the committee were Mr. Garland, of Saint Landry, and Mr. Boatner, of Catahoula, both of whom were elected in 1876. The committee proceeded to the Saint Louis Hotel, were admitted to Governor Kellogs's office, and delivered to him in person the message with which they were charged. Upon leaving Governor Kellogs's office I was stopped by two or three persons, who stated that they were sergeants at arms of the senate, and that I must accompany them to the senate chamber. I stated that the senate of the State had met in Saint Patrick's Hall on that day and had adjourned until the following day; therefore I refused to accompany them, and refused to submit to arrest.

arrest. I was thereupon seized by two or more of these parties and pushed and dragged in the direction of the senate chamber, I resisting at every step. In this manner we reached the outside bar of the senate, where, by getting my feet against the railing, I was enabled for a few moments to make a more effectual resistance. I was finally forced to the bar of the senate. I addressed myself to the president, (Lieutenant-Governor Antoine,) who was in the chair, stating the circumstances which led to my arrest, protesting against the arrest, and demanding that I be permitted to withdraw.

I quote this as a single specimen of the desperate means adopted by these unscrupulous men to accomplish their purposes.

However much we may differ on other questions of law, I assume that every member of the Senate will concede that the real, vital issue in the case as presented to the Senate of the Forty-fifth Congress was which of the two bodies in Louisiana was the lawful Legislature of the State. There exill certainly be but one each legislature. islature of the State. There could certainly be but one such legislative body. And I further assume that no lawyer will deny that the highest and most conclusive authority upon the question as to which was this body would be the State itself.

In Luther vs. Borden Mr. Webster said:

The decision of Rhode Island by her Legislature, by her executive, by adjudication of her highest court, has shut up the whole case. Do you propose—I will not put it in that form—but would it be proper for this court to reverse their adjudication! That declares that the people of Rhode Island knew nothing of her "people's constitution." Is it possible for the court to know anything about it! It seems to me that if there were nothing else in the case the proceedings of Rhode Island herself must stop every mouth in the court and out of it. Rhode Island is competent to decide the question herself, and everybody else is bound by her decision.

To prove that there was another constitution of two days' duration would be ridiculous. And I say that the decision of Rhode Island herself, by her Legislature, by her executive, by the adjudication of her highest court of law on the trial of Dorr, has shut up the whole case. * * I appears to me that if here were nothing else in the case the proceedings of Rhode Island herself must close everybody's mouth in the court and out of it. Rhode Island is competent to decide the question herself, and everybody else ought to be bound by her decision. And she has decided it.—Webster's Works, volume 6, page 239.

In 1873 Mr. Morton, of Indiana, declared the same doctrine in his report to this body in the case of Ray and McMillen:

report to this body in the case of Ray and McMillen:

The Constitution says that the Senate of the United States shall consist of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years. The manner of constituting the Legislature is left absolutely to each State, and the question of its organization must be left to be decided by such tribunals or regulations as are provided by the constitution and laws of the State, and the only question about which the Senate may inquire in determining the admission of Senators is whether they have been chosen by the Legislature of the State, that Legislature recognized by the State or whose organization has been recognized by other departments of the State government. Under our complex system of government all questions of State government under their own laws must be left to the decision of the State tribunals created for that purpose, and when such decisions have been made they must be accepted by the Government of the United States in their dealings with such States. It is no answer to this to say that in a particular case such tribunals will or have decided wrongfully. The Government of the United States has no right to reverse their decision so long as the State possesses a government republican in its form.

In May, 1877, six months before Mr. Kellogg was admitted to a

In May, 1877, six months before Mr. Kellogg was admitted to a seat, the supreme court of Louisiana, in the case of The State ex rel. Jumel vs. Johnson, 29 La. Ann., decided that the Nicholls government was the lawful State government, and that the Packard government never had a legal existence; and at the October term, 1879, of the Supreme Court of the United States this judgment was affirmed. Had not the State of Louisiana, then, in every possible manner settled this question before the action of the Senate seating Kellogg? The people had recognized the authority of the Nicholls legislature The people had recognized the authority of the Nicholis legislature and government, the United States had recognized them, the highest judicial tribunal in the State had so declared, fifty-one members of the Packard body had joined the lawful Legislature, and thereby solemnly attested the illegality of the body to which they had first gone, and the pretended governor, Packard, had accepted a fereign appointment and left the country. And yet to-day we are threatened with "wrath against the day of wrath," and denounced as criminals, because we refuse to recognize as legitimate offspring the bastard abortion which is thrust before the American people as a senatorial

In 1877, on the 4th of March, when Mr. Kellogg proposed to take his seat in this body, the issue was a very different one. It was very different then, as is very well known to our distinguished friends on the opposite side of this Chamber. Their great leader then, the Prince Rupert of debate, who leads the assaulting column in every engagement, declared that the issue involved in the Kellogg case was the legitimacy of the title of Mr. Hayes to the Presidency and of Mr. William A. Wheeler to be Vice-President of the United States. It was then declared in this Chamber by the Senator from Maine that the question involved in seating Mr. Kellogg was whether Mr. Hayes and Mr. Wheeler were usurpers or not, and he so declared emphatically and distinctly to the Senate of the United States and to the American people. I will detain the Senate but a few moments to read that statement, made with all the force, with all the emphasis of that distinguished Senator, for whom I have the highest regard, who, when he leads his party, leads it always in an open, bold, and manly way into the thickest of the fight. Said that Senator in the debate reported in the Congressional Record for 1877:

reported in the Congressional Record for 1877:

I understand the Senator from Ohio to admit that the electoral commission did decide that the Louisians returning board was a legal and constitutional body, competent to do what it did do, and that they were unable to review or reverse it; and that same board, competent to declare who were the presidential electors of that State, and electors of that State, declared also who were the Legislature of that State, and the Legislature, performing a mere ministerial duty, declared who was the governor of that State; and I stand here, if I stand alone, to say that the honor and the credit and the faith of the republican party, in so far as the election of Hayes and Wheeler is concerned, are as indissolubly united in maintaining the rightfulness of the return of that body as the illustrious house of Hanover that sits on the throne of England to-day is in maintaining the rightfulness of the revolution of 1688. You discredit Packard and you discredit Hayes. You hold that Packard is not the legal governor of Louisiana and President Hayes has no title, and the honored Vice-President who presides over our deliberations has no title to his chair.

That is a clear and deliberate announcement. Put out Packard.

That is a clear and deliberate announcement. Put out Packard, put out the whole of them. That was the mathematical conclusion then arrived at by the Senator from Maine.

I say, therefore, that on the action of the returning board, which the Senator from Ohio admits was determined by the electoral commission to be a competent, legal, and constitutional body, rests the authority of S. B. Packard to the governorship of that State, and on the authority of that board rests the Legislature of that State, and by the Legislature of that State William Pitt Kellogg was duly elected Senator.

That was the issue then put by the Senator from Maine, but to-day it is changed. Now we hear that it is res adjudicata, that this whole question is settled. The Senator from Maine then spoke of another agreement. The other day he spoke of an agreement that had been made here in the Forty-fifth Congress. That agreement has been emphatically and distinctly denied; but for myself as a Senator I have only to say that I was not a member then of the Senate, and if such an agreement had been made, I plead non est factum to it; I was no party to it, and no Senator or set of Senators, whether in caucus or out of caucus, have a right to estop me from deciding under my oath the validity of the proceedings of a State Legislature and the validity of a title claimed under it. But the Senator from Maine then made another discovery so remarkable that I shall read it, simply to illustrate the history of this transaction: trate the history of this transaction:

I know that there has been a great deal said here and there, in the corridors of the Capitol around and about, in by-places and in high places of late, that some arrangement had been made by which Packard was not recognized and upheld; that he was to be allowed to slide by and Nicholls was to be accepted as governor of Louisiana. I want to know who had the authority to make any such arrangement. I wish to know if any Senator on this floor will state in his place that any person, speaking for the administration that was coming in or the one that was going out, had any right to make any such arrangement. I deny it. I deny it without being authorized to speak for the administration that now exists. But I deny it on the simple, broad ground that it is an impossibility that the administration of President Hayes could do it.

He did not then know the Administration as well as he knows it now. He denied the possibility that Mr. Hayes could do any such

I deny it on the broad ground that President Hayes possesses character, common sense, self-respect, patriotism, all of which he has in high measure and in eminent degree. I deny it on all the grounds that can influence human action, on all the grounds on which men can be held to personal and political and official responsibility. I deny it for him, and I shall find myself grievously disappointed, wounded, and humiliated if my denial is not vindicated in the policy of the Administration. But whether it be vindicated or whether it be not, I care not. It is not the duty of a Senator to inquire what the policy of an administration may be, but what it ought to be.

Mr. President, at that time, as I stated, the validity of Mr. Kellogg's title was put upon the broad ground that the returning board had decided in favor of him and that the electoral commission had decided in favor of the legality and validity of the proceedings of the returning board. I do not know whether that now will be the argument on the other side; I know not whether that will be advanced now in the discussion; but my answer to it is the simple assertion that the electoral commission did not pass upon the validity sertion that the electoral commission did not pass upon the validity of the election of that Legislature or of the governor of Louisiana. The only question they decided, the only question before them, was the validity of the election of the electors for President and Vice-President for the State of Louisiana. The electoral commission did not pass upon the validity of Packard's title as governor or the title of the Legislature which sent Mr. Kellogg to the United States Senate.

Now, sir, what is the doctrine of res adjudicata? I approach the discussion of this question, I trust, in no partisan spirit and with no disposition to take advantage of technicality. I propose honestly and seriously, as a lawyer, to discuss the question whether res adjudicata applies to this case, whether it can be made a bar, firm and effectual, to further inquiry or examination into the title of the sitting member. Res adjudicata, as every lawyer knows, is a technical rule invoked in the interest of economy and public policy. It is an odious rule, odious in the light that it excludes justice frequently on the ground that there must be an end to litigation, that the courts at some time must be closed, that the expense entailed by litigation without end cannot be closed, that the expense entailed by litigation without end cannot be borne by the State. Interest reipublica ut sit finis litium. It was the old Latin maxim adopted by the common and by the civil law. Is that rule applicable to a case when the Constitution itself enjoins a duty upon a legislative body? Can the Senate of the United States say that it ever is precluded from examining as to the constituent elements of its own membership? The Constitution declares that every State shall be represented upon the floor of the Senate by two Senators elected by her Legislature. Is there any limitation to that duty imposed upon the Senate of the United States? Does it not involve the existence of the Government itself that the highest branch of the legislative assembly of the United States should be composed under the Constitution of two Senators from every sovereign State in this confederacy or Union of States?

Can the Senate ever abdicate its own power? Is it possible that the statute of limitations can ever apply to an assertion of constitutional power in the organic act of the Government which creates the highest branch of the legislative assembly of the whole country, in which rests, and rests alone, the sovereignty of the States? Did our fathers in making the Constitution intend that there should be a limitation, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Carpenter] asserted in putting his question the other day to the Senator from North Carolina, [Mr. Vance,] when he asked on the floor of the Senate, "Does the Senator mean to say that there is no limitation to the trial of the right of a Senator to a seat on this floor?" I answer him deliberately and earnestly and conscientiously, as a lawyer and as a Senator, that in my judgment that power does never cease to exist. I say tor, that in my judgment that power does never cease to exist. I say that there may be cases, and unquestionably are cases, when good faith, when honest legislation, when economy of time, when public policy may preclude the Senate from going back and reopening a case, just exactly as a court would be prevented from reopening it upon a bill of review. There are cases unquestionably in which the Senate would not go back and reopen a case where all the facts had been investigated, where the law had been fully examined. Then for the Senate of the United States to go back and by partisan action to reopen the case would be in the highest degree improper. But the power still exists. Take away that power and what becomes of the constituency of the Senate of the United States, representing the sovereignty of the States? I put the question to every Senator on this floor. I put it to my brother democrats, some of whom I am frank to state are hesitating in regard to this question. The Senator from state are hesitating in regard to this question. The Senator from Maine said that we were administering a bitter pill to the northern Senators upon this floor. To show that the southern Senators from the States, as he expressed it, lately in rebellion or sympathizing with the rebellion, rise above all party and look to the Constitution alone, I state here that the principal objection to unseating the Senator from Louisiana comes not from the North but from the South. They construe the Constitution differently from myself, and I now appeal to them honestly, faithfully, openly, and I trust courageously, to examine this question under their oaths and to decide as Senators of sovereign States in the highest tribunal of the nation.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.
Mr. CARPENTER. I know he is too good a debater to be annoyed by a mere interruption, and he knows I do not interrupt him for that by a mere interruption, and he knows I do not interrupt him for that purpose; but I want to call to his mind one point for the purpose of ascertaining his views about it. The Constitution says that each State shall be represented on this floor by two Senators elected by its Legislature. It says the Senate shall be the judge of whether A B or C D was elected by the Legislature of Louisiana, for instance, at a certain time to be a Senator for a certain term. Now, do I understand the Senator to claim that the Senate, which is the only body of men that can determine that question, never can determine it finally? Mr. VEST. Mr. VEST. Most distinctly in my judgment as a lawyer, having examined this whole case, in answer to the question whether in the term of any Senator the Senate can estop itself from examining into his title, I say that no Senate can preclude me as a Senator of the United States in determining whether a State has two Senators on this floor. I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the terrible deduction that must come from his position. Suppose a par-tisan majority upon the roll of this Senate, and such a thing is very Gisan majority upon the roll of this Senate, and such a thing is very reasonable, in the madness and fury of party, should determine to obtain possession of the Government by putting one Senator or two Senators or three Senators into this body who were not elected. Suppose that men should come here and put in a paper title, and suppose that a partisan majority, under the advice of an astute lawyer, following the precedents, as they claim, resolve that Mr. Smith, or Mr. Jones, or Mr. Brown, is entitled to a seat on this floor on the merits—magic words, "upon the merits"—and whenever it is done, the Senator from Wisconsin says "res adjudicata." That is the end of it, the end for all time to come. I deny it. I deny that any partisan majority can estop me from asking whether a sovereign State has two Senators upon this floor. I say that the Constitution is imperative, absolute, not to be contradicted. Every State shall have two Senators, and if that fact does not exist, where is the power outside of the Constitution that prevents the Senate from inquiring into it?

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me one question more?

Mr. VEST. Certainly; ten, if the Senator chooses.

Mr. CARPENTER. That question must be settled or be forever left unsettled. The question between us at the present is as to the effect of a determination made by the Senate upon the point, who was elected by the Legislature of a State. Does the Senator claim as a lawyer that it makes any difference with the finality of an adjudication by a tribunal from which there is no appeal, that it was judication by a tribunal from which there is no appear, that it was decided erroneously of even corruptly?

Mr. VEST. Ah, that is another question. The Senator from Wisconsin assumes that this is an ordinary court. I deny it.

Mr. CARPENTER. I did not say "court;" I said "tribunal."

Mr. VEST. The Senator treats this as a common-law or equity court, and he applies the doctrine of equitable jurisdiction to it. I deny it. I say to the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senato of the United States is a creature of the Constitution, and has absolute power, irrespective of all technical rules of proceeding, to determine its own constituent membership.

Mr. CARPENTER, I had the Senator's permission, I believe, to ask him ten questions, and I shall ask but one more. I want to ask him further if he knows of any reason why the rule of res adjudicata should be applied to litigation in the judicial courts that does not equally apply to a determination of this tribunal when judging upon the election, returns, or qualifications of its own members, and if the rule in the judicial courts has not grown up because the experience of the world has shown that it is necessary to secure the peace of society that there should be an end of strife? If any reasons exist, will not the Senator point them out, why that rule should not be applied to this tribunal in this case as well as to a judicial tribunal? If there be no such distinction and the rule of res adjudicata is an erroneous rule, then we should pass a law, which we can do, abolishing it in the judicial courts and providing that when a plaintiff has sued a defendant and been defeated, he may sue him again, or if he sues a defendant and succeeds the defendant may sue him to reverse the judgment, and so on, forever. There should be either a rule that the strife shall be settled by the determination of the tribunal appointed by the Constitution and laws to determine it, and that should apply to us as well as to every other tribunal, or the rule should be abolished.

Mr. BLAINE. And also, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, in criminal cases a man might be put in jeopardy of life and limb just as often as some new piece of evidence was discovered.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I will take the last first. The Senator from Maine, who I believe by common reputation is not a lawyer, says it will apply also to criminal proceedings. It is a provision of the Constitution that no man shall be put twice in jeopardy for the same

Mr. BLAINE. Why not change that?
Mr. VEST. Because it is the Constitution of the land now, and it is the right thing, and in the right place. Will the gentleman point me out where the Constitution of the United States says that the Senate sits as a court in determining the seats of its members? The fallacy, if the Senator from Wisconsin will permit me to say so, in his position is this, that he assumes that the Senate of the United States is now sitting as a tribunal upon the rights of two individuals meum et tuum, as the right to a horse, the right to a piece of land. I say they are sitting upon the Constitution of the Government itself, under the Constitution, hich says that this tribunal shall adjudicate and determine whether there are two Senators from each sovereign State upon this floor. If this body sits now as a court, as the Senator from Wisconsin assumes, for all he says is worth nothing unless that is so, I beg him to answer the question, why is it that in only one place in the Constitution does it say that the Senate of the United States shall be a court? We are it say that the Senate of the United States shall be a court? We are judges, we are each one of us judges under a special oath in cases of impeachment, and the Constitution so provides. Each Senator, if now called upon to sit in impeachment upon a high officer of the Government, would take an oath or affirmation to discharge his duty honestly and conscientiously under the Constitution. If we are judges in cases of contested seats where is the oath, where is this special oath, and I ask gentlemen to answer?

Mr. BLAINE. Does not the Constitution say that we are judges?

Mr. VEST. No, sir.

Mr. BLAINE. "Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own members."

Mr. VEST. So each House is the judge of every bill that is brought before it. Does not the Senator from Maine judge as to the propriety of all legislation brought before him under his oath of office? If we now are to interpolate a judicial power in the Senate of the United States by an inferential argument from one word, where, I ask, is to be the ending of the liberal and broad and universal construction to be put upon this instrument by the Senate in time yet to come? It is a judge of the qualification of its own members. Does that make it a court?

Mr. CARPENTER. It seems to me it is wholly immaterial whether we say we are a court or not. That has nothing to do with it. There is no question that it is our duty here to examine the facts and apply the law to those facts, and thereupon ascertain who is entitled to a seat whenever a controversy arises. Now, that is judicial judgment. seat whenever a controversy arises. Now, that is judicial judgment. You may call the proceedings those of a court or you may call them the deliberations of the Senate. When the Senate sits as a court of impeachment it is still the Senate sitting as a court, and so we are still the Senate undoubtedly. It is wholly immaterial whether you call it a legislative proceeding or the proceeding of a court. My point is this: If it is a good thing to put an end to strife, why does not that rule apply as well to the settlement of this question as it does to any other? We know that the office of governor of a State, which is just other? We know that the office of governor of a State, which is just as important as that of a Senator in this body, may be contested in the courts and the questions brought before a jury. That has been done. The title to an office is an individual title, although of course the public have a great interest in having it held by the man who has been elected. It is just so with the Senate. When a Senator has been elected he has a personal right to the seat. Can it be claimed that there is any public interest that overrides his private right if his private right is clearly made out? That cannot be maintained for one moment. We are trying here the right of Mr. Spofford and the right of Mr. Kellogg to occupy the seat, and that is a right to perform its duties and receive its emoluments, and is as much a personal right in that as the right of A B to be governor of a State, or the sheriff of a county, or to hold a farm or a piece of land. Mr. VEST. According to the position of the Senator from Wisconsin the State of Louisiana has nothing to do with it.

Mr. CARPENTER. Not at all.

Mr. VEST. And the other States of this Union have nothing to do

Mr. CARPENTER. Not at all.

Mr. VEST. I have been under the impression that we were proceeding upon the mandatory clause of the Constitution, which says that each House shall judge of the qualifications of its own members, and that the Senate shall be composed of two Senators chosen by the Legislature of each State. That has been my impression. How, then, do the States become eliminated from this discussion? Who has greater interest in this question than the State of Louisiana? Here stands the State under the resolution of its own Legislature asking that Mr. Kellog be put out of this Chamber, and that Spofford be admitted, and yet the Senator from Wisconsin says the State has got nothing to do with it; it is a question simply whether Mr. Spofford or Mr. Kellogs shall draw their salaries for six years as a Senator from Louisiana.

from Louisiana.

The Senator asks me to point out why res adjudicata applies to the ordinary judicial tribunals of the country and not to this body. I have been attempting to answer him from the beginning. I say, as the Senator knows, that the doctrine of res adjudicata applies to the ordinary courts of the country upon grounds of economy, the saving of money, and the preservation of good feeling between the citizens of a State. But do these considerations apply to a duty founded upon a mandatory clause of the Constitution itself as to the existence of the Senate of the United States and the Government itself? This Government is composed of the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches; and what says the Constitution? It does not say that a court shall go on and determine between Mr. Smith and Mr. Jones; it simply appoints tribunals to be governed by the technical Jones; it simply appoints tribunals to be governed by the technical Jones; it simply appoints tribunals to be governed by the technical rules of the common law and other practice; but there is a provision of the Constitution which says that we shall inquire whether each State of the Union has two Senators upon this floor elected by the Legislature of the State. Is it any question of economy? Is it any question now of public policy? Is it not a question based and grounded upon the Constitution itself and its mandatory clause, congrounded upon the Constitution itself and its mandatory clause, continuing with the Senate as a power of the Senate? As long as our oaths of office last and have efficacy we are bound to make this inquiry and determine it upon our oaths. I ask the Senators on the other side to answer the proposition I put to them. What protection is there for the existence of the Senate of the United States or of the Government itself if their assertions be true? What prevents a partisan majority from shutting out any examination by simply saying and reporting, as this committee has done, that they have examined the case upon the merits, and that Mr. Smith or Mr. Jones is entitled to a seat in this body? That is the whole of it, stripped of all verbiage and all technicality. It comes to this complexion at last.

Mr. CARPENTER. Will the Senator allow me to answer now?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. VEST. Certainly.
Mr. CARPENTER. The Constitution provides that no man's proparr. CARPENIER. The Constitution provides that no man's property shall be taken for public use without due compensation. Suppose my land is taken for what is claimed to be a public use. I resist the taking upon the ground that it is not for a public use. I litigate that question with the United States or with the State in the judicial tribunals where it is proper to litigate it, and finally the Supreme Court of the United States decides that that land was taken for a public use. The Separator concedes that that land was taken for a public use. lic use. The Senator concedes that it can never open that question again. Now let me vary the case. Suppose when the case gets up to the Supreme Court its members should all act corruptly and, although every judge knew that I was right, they should decide against me, would that make their judgment any the less conclusive? The Senator asks what is to be done if the Senate will act corruptly? God knows; I do not. What is to be done if the Supreme Court act corruptly? You have got to grin and bear it. What is to be done when the supreme officer of any government from whose determination there is no appeal decides wrong? The wrong has got to be endured. As a celebrated judge once said, "vested wrongs are as sacred as vested rights."

Mr. VEST. That is a very good illustration; I will take that. I understand that the Senator from Wisconsin puts this upon the ground of any ordinary question as to the right of property, as an ordinary lawsuit, and he says that the Senate is acting as an ordinary judicial tribunal. Now I put this question to the Senator: If we are acting now as we are in ordinary cases, as we are upon claims presented here from day to day for money to be taken out of the Treasury of the United States, I ask the Senator, if the Senate decides this session against one of these claims, cannot the Senate at the next session take it up and pass upon it? Where is the res adjudicial? If the Senator applies that doctrine here he must apply it throughout. throughout.

Mr. BLAINE. One moment, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him. Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. BLAINE. Suppose they vote the money and pay it out of the Treasury; can the next session vote to take it back from the man who received it?

Mr. VEST. That is something that I do not propose to investigate. When a man obtains money by rascality I do not propose to say whether he can be caught and the money taken away from him or not. I am not here to discuss any such far-fetched supposition as that; but I put this question to gentlemen now. They say this doctrine of res adjudicata applies to the action of the United States Senate as to other judicial tribunals in ordinary judicial transactions, in a suit as to the title of property, whether it is real estate or personal or mixed; that when a court has decided and has crystallized it into the form of a judgment, then the plea of res adjudicata, the thing is adjudged, is a finality and a fact for all time to come. There is no question about that. Now, if the Senate of the United States is governed by that rule, and to-day we reject Mr. Holladay's claim upon the merits and say we do not think him entitled to a dollar, and the next Congress come in and take that claim up and pass it, why can-Mr. VEST. That is something that I do not propose to investigate. next Congress come in and take that claim up and pass it, why can-next Congress come in and take that claim up and pass it, why cannot the plea of res adjudicata be raised?

Mr. CARPENTER. Does the Senator think it is a fair answer to the question I put to him as to the rule which ought to apply to us when we are passing judicially upon the ascertainment of facts and the application of law to those facts for the purpose of determining whether A or B has acquired a right to sit in this body? Does he think there is any resemblance between that case and the ordinary legislation by bills?

Mr. VEST. If the doctrine applies in one it must apply in the other.

other.

Mr. CARPENTER. That is the question.

Mr. VEST. Where is the distinction? According to the Senator from Maine we are acting here as a court, because we judge of the qualifications of members of this body. It is a play upon words. If the framers of the Constitution intended us to act as a court can the Senator believe by simply one word they would have interpolated that judicial power in the Constitution? Would they not have said that this bedy as in cases of impeachment shall take a special oath to judge according to the law and the Constitution and the right? Why is it? I put the question and it is unanswerable. I defy the gentlemen who claim that Mr. Kellogg is entitled to a seat on this floor to answer the proposition. Why is it that the Constitution in one single case declares that we shall take a special oath to act as one single case declares that we shall take a special oath to act as judges, and yet in the case of determining the right to a seat in this body there is no such provision?

I affirm here to-day in the presence of the Senate, that there is but one solitary case known to the Constitution in which we act as judges in the true sense and meaning of that term, and the Constitution itself provides for that by making a special oath and invests us with special judicial functions for that purpose and for that purpose alone. The gentlemen who assume the opposite undertake to interpolate in the Constitution this additional oath. They undertake to say now that because the word "judge" is used therefore the Senate immediately ceases to be legislative and becomes judicial, and eo instanticach one of us is clothed with the ermine and becomes a judge to determine upon the rights of Mr. Spofford and Mr. Kellogg. determine upon the rights of Mr. Spofford and Mr. Kellogg.

But, Mr. President, even if I were to speak as a lawyer and leave the domain of legislative inquiry and to meet the gentlemen upon the the domain or legislative inquiry and to meet the gentlemen upon the narrow ground of the courts, I say that even then this case ought to be reopened. I say upon the hardest and most technical rules of common-law proceedings in England or in this country Mr. Spofford is entitled to have this case reopened and tried de novo before this body. What is the rule of res adjudicata? Does the Senator from Wisconsin, who we all know to be an able and astute lawyer, pretend to say that after final decree it cannot be reopened upon the ground-of fraud practiced upon the court or on newly discovered testimony? Mr. CARPENTER. Fraud on the court, not by the court.

Mr. CARPENTER. Fraud on the court; not by the court.
Mr. VEST. I did not say "by the court;" I said "upon the court."
Suppose witnesses suppress facts, and suppose a fraudulent decree is obtained, for it is nothing else, does the Senator from Wisconsin pretend to say that you cannot open that case in ten, or twenty, or fifty years? Where is the limitation upon it? Where is the limitation in England or in this country? Where did it ever exist? Take the other case. Suppose the court does error upon the face of the record, patent upon the face of it. The old English practice was to put everything in the decree, because in that country, as the Senator from Wisconsin knows, when the decree was drawn up it found all the facts, and the jurisdiction of the court even was placed upon the face of it. Therefore the old doctrine in England was that upon error upon the face of the record a bill of review could be filed in the court and adjudicated upon. Upon either of these grounds shown to the court, newly discovered evidence or error patent upon the face of the record, a bill of review will lie without limitation. I say in this case Mr. Kellogg having concealed the facts Mr. Spofford is entitled to relief upon a bill

What are these facts shown by the record? In October, 1877, the Committee on Privileges and Elections met. They called these parties before them and asked them to bring testimony, if they had any, showing their respective titles to the seat in this body from the State of Louisiana. They appeared there and were given from the State of Louisiana. They appeared there and were given from day to day to make up the issue between them, and to agree upon certain evidence in order to save time and expense. The whole of it resulted in this, in so many words, that finally Mr. Spofford and Mr. Kelloge agreed to take the reports of certain congressional committees to save time, labor, and expense—the Howe report, the Sherman' report, and time, labor, and expense—the Howe report, the Sherman' report, and two reports from the House of Representatives, the Morrison report and the Field report. They were agreed to be taken for all that they were worth. Mr. Spofford then claimed that they did not cover his case. I assert now, and the record will bear me out, that from that time until this Spofford proclaimed, as I proclaim here to-day, that these reports did not cover his case and his honest and true title to a seat in this body from the State of Louisiana. He said then that there were five points upon which he wished to take testimony. of them implicated Governor Kellogg in a fraudulent conspiracy with the returning board, and he said that he wanted to take evidence upon that subject. He stood then and stands to-day, and I stand here now representing his claim to a seat in this body and say that that case never was adjudicated. The committee heard him and turned him out of court. That is the whole of it. They said, "We turned him out of court. That is the whole of it. They said, "We do not propose to examine witnesses; we do not propose to hear you; we say to you that this thing is closed effectually and for all time to come." Spofford went out protesting. He went out, so far as the evidence shows, with the question, "Shall I have the poor privilege of making a protest on the record in this case?" and they even denied him that. They said you have no right to protest; we do not want to hear your witnesses. The Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. Hoar,] heading the minority report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, says that Spofford's action was for delay simply, in order that a democratic majority might come in with this Congress, and then Mr. Spofford thought that he could claim successfully a right to a seat in the Senate. I say that the points upon which Mr. Spofford claimed to be heard were never heard and were never adjudicated upon. He to be heard were never heard and were never adjudicated upon. He asked for six witnesses, but they would not give him six; he asked for three and they would not give him three; and yet gentlemen come here, and on this question, involving the sovereignty of a State and its right to have two Senators sit in this body, say to us this is res adjudicata. What is the rule technically in regard to res adjudicata? I am asking the question simply as a lawyer. Says the Supreme Court of the United States: preme Court of the United States:

It is undoubtedly settled law that a judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction upon a question directly involved in one suit, is conclusive as to that question in another suit between the same parties. But to this operation of the judgment it must appear, either upon the face of the record or be shown by extrinsic evidence, that the precise question was raised and determined in the former suit. (Russell vs. Place, 94 U. S., page 608.)

Even if the rule applied to the action of the Senate, which I emphatically deny, it would not be applicable in the case under consideration, for the reason that the whole case was not passed upon. Nor is this a different suit. This is the same proceeding.

The onus of proof is on the party who relies on the adjudication as a bar, and he must make it appear that the precise point has been considered and passed upon in the former suit.

The fundamental error into which our opponents fall is that this is a different suit or proceeding from that by which Kellogg was seated, when in fact it is not a different suit, but simply a bill of review, attacking the former judgment of the Senate, and asking that the case may be heard de novo. No lawyer will deny that a bill of review can be brought after a final decree, either upon the ground of newly-discovered evidence, or on account of fraud practiced upon the court by the successful party. It is not a new proceeding, but a part of the suit originally instituted and decided. In this case Spoford alleges both newly-discovered evidence and fraudulent conduct part or the suit originally instituted and decided. In this case Spofford alleges both newly-discovered evidence and fraudulent conduct by Kellogg, through which material facts were suppressed, and an unjust and wrongful judgment obtained. Whether these charges are well founded is another, and for the present an immaterial, question. The inquiry now before us is whether the plea of res adjudicata is well taken, and whether an issue can now be tried as to the truth of these allegations. allegations.

I put the question to Senators who advocate the retaining of Mr. Kellogg in the Senate, is this another suit within the meaning of that rule or not? Where is the other suit? Is it not a continuation of the same proceeding? What is it but a bill of review? Has that suit ever been determined? It is true that the Senate in the Forty-fifth Congress passed a resolution declaring that Mr. Kellogg was entitled to the seat in the Senate, but Mr. Spofford comes and files a bill in the nature of a bill of review, and says that Mr. Kellogg obtained that adjudication by fraud, he obtained it by imposing upon the court, and he produces now the evidence to the people of the United States and to the Senate. What right has the Senate, then, even if it acts as a court, and I will assume that for the sake of the argument—what right has a court even to turn him out and say to argument—what right has a court even to turn him out and say to him, "You are forever debarred from examining into this question; it is res adjudicata?" The Senator from Wisconsin admits, neither he nor any other lawyer can deny, that I have a right to go into any court, whether there is an appeal from it or not I have a right to go into a court, but especially to the tribunal of last resort, and say to that tribunal this decree was obtained by imposition and fraud. I say you never adjudicated the real question at issue, and if I can prove it to the satisfaction of that court I can reopen the case and have a tried da ways, and muon the merits. Is not that the whole of have a trial de novo, and upon the merits. Is not that the whole of prove it to the satisfaction of that court I can reopen the case and have a trial de novo, and upon the merits. Is not that the whole of it? I ask the question now upon what theory is it that they claim this to be another and a different proceeding? Who are the parties to the other suit? That is the test, the crucial test. The parties before were Spofford against Kellogg with the State of Louisiana standing as the great interested party between the two, they being simply her agents and servants. Who are the parties here to-day and what is the issue? Spofford against Kellogg with the State of Louisiana occupying the same identical position. Is it not the same proceeding? Is there any difference between this and an ordinary bill of review which sets up that the decree was obtained by fraud, or by any of the means used by vexatious or fraudulent litigants?

Mr. President, it seems to me upon either of these propositions, whether the Senate be a court or not, it is conclusive that we have the right to reopen the case. I have been discussing so far the legal power of the Senate, and I say that if Mr. Spofford makes good what he states to be the fact the Senate has jurisdiction to determine upon this question. Now, is it the fact or not? I have hitherto said nothing about the facts in the case; I have simply been arguing with my brother Senators as to the legal power existing to reopen this case and to hear the contestants upon the merits, as that committee said they were heard when it was not the fact. It was asked the other day if we charged the majority of the Senate in the Forty-fifth Congress with corruption? Certainly I do not intend to be forced into anything of that sort or into an assertion so shameful in its character. I do say emphatically and distinctly, and am bound to say, that when the committee said they examined the case of the majority is two ter. I do say emphatically and distinctly, and am bound to say, that when the committee said they examined the case on the merits it was when the committee said they examined the case on the merits it was not so examined. They refused to hear witnesses; they refused to hear testimony. I go no further. I say, here is the record, and that record shows when Spofford stood there and said, "I have a right to be heard, Louisiana has a right to be heard," the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, as then constituted, turned him out of doors and turned the State of Louisiana out, and said, "We propose to settle this case now and here, before a democratic Senate comes into existence and assumes power." That is the whole of it; that is the beginning, that is the intermediate process, and that is the end. They determined to settle it then and they did settle it, and to-day they come in with an exparte minority report, hardly a page in length, without argument, without a fact, with the phrase "the brigadiers in counsel," "the rebel brigadiers." That is the whole argument, the beginning and the end of it. That is all that they allege, and all beginning and the end of it. That is all that they allege, and all beginning and the end of it. That is all that they allege, and all that they can show.

Now, Mr. President, a very few words in regard to the facts. My strength does not permit me, and the patience of the Senate would not endure that I should wade through the 1,200 pages of filth and perjury and fraud and stupendous lying contained in this record as brought here by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I simply desire, in my printed remarks, to place before the people of the United States certain extracts from the testimony of these model statesmen, placed by the republican party of this country over the Southern desire, in my printed remarks, to place before the people of the United States certain extracts from the testimony of these model statesmen, placed by the republican party of this country over the Southern States to adjudicate the rights of life and property under the Constitution. I want the people of the United States to see what sort of legislators were furnished by this great party to the white people of the South I want them to see that this party of progress, morality, reform, and statesmanship put above the people of Louisiana a set of thieves, scoundrels, and liars without a parallel in judicial or legislative history since the world commenced. I dety a comparison with all the worst judicial eras of the world to produce such testimony as we have here before us. Not in Jeffreys' time, when blood was in the air, and men accumulated fortunes by swearing away the lives of their fellow-men; not in the shameless perjury of Titus Oates, when he came into court from day to day with lips blistered with lies, did they rival these embryo statesmen of Louisiana before this loommittee. I commence with Joseph J. Johnson, who, in the city of New Orleans, made a voluntary affidavit that he received $200 for MELLOGG knew that the storm had burst in all its fury; he knew that the hurricane had come; he knew that for a very few hours work that the hurricane had come; he knew that for a very few hours of Louisiana. He determined in old parlance to make hay while the sum history of Kellog for Senator. "Oh," says the Senator from Louisiana, "it amounts to nothing, because they were unanimous for me." That is his great argument. "Warmouth spoke for me; he day of wrath has come in Louisiana. Here I am in for Heaven's sake, Massachusetts, Vermont, what occasion was there for me to buy votes?"

I have no personal feeling against the sitting member. I have no personal feeling against the sitting member. I have no personal feeling against the sitting member. I have pundled them; I have fattened upon them for our years, but now the conclusive that Mr. Kellogg, with his customary astuteness and boldness, determined to act expeditiously upon the moment and to boldness, determined to act expeditiously upon the moment and to seize the fruit while the opportunity was presented to him. For four long years he had been the fraudulent governor of Louisiana. The Senator from Wisconsin said so, and the Vice-President of the United States said so. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] shakes his head. I say that he, too, signed the report, in which he said that the returning board had abused its authority when it returned Mr. Kellogg as governor of Louisiana. Kellogg as governor of Louisiana.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri will permit me to remind

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. That the report which the Vice-President of the United States and I signed related to an election held two years after Mr. Kellogg had been inaugurated.

Mr. VEST. It referred to the election of 1872.

Mr. HOAR. No; it was that of 1874.
Mr. VEST. Even if 1874, I should like the Senator from Massachusetts to point me out the difference between the modes of proceeding in 1872 and 1874.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Missouri will permit me. He said that the Vice-President of the United States signed a report in which he declared that Mr. Kellogg was fraudulently elected governor. When I shook my head he called attention to the fact and said that I signed it too. signed it too.
Mr. VEST. Yes, sir; that same report.
Mr. HOAR. Mr. Kellogg was elected governor in 1872.

Mr. VEST. I understand that.

Mr. HOAR. There was an election for the Legislature and State officers in 1874, which late in that year the Vice-President and I and omeers in 1874, which late in that year the vice-Fresident and I and some other gentlemen had the duty to investigate, and we signed a report in which we stated that the returning board, though acting honestly as we believed, had, in regard to certain of the disputes, misconstrued their powers, thereby, as we stated, following the precedent set by the democratic returning board in applying the same law in a previous year. We found no fraud in their purposes or in their conduct, and it had nothing to do with the election of Mr. Kellogg whatever.

Mr. VEST. In 1874, then, the Senator from Massachusetts made this report. He made it about this same returning board, and I assert that the returning board in 1874 pursued the same course of proceedthat the returning board in 1874 pursued the same course of proceeding, adopted the same rules, and perpetrated the same outrages that they did in 1872 and 1876. It was the same thing. If they perpetrated a fraud upon the people of Louisiana in 1874 they did it in 1872 and they did it in 1876, for their proceeding was identical—the same men put there for the same purpose and acting in the same way. If it was true then, it was true afterward. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Carpenter] in 1874 declared the same thing. I happen to have his language here, as I have the other, though I cannot put my hand on it. Said the Senator from Wisconsin, March 4, 1874—that was not in 1872, it was in 1874—

And yet we know that under that gross usurpation of a Federal judge the Legislature was organized by a mandamus and an injunction, and then under the protection of that organization, and in a State-house held by Federal troops, this Kellogg government was inaugurated and set up, and that government is to-day supported by United States troops. The peace of that State is to-day preserved at the expense of the Union.

That is language as strong as any rebel democrat ever used about that corrupt, carpet-bag government in the South, and this from the most astute lawyer in the republican party here upon the floor of the

I was in New Orleans last May, and conversing with officers of the Army high in authority, they assured me that in their opinion, if the Federal troops were withdrawn from the State, the Kellogg government could not stand a week.

That was his opinion, and his evidence, if you may so term it, delivered upon the floor of the Senate March 4, 1874. I say, then, that for four years Mr. Kellogg administered the affairs of that State sim-shows, said: "Boys, I want to go on to protect your interest. I want to get to Washington to protect you. I must go there and represent the party." That was the meaning of it. He left in a very few days, and on the 20th of that month presented his credentials to the United States Senate signed on the 11th by Packard. The Nicholls legislature did not elect until the 23d of April, and Mr. Spofford did not get his credentials until the October following. That is the reason why Mr. Kellogg wanted these votes; he wanted them then, right then, and he wanted to bring his credentials to Washington City before the

and he wanted to bring his credentials to Washington City before the complexion politically of the Senate had changed.

But I pass on to the next of these witnesses. Mr. Jules Seveignes is the next of these illustrious liars. He made an affidavit in the city of New Orleans in which he testified that he was not present in the Legislature when Kellogg was elected, although his vote was recorded. He gave that affidavit, and gave it voluntarily. It is so remarkable that I propose to read it to the Senate:

STATE OF LOUISIANA, Parish of Orleans, city of New Orleans:

Before me, the undersigned authority, personally came and appeared Jules Seveignes, who, being duly sworn, says: I was not present at the session of the General Assembly of Louisiana, in January, 1877, when William P. Kellogg was declared elected United States Senator for the long term, but recorded my vote for him on the following day.

JULES SEVEIGNES, Ex-member House of Representatives from La Fourche.

Sworn to and subscribed before me at the city of New Orleans this 30th day of [SEAL.]

OSCAR ARROYO, Assistant Secretary of State.

In all the ingenuity of human lying and mendacity who could ever have suggested the reason given by this man for committing perjury? Men have lied for money, men have lied for revenge, men have lied for love, men have lied for ambition, but who ever heard before that a man swore to a lie simply to demonstrate the facility of perjury? This man says he simply swore to this to show that perjury could be committed in Louisiana with ease! The sitting member took him and handled him as tenderly as a sucking dove, folded him in his arms like a long-lost brother, and this is his explanation of this wondrous perjury:

Question, (by Senator Kellogg.) Now tell me why you signed that affidavit.

He said it was a lie, a lie made out of whole cloth. Mr. KELLOGG says, "Why did you make it?"

Answer. I signed the affidavit just merely to show how easy it was to get affidavits, knowing at the same time that they were not true.

He committed perjury to demonstrate the facility of perjury!

Q. I will ask you this question: Did you just take it into your head?

He took it into his mouth.

Did you just take it into your head?

By natural absorption I suppose.

A. Yes, sir.

That was the way he got it; he inoculated himself.

Q. That you would get at the bottom of this thing, and see if you could not burrow into it and find out what was at the bottom and what was actuating them?

A. Yes, sir. Q. Have you a family?

I ask what did that have to do with the question; I suppose the point was whether the whole family were of the same sort. ter.]

Q. Have you a family?
A. I have a mother and sister.

A mother and sister; he was not an orphan!

Q. You have no wife, have you?

In the interest of the female sex I am glad to say he had none.

Q. Are you not one of those kind of men in Louisiana

Thank God they are confined, as far as I know, to that sunny

Q. Are you not one of those kind of men in Louisiana who think, as you probably do, that you have been a consistent republican, and when you find anything against the republican party and you get a point, men like you quietly and secretly, like a detective, run it out?

Upon perjury.

A. I always do so.

True to my party, true to republican instincts and practices, whenever I get a point I generally manage to get in a lie. [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The Chair reminds the galleries that if disorder is repeated he will order the galleries cleared.

Mr. VEST. But this is not all. The governor is not satisfied with the individual; he wants to institute and establish a class of republican perjurers in his State.

Q. And has your class done it repeatedly in parishes and in the city? A. Yes, sir.
Q. Now—
Says the governor—

I want to know, did you take it into your head, seeing that that scheme was on foot, that you would follow it and go to the bottom of it, and get the details of it?

A. Yes, sir; that was why I wanted to be examined on Mr. Spofford's side.

That is the reason he wanted to swear to a lie, to get to the bottom of it.

Q. Is that the reason why you went to Mr. Elder and made that affidavit—to get his secret—

Play the spy and the traitor and the perjured scoundrel and villain that he was, is the question—knowing that he was on Mr. Spofford's side ? A. Yes, sir.

What must be the cause that would use such instrumentalities and unblushingly bring them before the Senate of the United States? He asks this man, did you do this voluntarily, act the spy, the traitor, the perjured scoundrel, all in the interest of your party?

A. Yes, sir. Q Did you go with Murray into Cavanac's office for the purpose of getting out the secret there?

Another affidavit there. One lie was not enough. He was ready to perjure himself again any hour in the day for the republican party.

Q. Did you swear that that was your motive?
A. That was my motive and nothing else.
Q. Have you been offered any inducements by anybody?
A. I was on the cars and was offered inducements there, that if I testified in behalf of Mr. Spofford that I would be taken care of.
Q. You are a Catholic, are you not?
A. Yes, sir.
Senator Hill. He is what?
Senator Kellogg. I have a reason for asking it.

The reason has never been developed.

(To the witness.) Now, I want to know if that was your motive in running this thing down?

A. Yes, sir.
Senator Kellogg. I may get at some other difficulties in this matter. (To the witness.) Did you come here for the same purpose—
Mr. MERRICK. To run this thing down?
The Witness. Yes, sir.

And that is the testimony of this man Seveignes, who made a voluntary affidavit, wrote it himself, swore to it himself, went and swore to it again, and comes here and says he committed perjury to demonstrate the fact that one could do it with the utmost facility and alac-

Next comes Hon. William John De Lacey, the illustrious scion of a knightly line, grandson of Sir Hugh De Lacey, of county Connaught, Ireland, whose affidavit in New Orleans was as follows:

Ireland, whose affidavit in New Orleans was as follows:

State of Louistana,

Parish of Orleans:

Personally appeared before me this 9th day of April, 1879, W. John De Lacey, who, being duly sworn, does depose as follows, to wit:

I reside in Rapides Parish, Louisiana. I represented that parish in the Legislature in 1877 and 1873; am a republican, and took my stand with the Packard government until its fall, believing it to be the lawful government at that time. I arrived in New Orleans December 9, 1876, after the promulgation of the elections by the returning board. I attended the republican caucuses before the assembling of the Legislature. Colonel Keating was chairman of the caucus, and A. Dejoie secretary. The caucus was called the "administration caucus." The object was to elect Michael Hahn speaker, and W. P. Kellog United States Senator. I staid in the caucus eight days. I left the caucus, having refused to pledge myself to support certain measures, namely, the election of Michael Hahn to the speakership of the house of representatives. I was short of money, so I went to Kelloge to borrow some. He loaned me $50, with the understanding that I was to vote for him for United States Senator. On the day Kellogg was elected to the Senate, I did not vote when my name was called, neither did my colleague, Mr. Drew. George L. Smith came to me and told me to stand by Kellogg, that I would be taken care of and that I would get what I was promised. Smith then threw an envelope on my desk, sealed. I opened it and saw that it contained money. Mr. L. D. Herbert was present when I received the money. Members were offered from $200 to $250 for their vote. Several that were promised got nothing. It was the every-day talk among the members of the Legislature that "Kellogg" up 1 up money so as to beat "Pinchback," and how much they were going to get. I got $200 for voting for Kellogg.

W. JOHN DE LACEY.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 9th April, 1879.

TH. BUISSON,

Third Justice of the Peace.

This lineal descendant of Sir Hugh De Lacey, whose ancestors followed the gleaming banners of William the Conqueror, swore that he was bribed in New Orleans, and swore to it deliberately and positively, and when he came here his conversion was as sudden and miraculous as that which fell on Saul of Tarsus when he journeyed from Jerusalem to Damascus, breathing out fire and slaughter against the Christians. The apostle saw a heavenly vision; but our Louisiana statesman, I am afraid, saw a vision of another sort and from another quarter. This gentleman arrived in the city of Washington, and unfortunately for ancestral glory, Hon. William John De Lacey denied his signature to the affidavit, and swore positively that he never spelled it with an "e," but when confronted with other signatures admitted by himself to be genuine and containing the fatal letter, he swore just as positively that he had never given any such testimony. Alas! that "De Lacey," "famous in story," which graced the banner of a knight "without fear or reproach," should have descended to one who proclaims his infamy even in the alliteration of the family name! as that which fell on Saul of Tarsus when he journeyed from Jerusaclaims his infamy even in the alliteration of the family name!

claims his infamy even in the alliteration of the family name!

Mr. President, I leave now profane and approach ecclesiastical matters. I come now to the testimony of that dusky sign-board on the road to heaven, the Reverend Joseph R. Watson. [Laughter.] He swore that according to the Scriptures he was justified in swearing to a lie at his own sweet will and pleasure, that it was the custom in Louisiana, that the republican party sanctioned all that sort of thing. He said, when pressed by Mr. Merrick upon that branch of the inquiry to justify his quotation from the Scriptures, that the Scriptures tell us that there are times when we should not let our right hand know what our left hand doeth, and there were times when the truth should be judiciously suppressed.

should be judiciously suppressed.

I have not time to read to the Senate the whole of these nauseating statements. This man swore he was pastor of a church, in fact of many churches, as many as the apostles of old, when they traveled from the confines of one land to another preaching the Gospel, and he says, except in some cases when he was bulldozed—and then the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Cameron] caught him and wanted to know all about that—he said except when he was bulldozed he followed his clerical pursuits most assiduously; he went from parish to parish spreading the glad tidings of salvation without money and without price, that doctrine taught us by Him who was more than man, that truth was the essence of all true religion; and yet he says when preaching the gospel with Bible in hand he committed perjury whenever he pleased; that there was no harm in it. Finally he said, as the last excuse for retracting his affidavit, "Oh," said he, "it is the spasm of conscience." Conscience hurt him! "When did you have it," said Mr. Merrick; "when did it afflict you?" Said he, "I have had it every once in a while, and I seem to be in a vision." [Laughter.]

Doubtless he was in a vision, a strange and unknown territory, if he ever got within ten miles of the naked truth. [Laughter.] A trance came over him and he was like one in a dream, but he waked up to find that he was a Louisiana politician and statesman of the radical reconstruction era and then he went on lying by the acre as he had done for the past five years.

Mr. President, I have no patience to go through this miserable stuff, nauseating and sickening and poisonous to the public ear.

Mr. McMILLAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. VEST. Certainly.
Mr. McMILLAN. Were these witnesses called by Mr. Spofford to prove fraud, in the judgment of the Senate?
Mr. VEST. Is that the question? Mr. Spofford, when he went into Mr. VEST. Is that the question? Mr. Spofford, when he went into the den of forty thieves, took in all the thieves he could get hold of. In the absence of all other testimony, he was bound to use that of these thieves, and I am glad the Senator has asked the question, for it opens up a chapter that I shall now discuss. These men made voluntary affidavits in the city of New Orleans. They were submitted to Mr. Spofford. They were brought here as Spofford's witnesses. Then what became of them? They fell into the hands of Kellogg's agents at the depot. They are never seen with Spofford after they set here. They shunned Cayanac, they shunned Spofford they shunned agents at the depot. They are never seen with Spofford after they get here. They shunned Cavanac, they shunned Spofford, they shunned the members of Congress from Louisiana. They are found with Colonel Jim Lewis, the naval officer of New Orleans, Mr. Kellogd's boon companion and friend, who was elected for the short term when Mr. Kellogg was elected for the long term. Lewis came with them and met them on the cars. He had a fine lunch, and regaled them on the way. They was not have at the depot and carried to het did and met them on the cars. He had a fine lunch, and regaled them on the way. They were met here at the depot and carried to a hotel in this city. There is evidence that that night they were found in the room of Mr. Kellogs. I do not say whether Mr. Barney Williams, whom we heard so much of in the speech delivered here by the sitting member, perjured himself or not. I have simply to say that I expect nothing but perjury from any of that crowd. I doubt from these specimens whether any of them ever speak the truth. But Williams is corroborated as to one material fact by the register of the hotel here. He says he registered himself as Mr. Davis, and the register of the hotel, according to the proprietor's testimony, bears him out in that assertion. Whether he swore the truth or not, I assert this, which Mr. Kellogg will not deny: that these witnesses were with him; that they were not with Spofford; but they went upon the stand and refused to tell one word for Spofford or Spofford's attorney, stand and refused to tell one word for Spofford or Spofford's attorney, Merrick, but the moment they saw the benign countenance of the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. Kelloge,] that moment they melted like wax; they became unctuous in his hands, and swore like milk and honey from beginning to end. And more than that, these witnesses got out of money, according to the testimony of Lewis himself—Colonel Jim Lewis, who under the rules of civil-service reform left his position in the city of New Orleans and came here to see the confederate brigadiers in Congress—came all the way for that purpose! This gentleman swears that when they were out of money he pose! This gentleman swears that when they were out of money he advanced money to them to pay their way to New Orleans, and got the money from Governor Kellogg.

Mr. Kellogg. I am sure the Senator would not misrepresent—

Mr. VEST. I would not. Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. Lewis says that he called on me some days after he testified to say that one or two of my own witnesses that had brought on were out of money and he had to lend it, and asked me to loan him some money and I loaned it, and he returned it. Mr. VEST. I understand these were Spofford's witnesses, but I may be mistaken.

Mr. KELLOGG. They were my own witnesses-only one or two. Mr. VEST. If the record does not bear me out it goes for nothing. I repeat the assertion that these witnesses—and in that at least I am not mistaken—the witnesses, to use a common expression, went back on Mr. Spofford and swore they had never made these affidavits, and they became the witnesses to all intents and purposes of Mr. Kellogg. Why was this? If I were argning the case which the Senator from Wisconsin speaks of, and we were on opposite sides, I would put the question to him before any court in Christendom, Why did put the question to him before any court in Christendom, Why did our witnesses turn against us and in the last resort become your witnesses? What was the motive? Men do not act without motive. What motive induced a man who had gone deliberately before a justice of the peace, written out his affidavit, and sworn to it, to come here, and, in the face of the whole people of Louisiana and of the United States, say "I am a perjured liar and scoundrel?" What could have induced him to do it? Mr. President, it is a wonderful fact that nearly all these people found places in the custom-house. Out of eighty-three senators and representatives who yoted for Mr. Out of eighty-three senators and representatives who voted for Mr. Kellogg thirty-four were put in the custom-house according to the

Mr. KELLOGG. How is that?

Mr. VEST. Thirty-four of these men were appointed to office. Mr. KELLOGG. I will simply state that when I come to deal with this matter-I do not know that I shall, and if not, I shall ask some of my friends to do it—it shall be shown that the statement made by the Senator from Missouri is not true.

Mr. VEST. I have got the returns made out from the Blue Book, the official statement of the Government.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. The names are there.

Mr. VEST. I do not know any better place to put it in than right

How Hayes has paid the men who made him President.

Grand aggregate of annual salaries paid to the men who counted Hayes in			233,

I say that from this paper the price of the Presidency to pay the men connected with the returning boards amounts annually to $233,020 and received the postmaster. They are scattered around from twenty-five cents a day of the property of the people as honestly in the series of the Presidency to pay the men option of the presidency to pay the presidency to pay the men option of the presidency to pay the presidency expressed at the polls! I propose to have this list go to the people of the United States to show the price of the Presidency paid under the strict rules of civil-service reform. We know what civil-service reform means under this administration created by the republican party and put in power. We saw it last summer. In the inaugural message of Mr. Hayes he said that the offices of the Government belonged to the people; that office should not be given as a reward for partisan services. I wish I had time to read it. It is blessed and holy and refreshing in the light of subsequent events. Last summer we saw but one Cabinet officer left in the city of Washington to attend to the business of the Government, and he was afflicted with a sore throat and could not talk. [Laughter.] One of them was speaking in soft Teutonic accents to the Germans of Ohio. Two others were chained like galley-slaves to the triumphal car of the senior Senator from New York, most unwilling captives; another of them was in the State of Virginia haranguing the loyal colored people of that ancient Commonwealth with such fervid eloquence that they voted unanimously the other way. The President himself led the van, "swinging around the circle," to borrow the phrase of Johnsonian times, telling the dear people what he knew of agriculture and the great blessings of civil-service reform!

I said this was the price of the Presidency. I shall file an amended petition. I left out $1,750 paid by President Hayes and the Secretary of the Treasury last summer to Cassanave, a member of the returning board in New Orleans. He did not receive any pay in the shape of office. He came on to Washington City because a judgment had been rendered against him and Kennard and Anderson and Wells for a fee of $5,000 for defending them on an indictment in the circuit court of them was speaking in soft Teutonic accents to the Germans of a fee of $5,000 for defending them on an indictment in the circuit court at New Orleans for perjury and fraud as members of the returning board. Judgment was rendered and execution was issued. The others being insolvent the plaintiff levied on the livery stable of Mr. Cassanave. He came to Washington City to appeal to the gentlemen who had received the principal reward of his rascality to take up that judgment and relieve him. The entire history of the transaction is worthy of being perpetuated.

On August 7, 1879, Cassanave addressed a letter to the President, stating distinctly his demands:

If my property is sacrificed under that judgment it will render me bankrupt. I am a poor man and unable to sustain such a loss. I have always assumed a full share of the responsibility attaching to the official acts of the returning board, although I have never enjoyed any of the fruits resulting from its findings; and in this connection I respectfully remind you—

The head of the civil-service reformthat I hold no office under your administration-

He had not been paid-and have derived no pecuniary benefits whatever therefrom; but on the contrary I have sustained considerable loss in my business on account of my identity with the board. Messrs. Anderson, Wells, and Kenner, the other three members and their numerous family connections are enjoying lucrative positions in the employ of the Government.

I called upon Mr. Sherman yesterday and he proffered me a contribution of $100 as the only relief he could offer me, which I was compelled to decline out of respect for the great finance minister of our Government.

I think that is pretty good, even for Louisiana. [Laughter.] Before sending this letter, Cassanave had called upon Mr. Hayes and was informed that he could do nothing for him. In a few hours, however, after writing this letter, $500 was sent to New Orleans to be paid on the judgment, and on August 13 the following dispatch was sent to Messrs. Shellabarger and Wilson, attorneys for KELLOGG in this case now before the Senate, they seem to have a general rein this case now before the Senate; they seem to have a general retainer in this Louisiana business:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 13, 1879.

E. NORTH COLLUM, New Orleans, La. : Should we send $1,000 more on returning board judgment will you give reason able time for balance?

SHELLABARGER & WILSON. To this dispatch came the following reply:

NEW ORLEANS, La., Aug. 13, 1879.

Messrs. Shelllabarger & Wilson, Washington, D. C.:

Messrs. Shelllanarder & Wilson, "Maching on the 17,750, and Cassanave will give security not to dispose of his property, I will wait till Jan'y. 1.

E. NORTH CULLOM.

Cassanave stated that on August 15 Shellabarger gave him the following dispatch, and directed him to sign and send to Cullom:

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 15, 1879.

E. NORTH CULLOM. New Orleans:

Will cause $1,000 to be mailed to-day, provided you stop sale and wait until Jan'y, 1 for balance. Answer immediately. G. CASSANAVE.

To which Cullom replied:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., August 15, 1879.

G. Cassanave,

Washington, D. C.:

I will not. Sale goes on.

E. SMITH CULLOM.

Cassanave carried the answer to Shellabarger, who indorsed upon it the following:

To Secretary SHERMAN:

I telegraphed that I would send $1,000 to-day if sale would stop and the plaint-iff wait for the balance till January, and this is the answer. What shall I do with the $1,000 ?

It is proper to state that this $1,000 had been sent Shellabarger by Mr. Hayes on August 13.

Cassanave delivered the indorsed dispatch to Sherman while at a Cabinet meeting, and the Secretary wrote upon it to Shellabarger as You may offer the $1,250.

Cullom declined to take less than the $1,750, and the result was its payment by the attorneys of the Administration and the stopping of the sale. Why the President and Secretary of the Treasury changed their determination, and what relation existed between the work of the returning board and the payment by them of $1,750, I leave to the candid judgment of honest men.

Mr. President, I have spoken much longer than I intended. sire to notice one or two other points in this case, and conclude. As a matter of course, in a debate of this sort, which more or less partakes of a partisan character, it is not to be expected that the staple stock in trade of the republican party should not be brought out and exhibited to the public gaze. As a matter of course we have heard from the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Maine intimations that all this thing turns upon the treatment of the colored race in the South by those who were lately in rebellion against the Government, that the colored people of Louisiana had been continually butchered, and that rapine and disorder prevailed through the entire

The pencil of Nast, the pen of Nasby, the northern press and pulpit and the republican orators upon the hustings have taught the average republican mind that the whites of the South spend their time age republical mind that the man whisky and abusing the principally during the day in drinking mean whisky and abusing the Government, and at night in murdering inoffensive negroes. That Government, and at night in murdering inoffensive negroes. That is the staple stock in trade to-day of the republican party. It was used to carry some of the Northern States at the last election. It is to be used again under the leadership of that most illustrious ex-President of the United States, with the banner so well described by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] floating above him. We are again to be lectured upon this same theme.

There are certain facts that ought to be known to the American people. I have no hope that any feeble utterance of mine will reach that great public ear of the North; I know that it is hermetically sealed against any man who, like myself, shared the fortunes of the South. They hermetically seal their ears against any utterance from such a source, but it is an adage that figures will not lie.

such a source, but it is an adage that figures will not lie.

In 1870 the population of the ten cotton States, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Texas, and Tennessee, was 8,272,233.

For the year ending June 30, 1879, the domestic exports from the United States amounted in value to $717,093,777. Of this vast sum the cotton States are credited with $162,304,250 for cotton alone; showing that over 22 per cent. of the value of our exports was for a crop grown by less than 20 per cent. of our population.

From the New Orleans papers of the 25th instant, I see that the receipts of cotton up to April 24, 1880, in all the southern ports were 5,551,769 bales, against 4,900,545 for the same period in the preceding year, showing an increase of 650,224 bales.

What candid mind can believe that results like these come from murder, oppression, and social disorder?

murder, oppression, and social disorder?
In his message to the Packard legislature on January 1, 1877, Mr. Kellogg made the following statements:

In his message to the Packard legislature on January 1, 1877, Mr. Kellogg made the following statements:

The assumption that Southern States cannot prosper under governments elected in strict accordance with the requirements of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments to the Constitution of the United States is disproved by facts. The assessment-rolls of the different parishes of the year 1875, filed in the office of the State auditor, give instructive statistics of the agricultural productions of that year. From several of the parishes complete returns were not made. It is fair to assume, as they are tax returns, that none of them err on the side of overstating results. In fifty-three out of fifty-seven parishes, with a cultivated area of 1,934,907 acres, and an uncultivated area of 1,934,907 acres, the products of the year are shown to have been 300,000 bales of cotton, 100,000 hogsheads of sugar, 235,000 barrels of octoon, 185,000 barrels of rice, and over 6,000,000 bushels of cour. Returns for the year just closed have thus far been received from only forty-eight out of fifty-seven parishes, but careful computations place the probable yield at 450,000 bales of cotton, 186,000 hogsheads of sugar, 364,000 barrels of rice, with more than sufficient corn to supply all home demands. These statistics do not include cypress lumber, moss, and other fruits; tobacco, one variety of which is cultivated to a considerable extent in several parishes; oats and other cereals, which in the hill districts are successfully raised; and neat-cattle and vegetables, in the rearing of which the State is almost self-supporting. All these considered, it is safe to say that the value of the products of the State during the present year will range from fifty-five to sixty millions of dollars. By whom have these results been produced! Not to any appreciable extent by white labor. It is one

And yet we are told in the face of these statements, showing, if Kellogg is believed, a prosperity almost unexampled, that crime and violence ran riot, while every sort of lawless oppression was being daily exercised toward the laboring class by the owners of the

No honest mind will credit the assertion. The figures of Mr. Kel-Logg show the increase in sugar, the increase in cotton, the increase in corn, hogs, and cattle; and yet at the same time he would have us believe that by night and by day an unceasing war was being made upon the producers by the owners of the soil. To-day the South stands and speaks for herself, speaks in the homes she is now rebuilding an lin the men that come with honest allegiance to this Government to fight for it and die for it against a foreign foe.

I do not pretend that scenes of violence and disorder have not been witnessed during the period of reconstruction in the Southern States. If such had not been the case, it would have been a miracle equal to any recorded in Holy Writ. The people of the South have been called upon to pass through an ordeal such as no other people in all history have experienced. Their slaves, suddenly emancipated, were put over them as rulers and law-givers, while a horde of merciless and unprincipled adventurers controlled the ignorant and credulous negro, in order to plunder the State. in order to plunder the State.

What English-speaking people would have submitted without resistance to such outrages as have been perpetrated upon the people of the South?

Sir, I have not one word to utter against the colored race. I know them far better than their pretended friends upon the other side of this Chamber, and I bear willing witness to their docility, kindness, and fidelity. By the memory of long years of kindly intercourse am I and mine reminded of these traits; but this very docility, this parasitic nature of the colored race, made them pliant tools and easy victims of the unprincipled carpet-baggers who gathered like wolves than the wounded and bleeding South about the wounded and bleeding South.

Sir, I stand here to-day representing three millions of people as loyal to this Government as any in New England. I come from a State that furnished one hundred and ninety-nine thousand soldiers to the Union Army; and I am here representing these soldiers; and I say that the people of Missouri are as true and loyal to this Government as any man who claims direct descent from the Pilgrim fathers at Plymouth Rock; yes, sir, as true, as earnest, and as loyal to the Constitution and Union of these States. In the name of this people I protest against partisan and sectional appeals to justify the outrage perpetrated upon Louisiana in seating upon this floor one who was never elected by that State to represent her sovereignty in the Senate.

But, Mr. President, my strength is exhausted. I would that I could say more upon this question so important to the people of Louisiana and so important to constitutional liberty throughout the country. The rights of Louisiana can be secured, the wrongs of Louisiana can be redressed, but who can estimate the far-reaching consequences of that greater wrong inflicted by the same agencies and at the same time upon the people of all the States, when the representative prin-ciple of free Government was stricken down to subserve the madness and greed of party.

Time may heal the wound, and such will be every patriot's prayer, but liberty is a plant so sensitive that once touched by robber hands to be a plant so sensitive that once touched by robber hands.

but liberty is a plant so sensitive that once touched by robber hands it needs long years of tender watch and loving care before its leaves again put forth or its flowers bloom.

Mr. HAMLIN. If there is no Senator desiring to speak upon the pending question at this time, I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 1650 and dispose of it.

Mr. WITHERS. I gave notice yesterday that I would to-day ask the Senate to take up for consideration the bill (H. R. No. 5896) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes. In discharge of the duty imposed on me by the Committee on Appropriations, I must ask that that be done by laying aside temporarily the regular order and proceeding to consider the bill I have named. the bill I have named.

Mr. HAMLIN. I wish to make an appeal to my friend from Virginia. I feel an interest in the bill which I have referred to. I think it cannot take much time. I shall be absent from this body to-morrow in paying that respect which is due from me to a deceased friend.

On the next day I shall be away on my road home. I wish the Senator would indulge me in letting this bill come up and be disposed of.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. Mr. President, what has become of the regular order ?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) It is proposed that it be laid aside temporarily. It holds its place.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I desire to state to the Senate that I very much hope to hear something from the other side on the regular order, the Louisiana question, before I address the Senate. If any gentleman wishes to take the floor now I will give way to him and let him speak before I do.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. Mr. President, I think that some one or more Senators on this side of the Chamber will desire to address the Senate, and will be ready to go on to-morrow morning.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. That will do. The Senator from Wisconsin may take the floor and yield to any gentleman on that side he pleases to-morrow morning.

to-morrow morning.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. I simply want the programme understood.

That being arranged, I am willing that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] shall have his way. I may be called away from the city next week, and during this week some time I desire to submit my views to the Senate on the question now before it, the Louisiana case, perhaps the day after to purpose. perhaps the day after to-morrow.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. If the Senator from Georgia desires to go on, I will not take the floor now.

Mr. HILL, of Georgia. No: I prefer not to do so now.
Mr. HAMLIN. Then the floor being assigned to my friend from Wisconsin, I now ask the Senate to allow me, by unanimous consent, to take up this bill. I do not wish to interfere with the pending

By unanimous consent, the bill (S. No. 1650) authorizing the President to make the necessary arrangements to carry into effect any convention between the United States and Nicaragua for the adjustment of claims which may be duly concluded between the two governments was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to merely state before the Senate proceeds to the consideration of that bill that I shall feel it my duty to antagonize other business with the appropriation bill to-morrow.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I will state to the Senator from Virginia that, so far as I am concerned, I will not antagonize the appropriation bill.

Mr. HAMLIN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the select committee to inquire into claims of citizens of the United States against the government of Nicaragua.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, which was to add to the bill: SEC. 7. That the appointment of none of the officers named in this act shall be made until after a convention as herein provided for shall have been made and ratified by the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. HAMLIN. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is not now in his seat, but messengers have gone to find him.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that an amendment has been proposed and ordered to be printed while the Senate was sitting on this bill with closed doors. Mr. HAMLIN. I do not ask that the bill be considered with closed

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There was an amendment offered when the Senate was in session with closed doors. The Chair understands that the Senator from Vermont has offered an amendment as as substitute for the bill. That occurred when the Senate was sitting with closed doors. The Senator is not in his seat.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to know if an amendment changing a bill of the Senate into a resolution of the Senate is in order—to change a colt into a calf!

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is not to decide on that. The Chair will rule that all amendments are in order to any bill pending except upon appropriation bills.

Mr. HAMLIN. Then I raise the question of order that it is not in order to change a bill reported by a committee into a simple resolution of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will submit that question to the Senate. The Chair has a little delicacy, however, in having this amendment read unless the Senate desire it, it having been offered while the Senate was sitting with closed doors and the Senator who offered it not being in his seat.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia. I submit to the Senator from Maine whether we ought to proceed in the absence of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EATON. I have sent for the Senator from Vermont, and I do not suppose my friend from Maine desires to push this matter till he comes in

Mr. HAMLIN. Here he is.
Mr. EDMUNDS. What is pending?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the committee has been agreed to. It was stated that the Senator from Vermont while the Senate was sitting with closed doors had offered an amendment which the Chair, in deference to the Senator, under the circumment which the Chair, in deterence to the Senator, under the circumstances declined having read unless the Senato ordered it to be done. The Senator from Vermont is now in his seat.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it better that we should consider this matter with closed doors as we did before, and I make that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the consideration of this bill be with closed doors.

The protion reason and the doors were alread.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After a session of twenty minutes with closed doors the doors were reopened and the bill was reported to the Senate, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in. Mr. INGALLS. Does the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont appear on the Journal of the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was about to state that the Senator from Vermont had moved an amendment which will now be reported. Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary to read it again; it has been read.

It can be inserted in the RECORD.

The amendment of Mr. EDMUNDS was to substitute the following resolution:

Resolved. That the President be, and he hereby is, requested to urge upon the government of Nicaragua the conclusion of a convention to provide for the settlement of claims of citizens of the United States against that government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, to the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

On motion of Mr. BECK, it was Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-

And Messrs. Beck, Withers, and Allison were appointed conferees on the part of the Senate.

SESSIONS WITH CLOSED DOORS.

Mr. CONKLING submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be instructed to inquire into the propriety of amending Rule 64 of the Senate so as to require a vote of the Senate to close its doors.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McPHERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After forty-five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at five o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

VENEZUELAN CLAIMS-PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. ORTH. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in a service of nearly twelve years that I have asked the attention of the House to a matter personal to myself. The explanation which I am about to make is due to my friends, and especially to my immediate constituents, who have for so long a period favored me with their unwavering confidence and support. These friendships and this confidence are to me dence and support. These friendships and this confidence are to me beyond all price, and shall ever be regarded as among the most cherished memories of my life. To some it may seem that this explanation should not have been deferred so long, but it was so deferred in the hope, now a reality, that I could make it in this Hall, where it can most properly be made, for the reason that here the chief matters causing it had their origin.

Four years ago, while I had the honor of representing our Government at the court of Vienna, the republican party of my State, with singular unanimity and without solicitation on my part, tendered to me the nomination for the honorable and responsible position of governor. I accepted this nomination, returned home, entered upon the canvass, and soon thereafter tendered my declination, and I now propose to state the reasons which induced this declination.

The year 1876 will long be remembered as the era of "congressional investigations." These were exceedingly fashionable, and whether they produced any practical results or simply the result which the mountain in labor produced, they furnished at least what a then morbid public sentiment desired, choice morsels of scandal and vilification.

and vilification.

Prominent among these is the one known as the "Venezuela investigation," in connection with which my name has been so freely used. After a brief recital of the history of the claims of American citizens against the government of Venezuela, necessary to a proper understanding of this matter, I shall refer to the origin, peculiarities, and purpose of said investigation.

For a long period of time in our past history, dating back to and beyond the administration of Andrew Jackson, some of our citizens have had claims against the government of Venezuela griging out of have had claims against the government of Venezuela arising out of various torts and contracts, some of the contracts being for the guns and powder used by Simon Bolivar in achieving the independence of that country. These claims at one time or another had been made the subject of official correspondence with reference to their adjudication and payment between the respective governments during all, or nearly all, of our administrations from that of Andrew Jackson to that of Andrew Johnson. Their validity was thus frequently recognized and their payment demanded by our Government.

As a result of this correspondence, a treaty was concluded between the two governments in April, 1866, for the creation of a "mixed commission," consisting of two members, one of whom should be appointed by each of the governments, and of an umpire to be named by the Russian minister at Washington. The person named as umire was a siting of Vergrala, the giving to the government tree. by the Russian minister at Washington. The person named as umpire was a citizen of Venezuela, thus giving to that government two out of the three members of the commission. The commission met, discharged its duty, allowed claims to the amount of one million and a quarter of dollars—the amount claimed being nearly four times that sum—and adjourned in August, 1868. Venezuela soon after these claims were allowed began the same rôle of delay and refusal in their payment that had characterized her course for so many years, not-withstanding the urgent requests of so many of our administrations. In 1869 complaint was made by that government against the action of the mixed commission, to which Secretary Seward replied that—

The utmost indulgence and forbearance had been practiced by this Government in regard to the claims of its citizens upon Venezuela.

An installment of the interest awarded by the commission has already become due to this Government, and it has been pressed by the claimants to insist with urgency upon prompt payment. It has forborne to do so until it should have maturely considered the objections taken by the government of Venezuela to the proceedings of the commission. That reason for delay having now ceased, this Government can no longer defer a compliance with the just demands of its citizens.

This frank and manly position of Secretary Seward did not prevent the government of Venezuela from continuing its complaints—complaints which never in the whole history of this matter have been sustained by evidence which any respectable court would tolerate—and accordingly charges against the commission were again made to this Government, to which Secretary Washburne replied:

I cannot perceive that you present any new fact or reason for acceding to that

A revision of the work of the commission-additional to those adduced in your letter of the 12th ultime, and which, as you were informed by my predecessor in his communication of the 3d instant, this Government was constrained to regard as inconclusive and unsatisfactory. I must therefore decline to reconsider the determination with which you have been made acquainted.

In May, 1869, complaints, and complaints only, but no evidence, being again preferred by Venezuela, Secretary Fish replied thus plainly and emphatically:

Plaintly and emphatically:

Had the Government of the United States been as prone to suspicion as the government of Venezuela it might have declined to investigate charges brought forward at so late an hour; but instead of so doing, animated by the spirit of justice, it invited proof. The government of Venezuela failed to furnish anything which Mr. Seward regarded as entitled to the least consideration as evidence. Mr. Washburne, on taking office, was asked to review the decision of Mr. Seward. He did so, and found nothing in the record to warrant him in reversing it. * * * Three times, under three different Secretaries of State, opportunities have been given to the government of Venezuela to substantiate these charges, and nothing has come of the forbearance of the United States except a reiteration of the assault upon the character of citizens of the United States and of Venezuela, without corresponding proof. The President directs me, therefore, to decline further discussion of the subject.

Thus matters stood at the time the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in June, 1870, after a careful investigation of the charges and testimony, unanimously reported-

That the charges against the commission are not substantiated, and that there is nothing which should affect or impair the validity of the awards.

I was a member of Congress at that time, and a member of that committee, and voted, as did every member of the committee, for the adoption of that report. This was all of my congressional connection with these claims.

Afterward, when I was not a member of Congress, I was retained as an attorney on behalf of some of the claimants to procure a distri-bution of the money then in the hands of the Secretary of State, and the passage of the act of February 25, 1873, declaring these claims "as valid and subsisting against the republic of Venezuela." The distribution was made, the resolution was passed, and this ended my connection as attorney. After the action of three Secretaries of State, and the unanimous report of the committee referred to and its adoption by the House, I had reason to believe, and did believe, and now believe, that they are honest, valid, and subsisting claims.

Venezuela continuing to disregard her treaty obligations, notwithstanding the action of the executive and legislative departments of our Government, Secretary Fish, in July, 1875, in a dispatch to our minister at Venezuela, reviewed fully and ably the history of this entire transaction, sustaining the position of our Government, showing the groundlessness of the complaints of Venezuela and the utter absence of any testimony to maintain their charges, and adding that-

Venezuela still complained of some of the decisions and promised shortly to sub-mit a record of testimony in relation thereto, but to this day, while much denuncia-tion and vague suspicion has been spread out, no evidence of any fraud or collusion has been submitted.

This dispatch concluded with directions to our minister at Vene-

Should the payment be refused or be offered only in connection with conditions restraining the right of disposal of the money by the United States, you will, at the expiration of the time which you may have named, close your legation and notify the minister of foreign affairs thereof and will take the earliest opportunity to leave the country.

I have the country.

I have thus very briefly alluded to the action of Secretaries Seward, Washburne, and Fish, than whom no three persons stand higher in public esteem as occupants of our State Department in all the past history of our Government. Their very names are synonyms for all that is able, honorable, and dignified in public station and for all that is pure, honest, and reputable in private life. I will not reproach the memory of the dead or the character of the living by asking whether anything in the lives of these distinguished gentlemen renders them liable even to the suspicion of lending themselves to the base and ignoble act of enforcing the payment of false or fraudulent claims against any foreign government.

against any foreign government.

We might find a clew to the conduct of the Venezuelan government toward our citizens, from whom they have thus long withheld payment, in the following dispatch from our minister, Mr. Russell, to the State Department, in 1875:

I feel bound to add that there are in my opinion only two ways in which the payment of so large an amount can be obtained. The first is by sharing the proceeds with some of the chief officers of this government, (meaning Venezuela,) and the second by a display or at least a threat of force. The first course, which has been pursued by one or more nations, will of course never be followed by the United States.

That is a choice sample of national honor and dignity. Upon it I have no comment to make, because comment is unnecessary. So much for these claims, and the manner in which they had been recognized and treated by the executive and legislative departments of our Government prior and up to the year 1876.

Let me now refer to the investigation which, I contend, was made without the shadow of authority either by the House or the committee. It must be remembered that this pretended to be an investigation into alleged complaints on the part of Venezuela.

This House has no authority in and of itself to treat with a foreign government, to receive from it any communication, or to have any intercourse whatever with its agents, attorneys, or officials. All intercourse between governments must be through their executive and not through their legislative department. Our Executive made no communication to or request of either House during the Forty-fourth communication to or request of either House during the Forty-fourth Congress looking to such investigation. On the contrary, President Grant, in his annual message, December 7, 1875, says:

I am happy to announce that the government of Venezuela has, upon further consideration, practically abandoned its objection to pay to the United States that share of its revenues which some years since it allotted toward the extinguishment of the claims of foreigners generally.

In thus reconsidering its determination, that government has shown a just sense of self-respect, which cannot fail to reflect credit upon it in the eyes of all disinterested persons elsewhere.

The investigating report made to this House starts out by saying, "The committee, &c., to whom was referred the message of the Pres ident, &c., with accompanying correspondence, relating to the mixed commission and also sundry memorials on that subject, have," &c.

This language could not refer to the President's annual message,

This language could not refer to the President's annual message, from which I have quoted, but it may be said that the President thereafter sent another message to this House on this subject. He did so on the 15th of May, 1876, in response to a resolution of this House, adopted April 10, 1876, "requesting the President to inform the House as to what measures have been adopted to enforce the provisions of the act of February 25, 1873," affirming the validity of these awards. Mark here, not a single word in the resolution about complaints from Venezuela—not a word in the message about any such complaints.

How then did this House obtain any jurisdiction, and where did the Committee on Foreign Affairs obtain any power or authority to enter upon any such investigation? Did it obtain any jurisdiction or authority by virtue of any "memorials" asking for such investigation? I answer, none whatever; and no man can truthfully controvert this

The committee had but one memorial before it, and that asked for no investigation or relief affecting the validity of the award. That was the memorial of Seth Driggs, a simple-minded octogenarian, who on the 8th of February, 1876, sent a memorial to Congress asking that the State Department be instructed to withhold the payment of cer-tain portions of his awards from his attorney, with whom he quarreled, and who, he alleged, had taken advantage of him in the settlement of his claim against Venezuela. Mr. Driggs had large claims tiement of his claim against venezuela. Mr. Driggs had large claims of long standing against that government, was awarded a large sum of money, and was not likely to ask Congress to invalidate his awards and take from him that which he then and now claims is justly due him from that government. The idea of his asking such relief is preposterous in the extreme; a relief which would deprive him of his just rights and make him a pauper for life.

This so for as the mingrand or account in the calls had a large claims of the calls had a large claims of the calls had a large sum of large claims.

This, so far as I am informed or can ascertain, was the only basis upon which the committee (or rather one of its members) proceeded to act in a matter which affected the rights of American citizens to the extent of over a million of dollars, and to wipe out this large amount of their property without even so much as giving them any notice or any opportunity to appear and defend their rights. I affirm that not a single claimant was informed of the intended action or purposes of the committee, or invited to meet any charges which might be made by any person whatever affecting their rights under the treaty. Was there ever such outrage or injustice? The most despotic government on earth would scorn thus to treat any of its

Secretary Seward, in his correspondence on this subject, very properly, after referring to the parties in whose favor awards had been made, says:

All such persons may claim, with show of reasons which it is difficult to refute, that they have vested rights in the awards, indefeasible by the action of either or both the governments, which surrendered to a common arbiter, without reserve, their entire jurisdiction in the premises.

Mr. Driggs had prior to the Forty-fourth Congress presented similar memorials, but no action was taken on them, for the simple reason that no Congress would intervene between the quarrels of a client and this attorney. No action would have been taken on this memorial, only that it was a year of investigations. The memorial was presented on the 8th of February, and slept quietly in the committee-room until the 20th of May following.

In the mean time I had been nominated as a candidate for governor in my State. Indiana was regarded as a pivotal State in the campaign of 1876, and no means must be left untried which could in any manner affect the result of the contest. It was known that at a time when I was not in Congress I had been the attorney for some of these claimants, and hence it might be well to start an investigation. The agents, attorneys, and officials of Venezuela would favor it, for it would furnish that government a pretext for further delays; my political and personal enemies—and what public man is without these?—would favor it, for it might inure to their benefit or gratify their animosities.

Am I mistaken in my surmises? Let us see as we proceed. The report made to this House is made by "Mr. Springer." All the witnesses were examined by "Mr. Springer," the entire machinery of nesses were examined by "Mr. SPRINGER," the entire machinery of the investigation was managed, engineered, controlled by "Mr. SPRINGER." The examination of witnesses was commenced on the 20th of May, 1876, by "Mr. SPRINGER," and drawing its slow length along was concluded on the 1st of August, 1876, by "Mr. SPRINGER." It took seventy-three days to examine nine witnesses. There may have been a purpose in "Mr. SPRINGER." for thus protracting the ex-

What further reason for supposing I was to be investigated? The first witness examined was Seth Driggs, and before his examination had proceeded very far "Mr. Springer" asked this question, namely:

What relations did Mr. ORTH, of Indiana, have to the matter

Why this question? My name was not mentioned in the Driggs memorial, nor in any paper or document then before the committee or before "Mr. Springer" that would naturally suggest such ques-

Again, why was the examination protracted for seventy-three days? There might be a necessity for this, and then again it might be deemed a master-stroke of strategy, to furnish the stuff called testimony in weekly doses. Why stop the examination on the 1st of August? My declination as a candidate was on the 2d of August, and there seemed no special reason for proceeding further. Machines are generally run as long as necessary, and when the necessity ceases the machine ceases. It is not generally known that the labors of this most extraordinary investigation resulted in two reports. The one was sent to and published by the sensational press of the country. It was intended for "general consumption," was manufactured for "partisan purposes," and most adroitly manipulated to accomplish that purpose. It may with propriety be styled a "campaign document," and is entitled to no greater consideration than the stump-speech of any ordinary demagogue.

I hold in my hands a copy of the Chicago Times, of August 7, 1876, in which this "campaign document" is published with the head-lines "The Venezuela swindle." This is the report which the public saw and read, and from which they formed their opinions. I have here also a copy of the report made to this House. This one was not insaw and read, and from which they formed their opinious. I have not intended for newspaper publication, and although full of distorted facts and erroneous conclusions is a very different document from the former. This will fully appear from a comparison between them.

In order to attack the justice of the awards, it became necessary to bring suspicion and odium upon the members composing the commission. It will be remembered that each of the governments selected one commissioner and they jointly were to select one umpire. If they could not agree in this selection the umpire was to be named by the Russian minister at Washington. Not having been able to agree, the Russian minister, Baron Stoeckl, was notified of the fact and requested to make the appointment, with which request he complied. If the integrity of this appointment could be successfully attacked, of course the commission would be invalidated and the cry of fraud be raised with some show of plausibility. The author of the "partisan" report had sense enough to appreciate this, and hence he deliberately pens and publishes the following in reference to the umpire, namely:

had sense enough to appreciate this, and hence he deliberately pens and publishes the following in reference to the umpire, namely:

Baron Stoeckl appointed an umpire February 27, 1868. Just how this appointment was brought about, and why there was a delay of over four months in making it, is involved in much mystery.

That Baron Stoeckl vots defrauded in making the appointment of umpire there can scarcely be a doubt, when we consider all the facts and circumstances in relation thereto. Juan N. Machado, jr., was a manufacturer of cotton candle-wicks in Venezuela, and was also the agent of Commissioner Talmage for the transaction of his private business in Caracas, acting under special power of attorney given him by Mr. Talmage. He had no legal attainments and no local reputation such as would suggest him as a proper person for an international arbitrator. From all that can be learned of him, it appears that he was wholly unfit for the discharge of the important duties which were devolved upon him.

Of the claims passed upon by the commission and the umpire, only about one-third in amount was allowed by the two commissioners and two-thirds in amount of the awards were allowed by the decision of the umpire.

The official paper, signed by Baron Stocckl, by which Machado was appointed, states:

"I have been trying to fulfill the confidence reposed in me by those two governments, and therefore I have appointed an impartial man as arbitrator, which man is Senor Machado, who, according to the best information I get about him, has these qualifications in a high degree."

It will be observed that no Christian name is given to the umpire by Baron Stocckl, but in the confirmation of the appointment of the umpire by the commissioners the name appears in full as Mr. Juan N. Machado, jr. This is the first appearance in the record of the name of Juan N. Machado, fr.

It appears from the evidence of Mr. Munoz y Castro that there were resident in Caracas, at that time, three persons bearing the name of Machado. First, Dr. Flipe

Most assuredly, if Baron Stoeckl, by imposition or otherwise, had been made to select one particular person as umpire when he had intended to appoint another and different person, the awards made by such wrongful umpire would have been "void and of no effect." And this would have furnished the author of this "campaign document" a sweet morsel. So anxious was he to find even supposed ment" a sweet morsel. So anxious was he to find even supposed ground for fraud that he deliberately penned the foregoing extract from the "campaign document;" but in the report submitted to this House we find totally different language. In the former it is said, if the hypothesis of Mr. Springer is true, "then the Russian ambassador did not appoint an umpire at all, and the awards made by him are void and of no effect," while in the report made to this House the following language is used, namely:

There has been much discussion on this subject in the diplomatic correspondence between the two governments, and your committee have not thought it necessary to pass upon it at this time. It is sufficient for this inquiry that the Venezuelan government insists that a fraud was perpetrated in this respect, while our government has insisted that the appointment was regular and fairly made.

How very differently indeed this transaction is related in these two reports! But the wily Venezuelan minister and the equally wily au-thor of these reports had no reason whatever to indulge in these surthor of these reports had no reason whatever to indulge in these surmises and suspicions affecting the integrity of Baron Stoeckl and the entire impartiality and good faith with which he discharged the duty assigned him. The author of these two reports especially had no reason to attack the absolute integrity of the good old baron who for so many years and so acceptably represented his government at our capital. Baron Stoeckl intended to appoint Juan N. Machado, jr., and he did arrested that the second province of the seco capital. Baron Stocki intended to appoint Juan N. Machado, jr., and he did appoint Juan N. Machado, jr., as such umpire; and the official evidence of his action is to-day in the State Department and has been there since the 27th day of February, 1868. And more than this, the author of these reports knew it was there; and it reads as

Washington, February 27, 1868

To Hon. WILLIAM H. SEWARD, &c., Secretary of State :

By your communication of the 6th of February, ultimo, you send me a copy of a convention between the United States and Venezuela, to arrange the arbitrament of certain claims.

of certain claims.

In which convention it is stipulated that in case the two commissioners employed, respectively, by the two governments do not agree with the election of one arbiter, he will be appointed by me, as representative of His Majesty the Emperor of all the Russias in the United States.

I have been trying to fulfill the confidence reposed in me by those two governments, and therefore I have appointed an impartial and respectable man as arbiter, which man is Mr. Juan N. Machado, jr., who, according to the best information I get about him, has the qualification.

I have submitted his election to Mr. Rivas, who is in charge of the business belonging to the united states of Venezuela, and he has regarded it as favorable. I am, &c.,

It appears that Rivas, chargé d'affaires of Venezuela to this Government, was informed of Juan N. Machado, jr.'s, appointment and "regarded it as favorable." Again, the two commissioners were informed of such appointment.

as appears by the following:

CARACAS, April 18, 1868.

CARACAS, April 18, 1868.

Inasmuch as the embassador of Russia, in the city of Washington, has appointed as arbiter, in conformity with the convention made between the United States of America and Venezuela of April 25, 1866, and having appointed Mr. Juan N. Machado, jr., as arbiter, and who has accepted the office and taken the oath before the commission, who having received the notification by their respective governments, and agreed to continue the meetings of the joint commission according to the act of the 7th of October, 1867, which election is notified to the minister of the united states of Venezuela:

It is agreed that the meeting of the commission is to occur every day, except Sunday, &c.

FRANCISCO CONDÉ, Commissioner for Venezuela.
DAVID M. TALMAGE,
Commissioner on part of United States.

ALFREDO ANDERSON, Secretary.

In the presence of this testimony, all of which is on file in the State Department, this charge of fraud, which also forms the grand basis of other equally false charges of fraud, must vanish into very thin air and leave its author in an unenviable predicament.

Let us proceed with our comparisons. Here is another extract from this campaign document, not one syllable of which is to be found in the official report of the committee, namely:

found in the official report of the committee, namely:

On the 31st of March, 1870, the record of the committee states as follows:

"The subject of the claims of American citizens against the government of Venezuela was taken up, and Mr. Orff made a statement with regard to the question. The members of the committee discussed the question at some length, after which Mr. Orff was requested to prepare a resolution on this subject."

At the next meeting of the committee, on April 4, the record states:

"The consideration of claims of American citizens on the government of Venezuela was resumed, and Mr. Orff submitted a resolution entitled 'Joint resolution to enforce the stipulations of the convention of Venezuela of April 25, 1866.

"The joint resolution was ordered to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it pass. Accordingly Mr. Wilkinson, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, on the 1st day of June, 1870, submitted a report to the House which states that the committee had carefully examined the testimony taken in Venezuela, transmitted to this country in charge of an accredited party, filed in the State Department, and laid before the House by the Secretary of State.

"From the examination made by the committee at that time it was deemed surprising that the evidence was so feeble and inconclusive.

"The report stated that the American commissioner and others implicated had been heard in defense by the committee; the committee were therefore of the opinion that the charges against the commissioner were not sustained, and that there was not sufficient in the testimony to affect or impair the validity of the awards. In view of the premises they recommended the passage of the joint resolution prepared by Mr. Orth."

Let us proceed with our comparisons, for we have not yet reached

Let us proceed with our comparisons, for we have not yet reached the end of this disreputable matter. Here is another part of this "campaign document," not a word or syllable of which can be found in the report which the committee presented to this House, namely:

in the report which the committee presented to this House, namely: It may be interesting in this connection to inquire into the circumstances which brought about the passage of this act in the face of the serious charges which have been made by the government of Venezuela against the conduct of the commission and the character of the claims awarded. Mr. Orth appeared before your committee on the 23d of May last, and stated that he was a member of the Forty-first Congress, but was not a member of the Forty-second. In his testimony he said:

"I went out of Congress on the 4th day of March, 1874. Subsequently to that time, and when I never expected to be in Congress, I accepted an employment from Stilwell and Talmage to act as their attorney in procuring a payment of some money which had been forwarded here by the Venezuelan government and which was in the State Department. That employment included my services down here in Washington to assist in procuring the passage of the joint resolution of the Forty-second Congress declaring the validity of the award.

"My recollection is that the House passed a joint resolution, which went to the Senate, and that the Senate amended it by striking out what was supposed to have been the force part of it, as it was called, and when it came back to the House the House concurred in the Senate amendement."

Mr. Orth further said:

been the force part of it, as it was called, and when it came back to the House the House concurred in the Senate amendment."

Mr. ORTH further said:

"Q. What service did he desire you to perform in relation to the matter?

"A. The first service he wanted me to perform was to come here and get Mr. Fish to make a distribution of the 7 per cent. that was paid. I came and saw the Secretary. Mr. Stilwell desired me subsequently to assist in getting a legislative recognition of the validity of these awards. As I understood, Mr. Stilwell cared nothing for what was called the force part of the joint resolution; he only wanted a legislative recognition of the validity of the awards. They were disputed, and the certificates were comparatively valueless in consequence."

Mr. ORTH stated that on the 4th of March, 1873, when his term of office began, he terminated his employment as attorney for the parties; but in the summer of 1873, as a matter of friendship as much as anything else, he wrote some letters to the State Department in reference to those certificates.

He further stated that he received as compensation for his professional services seven of the one-thousand-dollar certificates issued by the mixed commission, and also money enough to pay his expenses and a reasonable fee; that these certificates were paid to him in nearly equal proportions, but that Talmage paid the greater part. He received some of these certificates in 1871, some in 1872, and some in 1873; most of them after the passage of the law in 1873.

The question was put to Mr. Orth, "Did it not strike you that there was some truth in the statement about the action of the commissioners in the rendering of these awards?"

To which he replied: "I would not like to swear to a surmise. I must confess that where there was so much said, at some time I thought this, and at some time I thought the other; but after the examination, and after the testimony of Murray and Stilwell and Talmage before the Commissioners in the rendering of these owning the other in the United States had waited long enough for the Venezuelan government, and that the money on hand should be distributed. It was mainly through Mr. ORTH'S efforts that the act of February 25, 1873, became a law. The passage of this act ended all congressional action up to the present time.

If it was not the purpose of the author of this "campaign document" to investigate me, under the pretext of investigating these claims, why did he insert my testimony and exclude that of all the other witnesses? He did so doubtless with the purest of partisan motives; but the Committee on Foreign Affairs would not suffer itself to be thus used, and hence struck out every word of it from the report which he was authorized to present to the House.

But the animus of this "campaign decument" appears still further.

But the animus of this "campaign document" appears still further in the following extract therefrom, and which was not permitted to remain in the report made to this House for the very good reason that not a word of it was true, namely:

Your committee have directed me to report the accompanying bill, and recom mend its passage:

A bill in relation to the Venezuelan mixed commission

A bill in relation to the Venezuelan mixed commission.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of State be directed to abstain from distributing among the holders of certificates of awards of the commissioners or arbiters under the convention with Venezuela of the 25th of April, 1866, any sums now in his custody, or which may hereafter be received, on the account of these awards, and that the President be recommended to propose to the government of that republic a convention providing for a rehearing of such of the claims as were laid before or passed upon by the commissioners and arbiter aforesaid as may be agreed upon, and also for the examination of such other claims as may be presented.

SEC. 2. That the said commission to be so formed shall have power to control all outstanding certificates of award of the said mixed commission of 1866, and to issue other certificates to such persons as may be rightfully entitled thereto.

SEC. 3. That the act entitled "An act to enforce the stipulations of the convention of Venezuela of April 25, 1866, and the payment of adjudicated claims," approved February 25, 1873, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. Speaker, it is almost beyond belief, but the fact nevertheless

Mr. Speaker, it is almost beyond belief, but the fact nevertheless is so, that the Committee on Foreign Affairs never agreed to any such bill as is above recited, and of course never authorized such bill to be reported to the House, as the author of this "campaign document" asserts. But the end is not yet. All of us know the weight which the asserts. But the end is not yet. All of us know the weight which the unanimous report of a committee carries with it. None knows this better than the author of the "campaign document" report, judging from the fact that he sought to convey the impression to its readers that such report had the unanimous approval of the committee by suppressing the fact that a respectable minority of the committee refused to sanction it. That minority consisted of Mr. Monroz, the distinguished goat laws from Ohio and Mosers Beaker from Peru distinguished gentleman from Ohio, and Messrs. Packer from Penn-sylvania, and Banks from Massachusetts, the former [Mr. Monroe] stating "that he was not prepared, with present opportunities for examination, to adopt all the incidental statements and opinions of the report," and the latter (Packer and Banks) that-

In view of the fact that the testimony taken by the sub-committee has not all been printed, has not yet been submitted to the committee, and is incomplete, and that the time afforded for an examination of the questions involved has been limited, they do not wish to commit themselves to all the findings, deductions, and propositions contained in the report.

Mr. Speaker, each progressive step in this "investigation" but reveals more and more plainly the reckless, if not wicked, purpose of its veals more and more plainly the reckless, if not wicked, purpose of its author, and indelibly stamps upon it a character of utter worthlessness. Here you have the unchallenged statement of two members of the committee (Messrs. Packer and Banks) that the evidence upon which the report pretends to be based "has not yet been presented to the committee," and yet here is an official report made to the House by its author, and filed among our national archives, seeking to destroy over a million of dollars of the property of our citizens, and what is still more reprehensible, seeking to tarnish character and reputation infinitely more precious, without so much as the committee having the opportunity of seeing the testimony upon which it is supposed to be based. A report made under such circumstances and with such surroundings carries with it no weight and is entitled to no consideration, and had its true character and the animus of its author sideration, and had its true character and the animus of its author been fully known I venture to say the committee would never have authorized its presentation to the House.

This "investigator" was not content with the examination of witnesses brought before him by summons or coming voluntarily. The sanctuary of domestic life and the sacredness of private correspondence was invaded, drawing out the private letters of our former minister to Venezuela, the late Colonel Stilwell, in the vain hope of finding something that would blast the memory of the dead or reflect upon the character of the living. I do not recollect of ever writing or authorizing any one to write to Colonel Stilwell on this subject, but if any letter to him or any one else was written by me, or authorized by me to be written, I am perfectly willing at any time to have it published to the world. So much for the investigation and the reports

So much for the investigation and the reports.

Mr. Speaker, would you believe it, in view of the clamor which prevailed against me during this investigation that while the "campaign document" is full of direct and incidental allusions to me—referring to me time and again by name—the report presented to the House mentions my name but once or twice incidentally, and nowhere makes the least charge against me personally, or any allusion or insinuation affecting my integrity, or calling in question in any manner any of my acts in connection with this entire transaction. The presentation of this report to the House was followed by a repeal of the act of February, 1873, which the committee in their report to the House say "was wholly unnecessary, as the treaty provides that the awards " " shall be final and conclusive," and the whole matter remitted to the Executive.

Since then Venezuela has been again urging that our Government should consent to an abrogation of the awards under the treaty of 1866, and the institution of a new commission for the re-examination of these claims. This the President has very properly declined, Secretary Evarts in a recent communication to the Senate stating that "no obligation of justice to Venezuela requires from this Government such abrogation or such new commission," but "on the other hand a necessary attention to the rights of our own citizens * * precludes a remission of their demands to the uncertain composition and the precenting of the precent of the rights of the uncertain composition.

precludes a remission of their demands to the uncertain composition and the precarious administration of a new commission," and adds that Congress might if it saw fit, "institute a judicial investigation * * * to determine which of the awards it would decline to further press the payment of and what awards it would insist upon."

In this connection it may be proper, in a single word or two, to answer the question frequently propounded, "Why I declined to continue the canvass for governor?" As already mentioned Indiana is politically a doubtful State. By both parties it was then regarded as the pivotal State in the Union. The result of her election in October would in all probability have been decisive of her presidential vote in November, and that vote with equal probability might have decided the presidential election. A defensive campaign is most generally regarded as a disastrous campaign. By this investigation have decided the presidential election. A defensive campaign is most generally regarded as a disastrous campaign. By this investigation I was placed on the defensive—placed so not only by the dilatory character of the investigation and the continuous clamor of my political opponents, but also by a similar clamor of personal enemies in my own party as well as by the timidity of political friends. It was a year, too, when charges abounded against all prominent candidates of both parties, and when the public ear was most willing to hear charges, but equally reluctant to listen to explanations or denials. In my case it was not a single charge or series of charges fully made In my case it was not a single charge or series of charges fully made In my case it was not a single charge or series of charges fully made up and challenging denial, but continuously made with weekly variations having their origin in the peculiar mode of examination most congenial to "Mr. Springer," to which I have already adverted, furnished to the press in weekly installments, and embellished with such additions, innuendoes, and insinuations in which a reckless reporter loved to indulge and which a sensational press regarded with luxury unspectable. On mature reflection it seemed to a hour property of the constraints of the constraints of the constraints. unspeakable. On mature reflection it seemed to me but one course unspeakable. On mature reflection it seemed to me but one course could be adopted, and that was to remain no longer in a position when by so remaining I endangered the success of my party to whose principles I am attached, of whose history I am proud, and whose continued triumphs are paramount to the wishes or interests of any single individual. [Applause on republican side.] This concludes what I have to say, and I am thankful for the attention accorded me.

While I have spoken freely and plainly, I have hardly dared to trust myself in view of the treatment I received to use language that would fitly characterize this transaction for fear of trespassing upon the proprieties of parliamentary debate. I have made my explanation and placed it where I most desired it should be placed, on the permanent records of this House. There I leave it, and I leave the conduct of my "investigator" to receive, what it so justly merits, the condemnation of all honorable men. [Renewed applause on republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I had no notice until yesterday of the address which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ORTH] has just submitted to the House. This matter had passed out of my mind, it having occurred four years ago this coming summer. I have not heard more than half of the remarks made by the gentleman to-day, owing to some confusion in the Hall and the difficulty of hearing the gentleman at this distance

As the gentleman has seen fit to submit as a matter of personal explanation at this time remarks concerning what took place during a previous Congress of which I was a member, and has referred to my official conduct at that time as conduct which ought to receive the condemnation of all honorable men, I shall ask the indulgence of the House to hear me at some future day when I have been allowed an opportunity to read the remarks of the gentleman as they will appear in the RECORD and to submit such explanation of my course as in my judgment will convince the gentleman from Indiana himself, as well as all honorable men, that my course in that respect was one in the strict line of official duty and actuated by no ill will to him. On the strict line of official duty and actuated by no ill will to him. On the contrary, the discrepancy between the two reports to which he refers was caused by the request of the gentleman's friends, which I granted, to omit a portion of the first report so that it should not go to the public in the official report of the House.

Mr. ORTH. By whose request?

Mr. SPRINGER. The request came from the honorable gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. MONROE.]

Mr. ORTH. The request came from none of my friends, for that report was not substantiated by any testimony.

report was not substantiated by any testimony.

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman from Ohio was a republican member of the committee and was recognized at the time this substitution was made as a friend of the gentleman from Indiana, who had retired from the canvass. I was assured by his friends on this floor that it was not proper after he had retired to private life to connect him with the investigation; therefore I was requested as a favor to him to omit that part of the report which I had prepared and submitted to the general committee. It seems now that an act of kindness on my part at that time toward the gentleman has been construed by him into dishonorable conduct. All this I will explain to the satisfaction of this House and the country when I have had an opportunity to read his remarks and to review the matter at length. I ask unanimous consent to make such explanation at a future time, due notice of which I will give to the gentleman from Indiana, as he has given me notice on this occasion

Does the gentleman indicate any time? The SPEAKER.

Mr. SPRINGER. The SPEAKER. I cannot state now the time. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he be allowed the same privilege which has been accorded to the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. Orth,] so that he may reply to the remarks made by that gentleman touching the subject which has been discussed. Is there objection?

Mr. HEILMAN objected. [Cries of "Oh no!" and "Withdraw your objection!"]

Mr. KELLEY. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his objection, as an act of justice to his friend and colleague.

Mr. HEILMAN. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection, and unanimous consent is given.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I want to ascertain whether any limit is fixed by our rules or by parliamentary usage as to the extent to which a gentleman may go in making a personal explanation? I have no objection to what the gentleman from Indiana has said, or what the gentleman from Illinois proposes to say.

The SPEAKER. The rules very clearly define what are questions of privilege; but the Chair might as well state, in reference to the matter which has been proceeding here this morning, that it has gone on by unanimous consent, not under any rule of the House.

Mr. YOUNG, of Tennessee. I think it would be well enough to fix now how far a matter of this kind shall go.

The SPEAKER. The rules fix that; and they will be adhered to, of course, unless the House by unanimous consent should vary the

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 2253) to provide for the construction of a marine hospital in the city of Memphis, Tennessee;

An act (H. R. No. 2787) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, and for the armament thereof, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. No. 2902) to place William Gaines, late ordnance-sergeant United States Army, on the retired list;

An act (H. R. No. 3803) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to change the name of the steamboat Minnie R. Child, of New York; to change the name of the steamboat Minnie R. Child, of New York;

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. REAGAN, by unanimous consent, reported from the Committee on Commerce a bill (H. R. No. 6060) making appropriations for the construction, repair, completion, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. REAGAN. One of the objects in reporting this bill now and having it printed is that members may examine it before it is brought up, so as to make corrections of names, &c.

INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to give notice that on Thursday morning next, if the Post-Office appropriation bill shall have been completed by that time, or if not, then as soon as it may be completed, I shall ask the House to take up the interstate commerce bill for considera-

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. I give notice that I shall antagonize that proposition with the funding bill.

The SPEAKER. These notices do not amount to anything unless sustained by a majority of the House.

Mr. REAGAN. I am aware of that, but I desire the House to know my purpose in the matter.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to which were referred the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, reported the same back with a recommendation of concurrence in the amendments numbered 1, 2, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 26, 27, 33, and 35, and non-concurrence in the amendments numbered 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 34.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that this is a unanimous report.

Mr. CONGER. Have these amendments been printed in any way?
Mr. BLOUNT. They have been. I will remind the gentleman from Michigan that this is not a conference report.

The SPEAKER. It is a report of the Committee on Appropriations recommending concurrence in certain amendments of the Senate and non-concurrence in others.

non-concurrence in others.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is a unanimous report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is so advised.

Mr. GARFIELD. Then let us adopt the report.

The SPEAKER. It is within the power of any member of the House to ask a separate vote on any of these amendments, but if there be no objection the report of the committee will be adopted as a whole and the amendments of the Senate concurred in respectively, as recommended. curred in, respectively, as recommended.

There being no objection, the report of the Committee on Appropriations was adopted.

Mr. WELLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table

The latter motion was agreed to.

VETO OF IMMEDIATE DEFICIENCY BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to lay before the House a message in writing from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

After mature consideration of the bill entitled "An act making ap-After mature consideration of the bill entitled "An act making appropriations to supply certain deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," I return it to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with my objections to its passage.

The bill appropriates about $8,000,000, of which over $600,000 is for the payment of the fees of United States marshals, and of the general the payment of the fees of United States marshals, and of the general and special deputy marshals, earned during the current fiscal year, and their incidental expenses. The appropriations made in the bill are needed to carry on the operations of the Government and to fulfill its obligations for the payment of money long since due to its officers for services and expenses essential to the execution of their duties under the laws of the United States. The necessity for these appropriations is so urgent, and they have been already so long delayed, that if the bill before we contained as represents a great level. that if the bill before me contained no permanent or general legislation unconnected with these appropriations it would receive my prompt approval. It contains, however, provisions which materially change, and by implication repeal, important parts of the laws for the regulation of the United States elections. These laws have for several years past been the subject of vehement political controversy and have been denounced as unnecessary, oppressive, and unconstitutional. On the other hand, it has been maintained with equal zeal and earnestness that the election laws are indispensable to fair and lawful elections, and are clearly warranted by the Constitution. Under these circumstances to attempt in an appropriation bill the modification or repeal of these laws is to annex a condition to the passage of needed and proper appropriations which tends to deprive the Executive of that equal and independent exercise of discretion and judgment which the Constitution contemplates.

The objection to the bill, therefore, to which I respectfully ask your attention, is that it gives a marked and deliberate sanction, attended by no circumstances of pressing necessity to the questionable and as by no circumstances of pressing necessity, to the questionable and, as I am clearly of opinion, the dangerous practice of tacking upon appropriation bills general and permanent legislation. This practice opens a wide door to hasty, inconsiderate, and sinister legislation. It invites attacks upon the independence and constitutional powers of the Executive by providing an easy and effective way of constraining Executive discretion. Although of late this practice has been resorted to by all political parties, when clothed with power, it did not prevail until forty years after the adoption of the Constitution, and it is confidently believed that it is condemned by the enlightened judgment of the country. The States which have adopted new constitutions during the last quarter of a century have generally provided remedies for the evil. Many of them have enacted that no law shall contain more than the country that the relative transfer is the country. one subject, which shall be plainly expressed in its title. The constitutions of more than half of the States contain substantially this provision, or some other of like intent and meaning. The public welfare will be promoted in many ways by a return to the early practice of the Government and to the true rule of legislation, which is that every measure should stand upon its own merits.

I am firmly convinced that appropriation bills ought not to contain any legislation not relevant to the application or expenditure of the money thereby appropriated, and that by a strict adherence to this principle an important and much-needed reform will be accomplished. Placing my objection to the bill on this feature of its frame, I forbear any comment upon the important general and permanent legislation which it contains, as matter for specific and independent consideration.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, May 4, 1880.

Mr. COBB. I move that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and that the bill lie upon the Speaker's Committee on Appropriations and that the bill lie upon the Speaker's table; and upon that I move the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. I wish to inquire what effect "lying on the table" will have upon this bill? Does not the Constitution require us to vote on the bill? If the bill is laid upon the table that would be equivalent to killing it.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Indiana is in accordance with the practice of the House on similar occasions.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand it is competent to lay a bill on the table: but the language of the gentleman from Indiana is that this bill lie on the table.

The SPEAKER. It is the language of the Manual.

Mr. GARFIELD. When I move that a bill be laid on the table I may not call it up afterward; but if I move that it remain on the table it is quite another thing. What I want in this motion is that there may be no misunderstanding in reference to it, that it may be

Mr. McLANE. It is not on the table now, and cannot remain there.
Mr. GARFIELD. If it merely intends that it shall remain on the

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the object of the gentleman from Indiana is to refer the message to the Committee on Appropriations in order that that committee may consider the objections of the President. Pending the consideration of which the bill is to remain on the Speaker's table.

Mr. COBB. That is my object, simply that the matter shall be

Mr. COBB. That is my object, simply that the matter shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations to consider and determine what course or policy to pursue. I will read from the Manual—
Mr. SPARKS. The motion is to print the message and refer it to the Committee on Appropriations, and the effect of the motion is full ther that the bill shall lie upon the table pending that consideration; in other words, to remain on the Speaker's table until called up for action.

Mr. COBB. I read now from page 328 of the Manual:

Whenever a bill is returned to the House with the objections of the President, it is usual to have the message containing his objections immediately read, (Journals 1, 28, pages 1081 et seq.,) and for the House to proceed to the consideration of the bill, (Ibid.,) or to postpone its consideration for a future day.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is right.

Mr. COBB:

But not where less than a quorum is present, (Ibid. 33, page 1341.) A veto message and a bill may be referred, or the message alone, and the bill may be laid on the table.

Now, my motion is to refer the message to the Committee on Ap propriations, and let the bill lie on the table, in accordance with the

Mr. GARFIELD. Let the gentleman, then, make his motion to lie on the Speaker's table.

Mr. COBB. That is what I did in the first instance.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Speaker's table is simply a place of waiting

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I want to appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to permit the message to go to the Committee on the Judiciary, stating as my reason that while I am prepared just after the cursory reading to agree with the reasoning of the President as against the policy of tacking riders upon bills, and especially upon appropriation bills, yet, sir, I am inclined to believe from that reading that the President has going a start to for and that the prespace advanced in his ident has gone a step too far, and that the reasons advanced in his message threaten a serious invasion upon the rights and privileges of this House, in that under the Constitution this House determines for itself the rules of its proceedings, &c. I prefer, therefore, that my friend will allow me to make a motion that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GARFIELD. The whole subject belongs to the Committee on Appropriations, and should go there.

Mr. COBB. I do not think it proper to go to the Judiciary Committee. If it should go to any other committee than the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Rules would seem to be the appropriate committee, because the question involved is whether, under the Constitution, this House has the power to make such rules in regard to legislation as will permit this character of legislation upon appropriation bills. But I take it for granted that there can be no question in reference to that matter, and therefore this question should question in reference to that matter, and therefore this question should properly go to the Committee on Appropriations, to be considered by that committee as to what action shall be taken.

Mr. CALKINS. Is debate in order ?
Mr. WHITTHORNE. I withdraw my proposed amendment.

Mr. COBB. I insist upon my motion.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the motion that the message be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations and that the bill lie upon the Speaker's table was agreed to.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman raised the question of order, which the Chair understood as equivalent to an objection.

Mr. BLOUNT. I object. I want to go on with the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Several members called for the regular order.

INTERNAL REVENUE.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the bill (H. R. No. 4812) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue, which comes over as unfinished business from Saturday. When the House adjourned on that day the previous question was prevailing upon the bill and amendments up to the engrossment of the bill. A vote had been taken upon one of the amendments and it was rejected. The second amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger.] will now be read. be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 16.

Mr. CONGER. I think the section proposed to be stricken out need not be read. If my amendment be adopted it will strike out the charge of ten cents on the stamps; and if that be stricken out the law is left as it is.

The SPEAKER. In the absence of any demand for the reading of what is proposed to be stricken out the Chair will submit the question to a vote.

The question being taken on the amendment, there were—ayes 52, noes 65

Mr. CONGER. I will not call for the yeas and nays upon this amendment. Nor do I make the point that a quorum has not voted. I do not consider this amendment so essential as the next.

The Clerk read the next amendment offered by Mr. Conger, as follows:

Strike out section 17 of the bill, as amended, which reads as follows:

"Sec. 17. Whenever the owner of any distilled spirits shall desire to withdraw the same from the distillery warehouse or from a special bonded warehouse, he may file with the collector a notice giving a description of the packages to be withdrawn, and request that the distilled spirits be regauged; and thereupon the collector shall direct the ganger to regauge the same, and mark upon each package so regauged the number of gauge or wine gallons and proof-gallons therein contained. If upon such regauging it shall appear that there has been a loss of distilled spirits from any cask or package, without the fault or negligence of the distiller or owner thereof, taxes shall be collected only on the quantity of distilled spirits contained in such cask or package, at the time of the withdrawal thereof from the distillery warehouse or special bonded warehouse: Provided, however, That the allowance which shall be made for such loss of spirits as aforesaid shall not exceed one gallon for two months, or part thereof, one and one-half gallons for seven and eight months, troe gallons for nine and ten months, three and one-half gallons for seven and eight months, three and seven and the months, three and one-half gallons for cleven and twelve months, four gallons for thirteen, fourteen, and fifteen months; four and one-half gallons for sixteen, seventeen, and eighteen months; it we gallons for nineteen, twenty-three, and twenty-four months; six gallons for twenty-two, twenty-three, and twenty-four months; six gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-seven months; six and one-half gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-one months; six gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-one months; six gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-one months; six and one-half gallons for twenty-five, twenty-six, and twenty-one months; six and one-half gallons and that the al

Mr. CONGER. The House has dispensed with the morning hour, which is the time for making reports from committees.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

The House accordingly resolved itself in Committee of the Whole,

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the bill (H. R. No. 6036) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal be read the first time in committee.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Believing, Mr. Chairman, that in the opinion of the House there is no necessity for general debate upon this bill, of the House there is no necessity for general debate upon this bill, but that under the five-minute rule opportunity will be afforded to both sides (I do not mean both sides politically; I mean both the advocates and opponents of the measure in its several features) to say all that they may desire to say upon its merits or demerits, I move that the committee rise with a view of limiting all general debate on this bill to one minute, so that we may at once proceed to consider it by clauses under the five minute rule.

by clauses under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BELFORD. I understand that some gentlemen on this side desire to be heard in reference to the provision of the bill limiting pay for increased expedition on star routes to 50 per cent. over the original contract price. So far as I am personally concerned I would have no objection to dispensing with general debate, as I do not de-incorporated in the appropriation bills.

sire to take part in such discussion; but I make this suggestion in behalf of other gentlemen. I know that one gentleman at least, the gentleman from California, [Mr. Page,] who is not now in his seat, desires to be heard on the bill.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am sure the House will bear me out in the statement that I have never sought to abridge debate upon any mat ter pending for its consideration; and I do not desire to do so in this case. But I do not believe there is needed on this bill any discussion which may not be had to the satisfaction of every member under the five-minute rule. The motion I have indicated meets, I think, the approval of an overwhelming majority of the House; and in order to test the sense of the House, I move that the committee now rise with the view of limiting general debate to one minute.

Mr. HASKELL. I would like to have time at least to secure from the Committee on Appropriations an explanation of this provision to which the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. Belford] has referred.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will undertake to answer for the committee, and remind the contract of the committee, and remind the gentleman from Kansas that the very provision to and remind the gentleman from Kansas that the very provision to which he alludes was subjected to elaborate discussion under the hour rule, less than ninety days ago, in this House; and, so far as concerns members of the Committee on Appropriations and other advocates of the bill, they will be amply content with the opportunity given by the five-minute rule to satisfy the House as to the propriety of the insertion of that provision.

The motion of Mr. BLACKBURN that the committee rise was agreed

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Buckner having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Carlisle reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 6036) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all general debate upon the bill in Committee of the Whole be limited to one minute.

Mr. BELFORD. I move to amend by inserting one hour. The amendment of Mr. Belford was not agreed to. The motion of Mr. Blackburn, to limit general debate to one minute, was agreed to.

The question recurring on the motion of Mr. BLACKBURN, that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Carlisle in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purp

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate upon the pending bill is limited to one minute. Unless some gentleman desires to occupy that time the Clerk will proceed to read the bill by paragraphs, for amendment under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill, read as follows:

Office of the Postmaster General: For mail depredations and inspectors of mails, including amounts necessary for fees to United States marshals and attorneys, $150,000. And not exceeding $5,000 of this amount may be expended for fees to United States attorneys, marshals, clerks of courts, and counsel necessarily employed by inspectors of mails of the Post-Office Department, subject to approval by the Attorney-General; and the superintendent of railway mail service and the chief of inspectors of mails shall be paid their actual expenses while travelling on the business of the Department; and section 4017 of the Revised Statutes is hereby so amended as to insert in lieu of the words "special agents" and the word "agents," wherever they occur in said section, the words "inspectors of mails."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to make a verbal amendment on the suggestion of the Post-Office Department. I move to strike out, wherever they occur, the words "inspectors of mails," and insert in lieu thereof the words "post-office inspectors." It is the preference of the Department that these employes be denominated "post-office inspectors" instead of "inspectors of mails," as proposed in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

For advertising, $35,000: Provided, That the Postmaster-General shall cause advertisements of all general mail lettings of each State and Territory to be conspicuously posted up in each post-office in the State and Territory embraced in said advertisements for at least sixty days before the time of such general letting; and no other advertisement of such lettings shall be required; but this provision shall not apply to any other than general mail lettings.

Mr. BUCKNER. I will ask whether the proviso contained in the

Mr. BUCKNER. I will ask whether the proviso contained in the paragraph just read is new legislation.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir; it is a verbatim copy of the provision of the bill passed last year for the present fiscal year.

Mr. DUNNELL. There is a general law in the precise words which have been incorporated in this paragraph.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The bills making appropriations for the present fiscal year and the preceding year follow the general law, which has also been followed in this bill.

Mr. DUNNELL. Why represe the provision here if it is a part of Mr. DUNNELL. The judgment of Congress in that respect may have been wrong.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The committee did not undertake to pass upon that question.

Mr. DUNNELL. Why recite every year the existing law?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any proposition to strike out these words !

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to amend by striking out the proviso.
Mr. BLACKBURN. I trust that will not be done. I think the Committee of the Whole is not prepared to take such action.
Mr. DUNNELL. I will say to the gentleman from Kentucky that the words embraced in this proviso are precisely those of the existing law, now a part of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will refer the gentleman from Minnesota to

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will refer the gentleman from Minnesota to every Post-Office appropriation bill from 1879 until now, and he will find this identical provision is contained in every one of them.

Mr. DUNNELL. I do not doubt that; but the appropriation bill is not as good a source of information as the law itself.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Has the gentleman the law before him?

Mr. DUNNELL. No, sir; but I know that it is in existence.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is for the Committee of the Whole to take the risk of striking it out. The Committee on Appropriations have deemed it wise to retain it.

deemed it wise to retain it.

Mr. BLOUNT If my colleague will allow me, I desire to suggest that a similar provision on other matters in Post-Office appropriation bills has given rise to doubt in the Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. In response to the objections I will simply say that through abundant caution I am following the precedent of the Post-Office appropriation bills which have prevailed since 1879.

Mr. DUNNELL. I have no doubt of that. The Committee on Appropriations follow a good many poor precedents. It is one of them in this case where it is proposed to re-enact a part of the Revise.

The amendment was not agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General: For compensation to postmasters, $7,500,000.

Mr. MONEY. I move to amend, in the forty-first and forty-second lines, by adding $50,000 to the sum therein named; so it will read:

For compensation to postmasters, $7,550,000.

I do this, Mr. Chairman, in order that the bill may agree with the estimates of the Department. In reference to this matter I wish to say that the compensation of postmasters of the first, second, and third class is fixed by law and must be paid whether the amount is appropriated or not; and further, that the compensation to postmasters of the fourth class is retained by them out of commissions on the ters of the fourth class is retained by them out of commissions on the sale of postage-stamps, box rents, &c., and that they will thus be paid their salaries as fixed by law whether this appropriation is made or not. I think, therefore, it is not necessary that it should differ from the estimates of the Department. It is estimated by the Department that it will take $7,550,000 for this purpose, and that much ought to be appropriated. If that amount is necessary it will have to be paid. If it is not necessary there can be no objection to appropriating it, because it will not be used.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi whether, in submitting this amendment, he predicates it on any calculation he himself has made as to the amount of money spent in past years or in the past year, or whether he has predicated spent in past years or in the past year, or whether he has predicated it upon any comparison of the rate of increase between the present fiscal year and any preceding years for compensation of postmasters; or, further, whether he simply predicates it upon the fact that the Post-Office Department has made an estimate for $7,550,000. I am frank to say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the committee having this bill in charge have made as elaborate an investigation into this subject as it was possible to make, and instituted a patient examination based upon past experience for this service as well as the estimates obtained from the Post-Office Department, and upon the facts thus gained they base the amount of the appropriation as given here. It is well known that it is a matter that cannot be determined here. It is well known that it is a matter that cannot be determined accurately, because you cannot tell nor can the Post-Office Department tell what new post-offices will be created, or how many additional postmasters will be necessary for conducting the business of the Government, and it cannot be made a matter of practical calculation. It is at best simply an estimate.

But the Committee on Appropriations with such facts as they were able to reach in the shape of comparisons between the service in past years, with the presumable rate of increase annually, arrived at the conclusion that the sum of $7,500,000 is amply sufficient for this purpose, and even if it is not enough it does not matter, because these salaries are determined and arranged by law, and whether the com-purpose, and even it to shot cloud it these not matter, because these salaries are determined and arranged by law, and whether the committee appropriate too much or too little it does not affect the compensation of this class of employés a particle. It is simply a question whether the estimates of the Post-Office Department are too liberal or the committee are too close.

Mr. MONEY. Does the gentleman from Kentucky desire an an-

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do, if the gentleman is able to give any additional figures or any computations. I wish to say in addition that the compensation of the postmasters cannot be changed by this, for that is a matter regulated by law and beyond our power to control in this way.

Mr. MONEY. I say, does the gentleman from Kentucky desire me to answer him?

Mr. BLACKBURN. If the gentleman has any comparative statement I should be very glad if he would.

Mr. MONEY. I did not know that the gentleman was going to give me an opportunity to answer him.

I have already given the reason why the estimate of the Department should be observed in making this appropriation. I have told the gentleman from Kentucky that I based my statement upon what is estimated by the Department and that there could be no good is estimated by the Department and that there could be no good ground for reducing that estimate for the reason that the postmasters of the first, second, and third class have their salaries fixed by law, and they certainly would not be affected by this. I also told the gentleman that the salaries of the fourth-class postmasters are fixed by law based on commissions on the sales of stamps, &c., and their salaries are retained in their own hands out of the moneys derived from the sale of stamps, box rents, &c. They are empowered by the law to retain this from the sums that come into their hands from these sources. For these reasons I have seen and I see now no reason whatever why this bill should depart from the estimate of the Department in that respect.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am satisfied after the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi to leave this matter to the committee to determine. The gentleman made his motion to increase the sum therein appropriated $50,000, without any single item of information or any facts from the Post-Office Department which would warrant it, and simply because it was the amount estimated by the Department. The gentleman has no comparative statement of the increase or probable increase of postmasters or post-offices throughout the year. Nor has he any information which the Committee on Appropriations had not before them in a much fuller way when this appropriation was recommended. The Department stated to us through its officers that it could not know any more than we could know what would be required by a comparative increase of postmasters. Now you have it for your consideration. This is the proposition of the committee upon one side, after an investigation and careful inquiry into all the facts, the unanimous report of the committee; and on the other side the application to increase it $50,000, without giving any facts, or statements, or figures, or comparisons, or estimates to warrant it. The committee or figures, or comparisons, or estimates to warrant it. The committee believe the amount recommended is amply sufficient.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Money] asks for the increase of this appropriation without giving a single reason to the House except what is patent to every one, that the Post-Office Department have estimated so much.

Mr. MONEY. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MONEY. The gentleman from Georgia certainly could not have heard me, for I gave other reasons.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not understand the gentleman to give any

Mr. MONEY rose.
Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman will have an opportunity hereafter to correct me if I am misstating his position. He certainly gave no other reason which addressed itself, in my judgment, to the House.
We appropriated for this purpose for the last fiscal year $7,500,000; and here is a statement from the Sixth Auditor of what was spent in that year, the amount being $7,182,000. The Committee on Appropriations have taken the rates of increase in the compensation of postmasters from year to year and from them have made their calculation, arriving at the result that they could get along with this amount. From year to year in the matter of the compensation of postmasters, for the last two or three years, we have gone on the estimates based on the calculations. There is no deficit this year for the compensation of postmasters.

Mr. SLEMONS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir. Mr. SLEMONS. How many new post-offices have been established since last year?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know how many new post-offices have been established. I do not keep the figures in my mind; nor do I know how many new post-routes exactly there are.

Mr. SLEMONS. Will the gentleman allow me to finish my question? Mr. BLOUNT. I understood the gentleman had completed it. Mr. SLEMONS. I ask further, how you arrive at the conclu Mr. SLEMONS. I ask further, how you arrive at the conclusion that a sum of $7,500,000 is sufficient?

Mr. BLOUNT. There are new post-offices this year, but we have made the ratio of increase larger than heretofore. And to ask this House, after the careful examination by the Committee on Appropriations of the receipts and expenditures leading them to the conclusions on which they base this bill, to override the committee, simply on the ground of estimates, it seems to me is asking a good deal.

The question being taken on Mr. Money's amendment, it was not

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $3,650,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether the Post-Office Department has not asked an increase of which is the rost-office Population and the asked at increase of this amount since the estimates were sent in?

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, sir. On the contrary, this bill gives the Post-Office Department every dollar it asks under this head. There have been requests from the Department for increased appropriations in various items, but in this instance there is no such request.

The Clerk read as follows:

For marking and rating stamps, $13,500.

Mr. SHELLEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

After line 50 insert:
"For the purchase of card-canceling and post-marking machines, $6,000; and the proper officers of the Post-Office Department may purchase such machines as in their judgment may best answer the purpose."

Mr. SHELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Postmaster-General has requested an appropriation of this amount of money for the purpose stated in my amendment; that is, for the purpose of purchasing canceling machines, which are necessary in the larger offices in order to the proper dispatch of the mails. I believe there is no objection to the amendment, and I hope there will be no point of order made on it.

Mr. STONE. Let the amendment be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I simply suggest to the gentleman from Alabama to consider whether his amendment would not come more properly on page 6 at the end of line 118, under the head of "Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General," where the postal-cards are appropriated for.

Mr. MONEY. Oh, no; this is a stamp, and comes in appropriately in connection with the marking and rating stamps.

Mr. BLACKBURN. It is not a stamp. It is a canceling and post-marking machine. The instrument used for marking and rating stamps is a little hand-machine; this is for the cancellation of postal cards. The machine—the only one under patent that I know of cards. The machine—the only one under patent that I know of—was before the Committee on Appropriations and was examined very elaborately and carefully; and I doubt not it is entitled to all the good words spoken for it by its advocates here and by the Post-Office Department as a labor-saving machine. In the opinion of the Committee on Appropriations the price at which it was offered to the Post-Office Department at its first presentation here was exorbitant, and for that reason the Committee on Appropriations declined to recommend the purchase or make appropriations for it. The price was ommend the purchase or make appropriations for it. The price was afterward reduced and it was offered at a recent date to the Post-Office Department, as the Committee on Appropriations were advised by the Postmaster-General, at a very much reduced rate of cost. The Post-Office Department also advised us the Government will need about thirty of these postal card-canceling machines. That they are labor-saving machines I have no doubt. The Department seems to be thoroughly convinced of it; and while it did hesitate a long while to recommend an appropriation for that purpose it subsequently sent in a communication to the House, which has been referred to the Committee on Appropriations, recommending the sum of $6,000 to be set said for prevailing these thirty card canceling machine. of $6,000 to be set aside for providing these thirty card-canceling machines. The Committee on Appropriations have instructed me to make no point of order on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama; and I have no doubt it is very proper it should pass.

Mr. MONEY. Does the gentleman from Kentucky accept the amend-

Mr. BLACKBURN. I have no authority to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky cannot accept the amendment; it must be voted upon by the Committee of the

Mr. MONEY. It is a mistake to say there is only one of these canceling-stamps; there is quite a number of them.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I did not say there was only one.

Mr. BLOUNT. The amendment does not cover any particular one.
Mr. MONEY. The gentleman from Kentucky spoke of only one.
Mr. BLACKBURN. I said that the instrument used for rating stamps is a hand-machine, and makes its impression on the envelope, showing how much rost on its angle of the particular package. This showing how much postage is due on the particular package. This machine answers no such purpose, but simply cancels postal cards; and it was for that reason I suggested it should be offered to another portion of the bill.

The amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read the following: For letters, test-weights, and scales, $8,000.

Mr. MONEY. I move to amend by striking out "$8,000" and inserting "$10,000." I am assured by the officials of the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General that there is an immense amount of merchandise mail-matter registered and a great number of new bal-ances and scales are demanded. They tell me they cannot get along with less than $10,000. Gentlemen will recollect that last year the system of registering packages of merchandise began to be operative, and these scales and balances are made necessary where heretofore they were not needed at all.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted for this reason: Hitherto there has been appropriated the sum of $2,500 annually for letter-balances, test-weights, and scales, and the annual appropriation for that purpose has never been expended heretofore.

I know there is some force in what the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Money] says about the increase in bulk of this insubordinate class of mail-matter under the new arrangement of the Post-Office Department. I know that to some extent it does necessitate a larger supply of scales and letter-balances than they have had heretofore; but gentlemen must remember that $2,500 a year has been all that has been appropriated heretofore for this purpose, and that amount has proved to be amply sufficient and has never been exceeded.

The Department now asks for $10,000 for this purpose. It is true that about three months ago we appropriated a sum as a deficiency to meet the very demand which the gentleman from Mississippi now refers to, the increase of third-class mail matter.

The Department now comes forward and asks for $10,000 next year for this purpose, as against $2,500 a year heretofore appropriated. The Committee on Appropriations propose by this bill to approriate the sum of $8,000 for this purpose.

I will correct the statement which I made a moment since in regard I will correct the statement which I made a moment since in regard to the appropriations heretofore made for this purpose. I find by reference to the tables that there have been appropriated annually these sums, $3,501.25, $3,142, and $2,773. The Committee on Appropriations now propose to give $8,000, as against the sum heretofore appropriated; an increase of more than 100 per cent. upon the expenditures for this purpose made in any previous year. The committee thought that amount would be amply sufficient, and would give enough margin for the wants of the Department.

I know of po reason for the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi to increase the sum to $10,000, except that the Department have asked for that sum. I am sure that the comparative statements here before me will not warrant even the amount which the bill itself proposes to give.

the bill itself proposes to give.

The question was taken upon the amendment of Mr. Money; and was not agreed to. The Clerk read the following:

Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General:
For inland mail transportation, namely: For transportation on railroad routes, $9,500,000: Provided, That in case any railroad company fail or refuse to provide railway post-office cars when required by the Post-Office Department said company shall have its pay reduced 10 per cent. on the rates fixed in section 4003 of the Revised Statutes; and section 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. BLACKBURN. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as 10110Ws:

Insert after the words "Revised Statutes" the following:

"As amended by the act of July 18, 1876, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1877, and for other purposes,' and as further amended by the act of June 17, 1878, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, and for other purposes.'"

Mr. MONEY. Should that amendment be adopted, would it be in order to move to amend the paragraph by striking out all of the provise?

proviso?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. MONEY. Including this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Including this amendment.

Mr. KEIFER. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BLACK-BURN] will explain the effect of this amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will do so. This amendment simply supplies an oversight in the printed bill.

The amendment refers to two sets—the one of July 12, 1876, and

The amendment refers to two acts—the one of July 12, 1876, and the one of June 17, 1879. By the first of those acts the rate of pay to railroads refusing or failing to furnish the car space required by the Department was cut down 10 per cent. By the second act it was still further reduced 5 per cent.

The object of this amendment is to subject these railroads to a still greater reduction of pay, to the extent of 10 per cent. additional, where they shall refuse to furnish to the Department the amount of car space absolutely needed for the mails.

car space absolutely needed for the mails.

In the absence of the amendment just reported by the Clerk, instead of operating as a penalty to the amount of 10 per cent. reduction upon the present actual rate of pay, the bill would result practically in giving a premium of 5 per cent. to any railroad for refusing to furnish the necessary amount of car space. If Congress contents itself with a reference to section 4002 of the Revised Statutes, leaving out any reference to the two acts of 1876 and 1879, it will remit these rail-road companies to the old rate of pay, which is 15 per cent. above what it is now. It would therefore practically result in offering a what it is now. It would therefore practically result in oldering a premium of 5 per cent. to all the railroad companies for refusing to give the car space required by the Government for its mail service, instead of a reduction of 10 per cent. which the committee propose. For that reason this amendment is rendered necessary.

Mr. STONE. You refer to these acts simply as amendments of the section of the Revised Statutes?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes; as amendments of section 4002.

The amendment offered by Mr. BLACKBURN was then agreed to.

Mr. MONEY. I move to amend by striking out in lines 61 and 62 the words "$9,500,000" and inserting "$10,000,000." I will state my reason for offering this amendment.

We have already in this fiscal year forty-three hundred and ninety-one miles of new railroads, and it is estimated that by the 1st of July there will be five thousand miles of new railway, all of which will demand postal service. The appropriation last year for this item was $9,000,000, and making a very reasonable estimate for increased service, at least $10,000,000 will be required for the coming year. Now we understand very well that the expenditure for this purpose must in its very nature be flexible. The Postmaster-General must be governed in this respect by the law regulating the pay of the railroad companies by weight, supplemented by space, and if the business of the country should so increase as to put upon the railroads such additional weight of mail matter as will demand extra compensation, this must be paid whether the appropriation is sufficient to meet it or not. there will be five thousand miles of new railway, all of which will to meet it or not.

Now the increase of business in the last six months has been more than 14 per cent. It is well known to gentlemen here that 95 per cent. of the mail-matter of this country is carried upon railroads. We have here an increased mileage of five thousand miles to be paid for with an appropriation increased only $500,000 above the appropriation made last year, leaving out altogether the increase of 14 per cent.

made last year, leaving out altogether the increase of 14 per centupon the business.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know upon what estimate the Committee on Appropriations have submitted this item of the bill. It must be apparent to every man here that if the sum of $9,000,000 was necessary last year, as it was, then with the increased mileage and corresponding increase of business, calling for an immense increase of compensation, $10,000,000 will not be too much to appropriate for this purpose for the next fiscal year. Hence I hope the amendment will be adouted.

be adopted.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to test the accuracy of the suggestions made by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Money] as to the increase in the railway mail transportation. The gentleman says that the amount appropriated must of necessity be "flexible;" yet he undertakes to tell the Committee of the Whole that it is not safe to leave this appropriation at $9,500,000 for the next fiscal year; that this will not leave a sufficient margin to meet the increase of railway mail service.

Mr. MONEY. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say the amount appropriated must be flexible; I said the amount expended must be

Mr. BLACKBURN. I wish the gentleman would be as accurate as he desires me to be, and as I certainly desire to be.

I know that according to the estimate for the next fiscal year there will be an increase of six thousand miles of railroad mail service. The Committee on Appropriations have predicated their recommendation upon that estimate. The gentleman may go on and tell us, if he desires, that there will be an increase of eight thousand miles; yet, even upon that basis, he cannot justify his conclusion that $10,000,000 will be needed for this purpose. We have taken the estimates of the Department itself—not as they were made for us in bulk, but as they have been given to us in detail by the officers of the Department upon consultations with us day after day. We have reported this item upon an estimated increase of six thousand miles of railway mail service for the next fiscal year; yet I doubt not I shall surprise the gentleman from Mississippi, certainly if I do not surprise him I shall surprise the House, by the statement I am about to make.

Mr. MONEY (in his seat) made an undertone remark.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No, I do not believe the gentleman will be surprised at anything; but he would utterly astound and amaze me if he should support a single amendment he offers here by any data, or any facts or any figures or any evidence. I will show the House the accuracy of the gentleman in his estimates.

I hold in my hand a report not three days old from this very branch will be an increase of six thousand miles of railroad mail service.

the accuracy of the gentleman in his estimates.

I hold in my hand a report not three days old from this very branch of the Post-Office Department, giving the actual expenditures by quarters for the present fiscal year so far as it has gone. What do you imagine these expenditures have been? Nine million one hundred and fifty thousand dollars was appropriated for railway mail service for the present fiscal year. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars of that was for the purpose of securing proper facilities upon main trunk lines; so that for railway mail transportation proper there was exactly $9,000,000 appropriated for the present fiscal year. Now, if the reports and records of the Post-Office Department are to be credited (and here they are, not three days old, as given to the Committee ited (and here they are, not three days old, as given to the Committee on Appropriations) there was expended for the first quarter of the on Appropriations) there was expended for the first quarter of the present fiscal year, beginning upon the 1st of last July, $1,944,901.86; and for the second quarter, terminating December 31, $2,082,690.21. The increase of the second quarter over the first was only the difference between $1,944,901.86 and $2,082,690.21. The Department has not rendered an account for the third quarter, and of course cannot give any for the fourth quarter, which is now current. Thus it will be seen that notwithstanding the increased railway service, which the gentleman tells us has been up to the present time over four thousand miles, there was expended during the first half of the present fiscal year only $4,027,592.07, leaving unexpended to the credit of the railway mail service fund on the first day of the third quarter, the beginning of the last half of the fiscal year, $5,122,407.93. [Here the hammer fell.] Now, Mr. Chairman, I simply desire to add that instead of $5,000,000 the committee offer here $9,500,000, and that is at least $700,000 in excess of the average estimates, as I have just shown.

Mr. DUNNELL rose. Mr. DUNNELL rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota desire to debate the amendment?

Mr. DUNNELL. I have an amendment which I desire to offer after the vote is taken upon the pending amendment.

The amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to offer the following amendment: to insert after the word "dollars," in line 62, the following:

Of which sum $150,000 may be used by the Postmaster-General to maintain and secure from railroads necessary and special facilities for the postal service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I raise the question of order upon that amendment that it changes existing law and that it does not retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The law in relation to the compensation of railmr. BLOUNT. The law in relation to the compensation of railroads for mail transportation provides for their payment by weight. The rate of pay provided for such service will be found by reference to section 4002 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the Post-Office appropriation bill of 1876, and further amended by the Post-Office appropriation bill of 1878. The exact dates of the passage of the bills I do not remember, but, that the Chair may understand the point, I will send to the Clerk's desk and have read section 4002 of the Revised Statutes

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4002. The Postmaster-General is authorized and directed to readjust the compensation hereafter to be paid for the transportation of mails on railroad routes upon the conditions and at the rates hereinafter mentioned:

First. That the mails shall be conveyed with due frequency and speed; and that sufficient and suitable room, fixtures, and furniture, in a car or apartment properly lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

lighted and warmed, shall be provided for route agents to accompany and distribute the mails.

Second. That the pay per mile per annum shall not exceed the following rates, namely: On routes carrying their whole length an average weight of mails per day of 200 pounds, $50; 500 pounds, $75; 1,000 pounds, $100; 1,500 pounds, $15; 2,000 pounds, $150; 3,500 pounds, $175; 5,000 pounds, $200, and $25 additional for every additional 2,000 pounds, the average weight to be ascertained, in every case, by the actual weighing of the mails for such a number of successive working days, not less than thirty, at such times, after June 30, 1873, and not less frequently than once in every four years, and the result to be stated and verified in such form and manner as the Postmaster-General may direct.

Mr. BLOUNT. After a while I shall ask also to have read in this connection section 4004. In 1876, in the Post-Office appropriation bill, the rate of pay was reduced 10 per cent. on the amount of the preceding year; and in the bill of 1878 it was further reduced 5 per cent. The Chair will see that the principle on which compensation for this service is based is to pay so much upon the weight of the mails, and the pay, as has been shown by the section which has just been read, being dependent and graded by the amount of mail mat-been read, being dependent and graded by the amount of mail matter transported.

Now, the law provides that the compensation shall not exceed a given sum; in other words, that there is a limit. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois provides, however, that in addition to the amount this law declares may be paid, the further sum of $150,000 may be used by the Department for additional compensation to railroads, with a view to obtaining additional facilities from them. This is the legal question that I raise; and I apprehend that there will be no difficulty in deciding it, as it seems to be a very plain question.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I do not know a great deal about parliamentary usages. I never am quite clear whether I am in or out of order in this House, and I do not think anybody else is until after the rulings are made. But I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this amendment which I offer is precisely of the Chair to the fact that this amendment which I offer is precisely the language of the law as enacted upon the general appropriation bill for the current fiscal year, and also for the two years preceding, so that this appropriation, substantially in amount, and I believe precisely in words, has been enacted in three general Post-Office bills, and is the law to-day. I sent to the desk, in fact, the amendment as it is in the original appropriation bill, which the Chairman will perceive by examining for himself.

Now, as to the points which have been made against it by the gentleman from Georgia: In the first place it does not change existing tleman from Georgia: In the first place, it does not change existing law. On the contrary, section 3964 of the Revised Statutes makes all railroads or parts of railroads now in operation post-roads. Again, section 3942 authorizes the Postmaster-General to put service upon all post-roads or railroads without advertising, being the general provision. Now, I suspect if a railroad were to refuse to carry the mail at all the Postmaster-General might treat it as a post-road, and, if he saw proper, hire somebody to run a hand-car over it or perform any other service in reference to it which would be warranted by the any other service in reference to it which would be warranted by the general law. So I do not think or believe this is subject to the point of order, for the reason that under the general law to which I have referred the Postmaster-General would have the right to run the road himself or hire anybody else to run it, in the event the railroad company refused to carry the mail.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him for a question? While that may be very true, could the Postmaster-General, where he hired somebody else, pay to him for carrying the mail anything in excess of what is prescribed in the statutes? In other words, suppose that he were to undertake to run the road, would he have the right to pay anything in excess of the amount prescribed by the law? That seems to be the question here.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I understand that is the question. I do not know whether he could or not, but I am inclined to think he can, because by the general provision of the law concerning all such cases to which I have referred he is authorized to contract generally without advertising for bids for service upon all post-roads. And I will acknowledge that this law was enacted for the purpose of compenacknowledge that this law was enacted for the purpose of compensating railroad companies who were operating their roads by weight and by space; and so long as they are compensated for doing the service in that way I suppose the payment would have to be made as the section now provides. But in the case supposed, and I have a right to put strong cases, suppose the railroad company abandons the road altogether, refuses to do the service. In that case the Postmaster-General, under the statute which makes it a post-route, has the power to put service upon it the same as on any other route, and to put service upon it without advertising. He is not confined to a locomotive; he is not confined to a steam-car; he may run a horse-car on it; he may run a foot-messenger upon it if he chooses, or upon any other post-road where he has authority to contract, without reference to advertisement.

It is true it may be replied it cannot be anticipated that this state of affairs would arise or will arise. Yet it may arise. While it would not arise ordinarily, yet it may arise, and if it does I think under those general provisions of the law, and not under the operation of the two sections mentioned by the gentleman from Georgia, that service could be placed upon those roads. If so, then this amendment is not subject to the point of order.

Mr. HAWLEY. I would like to suggest an illustration to the Chair. This money is intended for purposes not contemplated directly by the statute; it is intended to meet certain emergencies; and I will supstatute; it is intended to meet certain emergencies; and I will suppose a case as perhaps the best mode of illustration. Let us suppose that a fast and valuable mail came through from the West to Baltimore and went on to New York early in the morning. And suppose that the Postmaster-General was anxious to connect with that train at Baltimore to get a mail from Washington early to New York and the East. The Baltimore and Ohio road say, "We have no occasion to run a train so early in the morning; we would have no passengers at all; but if you consider that train essential give us $5,000 a year and the commensation at so much a ton allowed by statute, and we at all; but if you consider that train essential give us $5,000 a year and the compensation at so much a ton allowed by statute, and we will run a train to serve the purposes of the Department." This would be no violation of the statute as to the compensation for the amount of mail carried; but the railway will not put on their train to be for no other use than to carry that mail. It seems to me an appropriation of money could be used in a case like that and would not be a change in the existing law. It is an additional facility we have a sight to great change in the existing law. It is an additional facility we have a right to grant.

We go upon the supposition that the railroad company is to send a train in a certain direction over its road at any rate, and we buy of them the privilege of using a portion of a car or putting on a whole car to carry the mails along. Now, suppose a railroad company find it entirely and altogether sufficient for their purposes to run a train at fifteen miles an hour, and only one in the morning, as some railways do, and the Government service requires a mail in the afternoon or requires one to go over a piece of the road at double the rate in order to connect somewhere. In such a case I think it is entirely wise and sensible on our part to put in a little additional money sometimes for that purpose, and I do not think it is a change of existing law.

I know on the general question I could make an argument as to the necessity of great care in the exercise of this power, but I hold we have the right to make an appropriation for special uses that do not conflict with the existing statute, and therefore that the point of order is not well taken.

is not well taken.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose; and Mr. BUCKNER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. BURCH, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate insided upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making approprations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes disagreed to by the House of Representatives, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed Mr. BECK, Mr. WITHERS, and Mr. ALLISON as conferees on the part of the Senate. The message further announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House was requested. Here the committee informally rose; and Mr. Buckner having taken amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. No. 3347) to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish four pieces of condemned ordnance for the soldiers' monument at Marietta, Ohio.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. No. 1670) to authorize the Wyoming, Montana and Pacific Railroad Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Railroad Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations;

The joint resolution (S. R. No. 107) to authorize the loaning of certain tents and artillery to the Union Veteran Corps, composed of ex-Union soldiers, for the purposes of a reunion to be held at Wichita, Kansas, in the month of October, 1880; and

A joint resolution (S. R. No. 104) authorizing the Secretary of War to lend certain tents, flags, &c., to the governor of the State of New Hampshire for the use of the militia of that State at their general months to be held the present year. muster to be held the present year.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the argument of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Hawley] who has just taken his seat would go well to the merits of the question as to whether or not money should be appropriated for the purpose of getting additional facilities. It does not apply to the point of order, and I shall not therefore occupy time in discussing the statements made by that gentleman.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] very modestly tells the House that when questions of order are raised he does not know exactly where he is, whether he is right or wrong. My observation is that whenever the gentleman takes the floor he knows exactly where he is.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I would only commend my modesty to the gentleman.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understand the gentleman's modesty, but I would give it another name more complimentary to his intellectual powers than the name he gives it.

The gentleman says that the law now authorizes the Postmaster-General to do this very thing; that this amendment is not contrary to existing law. Then, why is it that my friend wants to put it on this bill? If the Postmaster-General has the power under the law now, why does he ask for more law?

Here is a large sum of money appropriated which my friend does not propose to increase at all; but he proposes to put law in here with a view of enabling the Postmaster-General to expend the money for a certain purpose, because as the law now stands it expressly provides that the Postmaster-General shall not pay exceeding a given sum for

It is further argued by my friend that this was in the bill of last year and of the year before. That is true, and I remember quite well how it was done. The first time it was ever placed in the bill the Senate tacked on our bill a new method of compensating the railroads. There were various contests over it, and finally there was an agreement to put in the sum of $150,000 for the purpose of enabling the railroad companies to build postal cars, and of that sum only $84,000 was used during that year. In the next bill the Committee on Appropriations did not object to the sum of $125,000, which passed through.

In the next bill the committee refused to put in a dollar for the purpose, and the House did not put any in. The bill then went to the Senate and was there amended by having added to it another bill providing for the reclassification of mail matter, for a new method of compensating railroads, and various other propositions, the Brazilian mail subsidy among others. We found ourselves near the close of the Congress. We ascertained there would be concessions in regard to everything else but the sum of $150,000 for this purpose, which was finally agreed upon by way of adjustment. That was the way it got in the bill then. Therefore the argument of my friend amounts to nothing. The law is clear, and I am willing to submit the question to the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to make a single suggestion upon the to the Chair.

Mr. ROBINSON. I desire to make a single suggestion upon the point of order. I do not think the merits of the amendment are to be taken into consideration by the Chair at all. The gentleman from Georgia has asked to have section 4002 read, in which it is provided that the pay per mile shall not exceed a certain sum per annum, and the Chair is apparently troubled with the idea that the amendment may go further than the provisions of section 4002. I will ask to have another section read. This amendment provides that of the sum here appropriated $150,000 may be expended for securing "special and necessary facilities" by way of railway service. That is the language of the amendment. I now ask the Clerk to read section 4004 of the Révised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Additional pay may be allowed for every line comprising a daily trip each way of railway post-office cars, at a rate not exceeding $25 per mile per annum for cars forty feet in length; and $30 per mile per annum for forty-five-foot cars; and $40 per mile per annum for fifty-five to try foot cars.

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to suggest to my friend—
Mr. ROBINSON. If the gentleman from Georgia will bear with me, I will occupy the attention of the committee but a moment longer.
Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has had section 4004 read, which relates to postal cars. He will find in lines 84 and 85 of this bill the appropriation made for transportation by postal-cars.
Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; that does not at all affect the question whether the amendment now offered is in order or not.
Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all.
Mr. ROBINSON. I am only discussing the point of order, and I hope the gentleman will keep to the point of order, and not go to the merits of the amendment. Is this amendment in order? Here is an appropriation, and under section 4004 of the Revised Statutes a cerappropriation, and under section 4004 of the Revised Statutes a cerappropriation, and under section 4004 of the Revised Statutes a certain rate of payment is provided. For a certain other special and necessary facility section 4004 provides another rate of payment. Now, I submit that the Chairman will not undertake to say that it is not within the power of the Postmaster-General to determine that the special and necessary facilities to be provided under this amendment will be authorized by section 4004 of the Revised Statutes. If they are, then the money will be expended in accordance with the provisions of existing law, and there is no change in the existing law required.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to inquire what effect in that case this amendment will have ?

what effect in that case this amendment will have f
Mr. ROBINSON. If the Chair will allow me to say so, I do not think that is a question which the Chair should be troubled with.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair is endeavoring, of course, to construe the amendment to determine what it means, for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not it does change existing law. In that way, of course, it becomes necessary for the Chair to determine what effect the amendment would have if adopted.

Mr. PODINSON. The affirmative proposition is that this amend-

Mr. ROBINSON. The affirmative proposition is that this amendment changes existing law. That is the position of the gentleman from Georgia. Now, I say there is another construction of which this amendment is susceptible by which it does not change existing law. The burden of showing that it does so rests upon the gentleman who The burden of snowing that it does so rests upon the gentleman who makes the point. I submit that the Chair may entertain this amendment under the provision of section 4004. Whether it is a sensible amendment or whether it will do any good, is not a question with which the Chair is to be troubled at the present time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. If he invokes in support of the amendment section 4004 which has reliation to the amendment section 4004 which has reliation.

to postal cars, can the amendment be in order now, the provision in regard to postal cars being in another part of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. My friend is always anticipating trouble in some lines ahead.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend is trying to run away from the point. Mr. ROBINSON. Not at all. If the gentleman will stick by me we will anchor on solid ground.

The point is simply whether this amendment is in order. My friend concedes that it is if it does not change existing law. Does it do this? If so, how? What law does it change? He says it allows an increase of compensation to the railroad companies. I ask how? Why, he answers, under section 4002 the companies are limited to a certain amount by weight. But I refer him to section 4004, under which the companies may have an allowance of pay in another form.

Therefore the law is not changed by the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will add but a word. I have cited the law applicable to the amendment. The paragraph now under consideration in this bill makes appropriation for the transportation of the mails by weight; therefore I have not read the law in relation to postal cars, for I did not consider that it had any relation at all to this question, as another portion of the bill provides for compensation for postal cars. There are two modes of compensation according to the gentleman's own statement—one by weight of the mails, the other by car space. But this proposition contemplates compensation, not by either of these modes, but for additional facilities, which, as the gentleman from Kentucky has suggested, may be extra trains, increased speed, or anything of that kind.

Mr. ROBINSON. Let me correct the gentleman from Georgia. The language of the amendment is not "additional facilities;" it is "special and necessary facilities."

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, "special and necessary facilities."

Mr. ROBINSON. I hold the gentleman down to the language of section 4004, which allows additional expenditures even under the present law; therefore the amendment does not propose to change existing law. weight; therefore I have not read the law in relation to postal cars, existing law.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the gentleman would look at the law, he would see that he is not holding himself down to its language, or he could not make the argument he is making.

Mr. ROBINSON. Well, the only refreshing thing about this matter is to be told, after we have expressed our feeble ideas as best we can that we do not know anything about the whiter.

can, that we do not know anything about the subject.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I take back what I have said.

The CHAIRMAN. This question is by no means free from difficulty. The chief difficulty, however, in the mind of the Chair, arises from the fact that the amendment itself is not very clear and explicit in its terms. It reads as follows:

Of which sum $150,000 may be used by the Postmaster-General to maintain and secure from railroads necessary and special facilities for the postal service, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881.

Now, the Revised Statutes allow the Postmaster-General to contract with railroad companies for carrying the mails only upon certain terms; that is, for compensation according to the weight of matter carried, having regard to a due rate of speed. If the Chair could be advised as to what construction the Post-Office Department has put upon this proposed amendment as it now stands in the appropriathe appropriation act for the present fiscal year, that information might be of very great assistance to him in deciding this question of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Chair can obtain that information from the report of the Department.

Mr. HAWLEY. Here is a list of all expenditures under that head

The CHAIRMAN. In the case supposed by the gentleman from Connecticut, [Mr. HAWLEY,] if that were the whole extent to which the amendment would authorize the Department to go, it would not be a change of existing law. But according to the best view which the Chair can take of the subject, after listening to the discussion, the effect of the amendment would be to enable the Postmaster-General to we for a convinct to making the mediant to the chair can take of the subject, after listening to the discussion, the effect of the amendment would be to enable the Postmaster-General to we for a convinct to making the mediant to the chair can be considered to the contract the mediant to the chair can be subject. eral to pay for carrying the mails upon railroads at greater rates than those fixed in the Revised Statutes, for the purpose of securing greater speed. If this be the true construction of the amendment—if, in other words, the amendment would authorize, as the Chair is inclined to think it would, the Post-Office Department to make arrangements for fast mails, and in order to secure these fast mails to pay more than the rates specified in the statute, it would certainly change existing law. The Chair is inclined to believe that this is the proper construction to be put upon the amendment, and therefore, in his opinion, it changes existing law, and is out of order.

Mr. DUNNELL. I submit the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 61, the word "five" and insert "eight;" so that if adopted the amendment will read, "$9,800,000."

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Chairman, I am satisfied that the Committee on Appropriations desire to appropriate a sufficient sum of money for all branches of the postal service, and I am very well satisfied that the estimates of the Department calling for $10,000,000 for railway mail service for the next fiscal year are not too high, and that when the committee cut that down from ten million dollars to nine millions and a half they made a mistake. I do not believe that the House thoroughly accepts the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky having this bill in charge, because in his statement which he has just made he simply bases the conclusions upon the first and second quarters of the present fiscal year.

Living in a State where five hundred, six hundred, or seven hundred miles of railroad were built during the last year I know very well that for many weeks, and in fact for many months, mail service was not put upon the new roads, because there was a deficiency, and there is a deficiency existing to-day in the appropriations of last year. on Appropriations desire to appropriate a sufficient sum of money for there is a deficiency existing to-day in the appropriations of last year. I understand that there are now many miles of road, running up into thousands of miles, upon which service has not yet been put, simply because the Department has not the money.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we may reasonably expect that during the Now, Mr. Chairman, we may reasonably expect that during the coming fiscal year there will be a very large increase in railway construction in the United States. Already in the newer States and in the Territories preparations are being made on an extensive scale for a very large increase in railway construction, and I venture the assertion that the $10,000,000 asked for by the Department would no more than meet the demand for the next year. In this especial branch of the service there is no risk in appropriating a larger sum. If the service be put, and as soon as may be, on all of the roads, inasmuch as the rate of compensation is fixed by law, there can be no loss to the Government by appropriating a sum of money fully equal to the possible ernment by appropriating a sum of money fully equal to the possible contingencies of the year.

I need not expatiate or talk at length about the mail service of this I need not expatiate or talk at length about the mail service of this country, whether it be the railway mail service or the star-route service. The people of this country demand first-rate mail facilities, no matter how it may be carried, whether it be carried by rail or on horseback; but they want mail North, South, East, or West, wherever they may live, and they want mails whenever a railroad has been constructed through any portion of the country. It is a constantly growing service, and as the increase of railroads extends the facilities for distributing the mails there will be a constantly ingressing defor distributing the mails there will be a constantly increasing demand for the service. This, too, Mr. Chairman, ought to be remembered: that when a railroad is built in any one of the States, from the moment it starts a large number of star routes drop out and thus all the money, or a large portion of it, that is expended in the railroad mail transportation is saved by the decrease in the star-route service. Instances of this have come within my own observation. There was a railroad built by private subscription through two of the largest counties in my State, and though many months elapsed before service was put on it, yet the star routes connected with that railway were discontinued before service was put on it. I am satisfied if the House shall increase the appropriation no more than I have indicated by the amendment, that we will not give one dollar beyond the demands of the next fiscal year to meet the necessities of this service; and I hope the gentleman from Kentucky, if he has listened to my argument, if, indeed, it can be called an argument, will give some reason why the committee has fallen short a half million of dollars of the amount estimated by the Department.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. Chairman, I have tried to listen to the gentleman's argument, as he demonstrates it, and I have discovered nothing in it except a criticism unwarranted by the semblance of a fact. I stated to this committee that according to the estimates of the Post-Office Department less than four days old, made up to this date and now in my hand, it had used for the quarter of the current fiscal year out of the appropriation of $9,150,000—

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question ?

Mr. BLACKBURN. When I am through; the gentleman has had his time

Mr. DUNNELL. Well, the gentleman is making an "argument;" I did not. Therefore I simply wanted to ask his attention to a ques-

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not replying to the gentleman from Minnesota or to his argument, but am restating, for the information of the committee and of the House, what the gentleman from Minnesota himself appears to have heard so badly in reference to the amounts expended up to this time for this railway service.

I have stated that $9,150,000 had been appropriated for the present fiscal year. If the Committee on Appropriations have not been liberal in this matter, if they have not in the bill here made ample provision for the railway mail service of the country for the next fiscal year, and even gone beyond that and made a reasonable, I may say liberal, margin for the increase of that service, I hope the House will override the action of the committee and increase the amount appropriated or recommended by the Committee on Appropriations. But I do not think, sir, that any person who has listened to the statement which I made and the figures which I quoted would make any such an assertion. I may say that it was almost unanimously agreed upon in the Committee on Appropriations to reduce the amount astimated by the Committee on Appropriations to reduce the amount estimated by the Department from ten millions to nine millions instead of to nine and a half millions, but it was suggested that a liberal margin should be left to meet the increase of the railway mail service for the next fiscal year, and a half million dollars was put in for that purpose. Looking at the figures, it is estimated that there are to be six thousand miles of additional railway mail service to be provided for in the next fiscal year. That is the estimate. During the present fiscal year we know that there have been four thousand miles increased. Now, for the first quarter of the present fiscal year, that is the quarter ending September 30, 1879, out of this $9,150,000 the sum of $1,944,000 in round numbers was expended. For the second quarter of this current fiscal year, ending December 31,1879, and which is the last given by the present was reliable to the increased reliable to the amount expended out ment under the increased railway service, the amount expended out of the appropriations was $2,082,000, in round numbers, showing an increase between those two quarters of the difference between $1,944,000 crease between those two quarters of the difference between $1,944,000 and $2,082,000; $138,000 was the increase in round numbers of the second quarter of the present fiscal year over the first quarter. But for the whole first half of the present fiscal year this service only cost $4,027,592.07, leaving of the sum appropriated, which was $9,150,000, an amount of $5,122,407.93 for the last half of the year, as against $4,027,000 for the first half.

Now, sir, what do we do? There you have the amount left for the last half of the year, exceeding the amount expended in the first half by $1,120,000, as a margin for increase; and this bill supplements that last hair or the year, exceeding the amount expended in the first hair by $1,120,000, as a margin for increase; and this bill supplements that margin of increase by $500,000. If that is not margin enough, then the calculations made by the Post-Office Department are all at fault. If, indeed, six thousand miles of additional railway mail service are what we have to make allowance for, there is this provision made for it. You never had but $9,150,000 for this purpose before.

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BLACKBURN. Yes, sir.
Mr. DUNNELL. The estimates are for $10,000,000. Let me ask the gentleman if the Post-Office Department through any of its officers has come to the committee and asked this reduction of amount?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I presume not; but I will go a little further Mr. BLACKBURN. I presume not; but I will go a little further in answer to the gentleman's question and say I am equally ignorant of such a question having ever been submitted to the Department or any of its officials by any member of the committee. But I will say further that the sub-committee having charge of this bill believed that nine millions, the amount appropriated for the present year, left a margin large enough. But upon a careful revision of the estimates and a calculation of the percentages of increase they determined from abundant caution to give $500,000 more.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HUNTON. I should like to have the amendment again reported.

The amendment was again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. BLOUNT. Directing my attention to what has fallen from the lips of the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] I will state that the Book of Estimates for the year 1879 called for $10,140,126. The appropriations for that year, the Committee on Appropriations reducing the estimates, were $9,100,000. That was the appropriation for the last fiscal year. The expenditures for that year were $9,100,706. The appropriations were exceeded by the expenditures $700. There was this element of reduction, however; we decreased by law the compensation of the railroads 5 per cent., which it was estimated would amount to about $350,000 for that year; so that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] will see how very far the estimates were beyond the actual expenditures—nearly $1,000,000; and with that 5 per cent. off, over $600,000.

The gentleman from Minnesota refers to the expenditures to come as exceeding those in the two first quarters of the current year. If

The gentleman from Minnesota refers to the expenditures to come as exceeding those in the two first quarters of the current year. If he will examine the Report of the Postmaster-General for the last fiscal year he will find the first and second quarters were the most expensive; that they were more expensive than the last two quarters, and I think it may be stated as a general proposition that the first two quarters are the two which are most expensive.

My friend from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] has already stated to the committee the cost of the service during the first two quarters of this year. He has also stated that we have allowed for increased service fully up to what the Department estimate, looking well to the great increase in the railway facilities which have been especially great in the section of country of my friend from Minnesota. I say the Committee on Appropriations have given full force to all the Department have suggested about that, and that, looking to the decreased per cent. as compared with other years for the compensation of railroads, they have allowed ample margin for all the wants of the service.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] to an error that I think he has made, or rather perhaps a fact that he has failed to note. The current fiscal year is the first time that there ever have been two items in this appropriation; the first item, transportation by railroad routes; the second item, railway post-office car service. The two were formerly appropriated for together. But for the current year the appropriation for one was $9,150,000 and for the other $1,250,000. This year we recommend $9,500,000 for railroad transportation, and also recommend $1,350,000 for car space; making together in fact, $10,850,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. Do I understand the gentleman to say that prior to this year these two items were embraced in one?

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. Yes; these two items were in one; so

Mr. CANNON, of limbors. Tes; these two items were in one; so that in fact I think we are giving as much as the service demands.

Mr. BUCKNER. It is very evident that this appropriation is extra liberal to the Department, in view of the fact stated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that the latter appropriation for transportation by postal cars was formerly included in the appropriation we are now making. ation we are now making.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois.

Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCKNER. Now whatever increase may take place in the railway service of this country there is no doubt that there should be

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. We do deduct half a million.
Mr. BUCKNER. Yes; but you do not decrease it enough according to the figures. If these statements are true, and they are verified by the reports from the Treasury Department as to the amount that has already been expended within the first two quarters—

Mr. DUNNELL. Will the gentleman from Missouri admit for a moment that in arguing what may be needed in the next fiscal year from what has been expended in part of the present year he is liable to err very much in his conclusions?

Mr. BUCKNER. It is just as much an error on the part of my friend

Mr. BUČKNER. It is just as much an error on the part of my friend to suppose there is anything in the idea of this magnificent increase for the next year over and above what it was last year or what it was this year. But I make all due allowance for that. It will be found that, allowing the same rate of increase for the third and fourth quarters of this year which the papers show took place in the first and second quarters, which is $148,000, there is proposed to be appropriated a larger sum than will be consumed, unless the gentleman knows there will be a deficiency, and there is no evidence of that sort before the Committee on Appropriations. If you allow the same rate of increase for the third and fourth quarters, you will have the sum of $8,635,000, as against $9,800,000 which the gentleman asks for now. I think the appropriation should be reduced to $9,300,000, and that that will be ample and sufficient for all contingencies that can arise.

I think the appropriation should be reduced to $9,300,000, and that that will be ample and sufficient for all contingencies that can arise.

Mr. CHALMERS. I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL,] for the reason that there is no branch of the service for which this House should make more liberal appropriations than for the mail service of the country. It is the great educator of the country; it furnishes the people with newspapers and letters, and supplies such facilities to the great tide of emigration in this country.

I think it is a small matter for this great American Congress to sit I think it is a small matter for this great American Congress to sit here and calculate closely as to figures, when we are called upon to determine how much we will give for the purpose of extending these mail facilities throughout the country. The very argument made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] should lead the House to adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.] The gentleman from Georgia shows that in past years more money has been given for this purpose than was used; he tells us that a larger appropriation was made than the service needed. That very fact, showing the honesty of the Government and of its officials in not misusing, in not squandering, in not wasting this money, is proof that we can trust the Government in this regard.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHALMERS. Certainly.
Mr. BLOUNT. Does not the gentleman know that so far as the compensation of these railroads are concerned it is not a matter of matter of weight?

I know also that unless the compensation of these railroads are concerned it is not a matter of discretion but simply a matter of weight?

Mr. CHALMERS. I know that, and I know also that unless the weight is there the money will not be spent. That makes it still more safe to place the money in the hands of the Postmaster-General. The argument of the gentleman cuts away his position, not mine.

If there is more weight than the appropriation will pay for, there will be necessarily a deficiency; for the law requires that the compensation shall be made at a given rate. If there is more money voted than is necessary, it will not be expended. If there is less money appropriated than is necessary under the law, there will be a deficiency.

appropriated than is necessary and ciency.

I think we can well trust the Department in this matter, because the gentleman himself has shown that it is worthy to be trusted, in that it has not heretofore wasted the money given it. I shall therefore vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. DUNNELL.]

Mr. BLACKBURN. As it is not likely that we can get a vote this afternoon, I will move that the committee now rise.

Many Members. "Vote!" "Vote!"

Mr. BLACKBURN. Very well; I will withdraw that motion until the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] has been voted on.

The question was taken on the amendment; and upon a division

there were—ayes 69, noes 54.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. A vote can be taken upon the amendment in the House

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am not desirous of prolonging the session of the committee this afternoon; but I cannot submit to this amend-ment being adopted without a vote by tellers. Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. DUNNELL were

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 77, noes 57.

Mr. BLACKBURN. As this amendment involves an appropriation of $300,000, I must raise the point of order that no quorum has voted upon it. Leaving the amendment undisposed of, I will move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Carlisle reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H.R. No. 6036) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the rules be suspended and Saturday, the 15th instant, after the reading of the Journal, be set apart for the consideration of bills reported from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds authorizing the erection of public buildings, to be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and to be taken up in their order on the Calendar, and to require a two-thirds vote to pass

The SPEAKER. This resolution requires unanimous consent.
Mr. BRAGG. I object.
Mr. MILLS. I thought the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] was going to move on Monday to suspend the rules so as to give us a chance to vote on that resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. I could not get the floor yesterday for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state in justice to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] that he did apply yesterday to the Chair to be recognized for this purpose, but motions to suspend the rules were not reached at all on that day.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WELLS. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 4212. making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1881, returned from the Senate with amendments, be now taken from the Speaker's table. There was no objection, and the bill, with the Senate amendments, was taken from the Speaker's table.

Mr. WELLS. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to this bill, which amendments have been insisted upon by the Senate; and that the conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, which has been requested by the Senate, be granted by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment as the conferees on the part of the House of Mr. Wells, Mr. Singleton of Mississippi, and Mr. Hubbell.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, if there be no objection, will lay before the House certain executive communications for reference. There was no objection.

PURCHASE OF CLOTHING, ETC., FROM SOLDIERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, recommending legislation for preventing purchases of clothing or accounterments from soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

TENTS, ETC., ISSUED TO CIVIL SOCIETIES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to the cost of issuing tents, &c., to civil societies; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

HEIRS OF JUAN READ.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Chief of Engineers, recommending an amendment to House bill No. 5545 for the relief of Juan Read; which was referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

RETIRED LIST OF THE ARMY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of War, relative to certain remarks of Hon. Mr. Atherton, in the House of Representatives, relative to delay in answering a resolution of inquiry as to the retired list of the Army; which was laid on the table, and, on motion of Mr. Conger, ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD MAIL SERVICE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Post-master-General, relative to special mail service on railroads; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LAWS OF WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also presents a copy of the laws enacted by the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory in 1879, transmitted to the House of Representatives in pursuance of law; which, if there be no objection, will be laid on the table.

Mr. CONGER. They should be referred to the Committee on the Indiana.

Judiciary.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks these territorial laws usually go into the House Library.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that in this case any of the laws need to be approved by Congress; but some of the territorial laws require such approval.

need to be approved by Congress; but some of the territorial laws require such approval.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman move the reference to the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. MAGINNIS. Under the new rules the Committee on Territories have charge of the revision of territorial legislation.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] to say that these laws must be approved? As the Chair recollects the law, they stand unless disapproved.

Mr. CONGER. As to some of the Territories—I think not this particular Territory—the laws require approval. Legislation of the Territory of Utah I know requires positive action to give it effect.

The SPEAKER. These are the laws of Washington Territory.

Mr. MAGINNIS. The new rules provide that "territorial legislation or the revision thereof" shall be referred to the Committee on Territories. Territories

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Montana [Mr. Maginnis] will please state whether or not it is the law that these territorial enactments stand unless Congress should disapprove them?

mr. MAGINNIS. Certainly they do.

The SPEAKER. That was the recollection of the Chair. To which committee does the House desire to refer these laws? The gentleman from Michigan has indicated the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MAGINNIS. I do not care about the reference; but I wanted to correct the supposition that such subjects go properly to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONGER. I do not, as to this Territory, care for any reference; as to some other of the Territories I should.

The SPEAKER. These laws will be laid on the table, and, as the Chair supposes, will at the end of the session go into the House Library.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows: To Mr. HURD, until next Monday, on account of important busi-

To Mr. Finley, for ten days, on account of important business;
To Mr. Robeson, indefinitely;
To Mr. Ryan, of Kansas, for four days, on account of the death of a member of his family;
To Mr. Fernando Wood, from the night sessions for this month;

To Mr. URNER, for three weeks, on account of important business.

DONATION OF LANDS FOR HOSPITAL PURPOSES.

Mr. BELFORD introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6062) donating certain lands in Lake County, Colorado, to the Veteran Union Association of Leadville for hospital and burial purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

SAMUEL POLLOCK.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Ohio, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6063) for the relief of Samuel Pollock; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. UPSON. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at four o'clock and fifty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

Judiciary.

Mr. CONKLING. I present also a petition signed by a large number of citizens of the State of New York, consumers of salt, asking that the duty on foreign salt, salt being a prime necessity, be removed. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 83) for the relief of Nicholas White, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 445) for the relief of Joseph B. Campbell, reported it with a manufacture of the property of the proper ported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMERON, of Pennsylvania. I report, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, the petition of William Collins, of Waldo, Maine, praying payment of certain moneys alleged to be due him as bounty for services of the schooner Sarah Franklin, employed in cod fishery in the year 1866. This petition was first referred to the Committee on Commerce, and then transferred to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The Committee on Naval Affairs desire to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims mittee on Claims.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George E. Payne, of Saint Charles Parish, Louisiana, praying compensation for the seizure, use, and occupation of his sugar plantation by the officers of the Government, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1720) to refer the claim of George E. Payne to the Court of Claims.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1599) for the relief of Dr. A. Sidney Tebbs, reported it without amendment.

ABRIDGMENT OR DENIAL OF SUFFRAGE.

Mr. WALLACE, from the select committee to inquire into alleged frauds in the late elections, and who were also directed to inquire and report to the Senate concerning the denial or abridgment of the right of suffrage to citizens of the United States, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1721) to enforce the provisions of section 2 of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The bill was read twice by its title, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WALLACE. I also move that the testimony taken by that committee be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to give notice that on the matter reported from the select committee to inquire into alleged frauds in the late elections there will be a minority report submitted as soon as there shall be time to prepare it.

Mr. WALLACE. I present, in accordance with the request of certain citizens of Rhode Island, sundry petitions to the Senate praying for relief from the rule of suffrage imposed in that State. I move their reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. BOOTH. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back the bill (H. R. No. 4227) for the relief of settlers on public lands, with the recommendation that it pass with an amendment. I am directed also by the committee to ask for the present consideration of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides in the first section that when a pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture claimant shall file a written relinquishment of his claim in the local land office, the land covered by such claim shall be held as open to settlement and entry without further action on the part of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

The second section provides that in all cases where any person has contested, paid the land-office fees, and procured the cancellation of any pre-emption, homestead, or timber-culture entry, he shall be notified by the register of the land office of the district in which such land is situated of such cancellation, and shall be allowed thirty days from the date of such notice to enter the lands. The register shall be entitled to a fee of one dollar for the giving of such notice, to be paid by the contestant, and not to be reported.

The amendment reported from the Committee on Public Lands was to add as a new section:

SEC. 3. That any settler who has settled, or who shall hereafter settle, on any of the public lands of the United States, whether surveyed or unsurveyed, with the intention of claiming the same under the homestead laws, shall be allowed the same time to file his homestead application, and perfect his original entry in the United States land office as is now aflowed to settlers under the pre-emption laws to put their claims on record, and his right shall relate back to the date of settlement, the same as if he settled under the pre-emption laws.

The amendment was agreed to.
The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1722) for the relief of the heirs of Edward B. Clark; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BOOTH asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1723) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue an American register to the bark Annie Johnson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT ON ALASKA.

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to forward to the Senate the reports of Captain John W. White of the United States revenue service, made while that officer was on duty in the waters of the Territory of Alaska; and also copies of all papers relating to the transfer of the jurisdiction over the Territory of Alaska from the War to the Treasury Department.

BEN HOLLADAY.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. I gave notice yesterday that after the routine business of the morning hour had been gone through with to-day I should move to take up the Holladay claim, but at the solicitation of various Senators about me who desire to go on with the Calendar, I shall not make that motion this morning.

SETTLEMENT OF PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it does any good, I wish to give notice that to-morrow morning and every other morning after the routine business, I shall move, or try to move, to take up Senate bill No. 818, reported from the Committee on Private Land Claims, to adjust and settle private land claims in New Mexico and Arizona, &c., which is quite important both to public and private interests; and I hope it will not take long to dispose of it.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was Ordered, That Martin V. Jackson have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4812) to amend the laws in relation to internal revenue; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its disagreement to certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 4212) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes; it agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon and had appointed M. agreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. Erastus Wells of Missouri, Mr. O. R. Singleton of Mississippi, and Mr. J. A. HUBBELL of Michigan, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

THE FORT LOGAN RESERVATION.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask the Senate, owing to the peculiar circumstances of the case, to take up now the bill (H. R. No. 5894) to authorize the sale of Fort Logan, Montana Territory, and to establish a new post on the frontier. It is a House bill reported favorably by the Military Committee. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] who is now in his seat, I observe, submitted the report, and I think he will be able to state that this is a measure which should pass immediately.

will be able to state that this is a measure which should pass himse diately.

Mr. MAXEY. The report was made by the unanimous direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, and shows on its face that the Secretary of War regarded it as a matter of pressing necessity. The report is very short and can be read. I think myself that the bill ought to be passed, and is a very proper measure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which empowers the Secretary of War to establish a new military post at or near the Mussel Shell River, in the Territory of Montana, as he may deem best for the protection of the frontier from Indian incursions—the total cost not to exceed $50,000. It also directs the Secretary of War, after due notice, to sell $50,000. It also directs the Secretary of War, after due notice, to sell at public auction or otherwise dispose of, as he may deem most advantageous to the Government, the site, reservations, and buildings of Fort Logan, Montana Territory, and reinvest the proceeds of such sale in the erection of the post authorized by the previous section. Such portion of the buildings, or of the materials thereof, as can be profitably removed to the new post, may be reserved from sale and

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. MAXEY April 27, 1880:

April 27, 1880:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. No. 5894) to authorize the sale of Fort Logan, Montana Territory, and to establish a new post on the frontier, respectfully submits the following report:

This bill passed the House of Representatives April 20, 1880.

The facts are presented in the report of the Committee on Military Affairs of the House, which is hereby adopted, and is as follows:

"The Committee on Military Affairs beg leave to report that Fort Logan, when established, was on the frontier, but that the settlements have outgrown it, and the post needs to be moved out about a hundred miles on the present frontier, which is now the scene of continued Indian raids and conflicts.

"It is thought that sufficient money can be obtained by the sale of the old post to establish the new one.

"The troops now have to be sent continually to the front, and their transportation back and forth is expensive, and their service is much more unsatisfactory than if stationed where needed. The military authorities have repeatedly urged this change, and present exigencies make it immediately necessary. The accompanying letter of the Secretary of War, and the indorsements of General Terry and General Sherman, having been referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, that committee have prepared this bill. In view of the pressing necessity of the case, on account of recent and threatened conflicts, and the approach of the season whem war parties of Indians can make their raids with the greatest impunity, the committee unanimously recommend that the rules be suspended and the bill passed."

Wherefore the committee reports back House bill No. 5894 without amendment, and recommends its passage.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the area of this reservation? Where is it

Mr. INGALLS. What is the area of this reservation? Where is it

Mr. MAXEY. In Montana Territory.
Mr. INGALLS. What is the area of the reservation?
Mr. MAXEY. I cannot reply to the Senator on that point. As the

Mr. MAXEY. I cannot reply to the Senator on that point. As the Senator well knows, all these reservations in the Territories are very large, ordinarily about a thousand acres. I had a list of some forty or forty-one of them, and that is about the general average.

Mr. INGALLS. I observe that this bill is a departure from the bills usually passed on subjects of this kind in that it provides that the Secretary of War shall sell the reservation, with the buildings and other improvements, at public auction. It has been customary when reservations have been relinquished to allow them to be disposed of under the provisions of the general land laws to actual settlers. If this is the provisions of the general land laws to actual settlers. If this is, as I suppose it to be, a very large reservation, serious inconvenience might result and wrong might be done to those who would like to obtain the right to settle on the lands now in the reservation.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator will observe that the bill provides that such portion of the buildings or of the materials as may be profitably removed to the new post may be reserved from sale and removed. Whatever can be used in the erection of a new post will not be sold.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that I heard the Senator from Texas in reply to the Senator from Kansas state the size of this reservation, the number of acres embraced in it.

Mr. INGALLS. He said he did not know.

Mr. MAXEY. I did not reply because I did not remember. I stated in general terms that the military reservations in all the Territories are ordinarily large. I had a list the other day of some forty or forty-one furnished me by the Secretary of War, and the general average was about a thousand acres. There are some more than that. amount in the Fort Logan reservation I do not know. sider it important to inquire, because the reservation is no longer of sider it important to inquire, because the reservation is no longer of service, the settlement having passed about a hundred miles beyond it, or considerably beyond it, and I see no reason why it should not be sold for the public good.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the Senator is entirely right about that on his statement that the frontier has gone beyond the place.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg the Senator to pay attention to the report which I made on that point. He will find in the first paragraph of the report that "the settlements have outgrown it and the post needs to be moved out about a hundred miles on the present frontier." That is the reason for it. The post is no longer of service because the settlements have gone beyond it.

ments have gone beyond it.

Mr. INGALLS. My recollection about military reservations is that they are usually several miles in extent. This may be an exception, and as the Senator says may not comprise over a thousand acres, but if it is anything like the average of western military reservations, it if it is anything like the average of western military reservations, it is a good many miles in extent.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator will pardon me, I did not state that it did not contain over a thousand acres; I stated that I did not know; but I had a list of forty or forty-one that the Secretary furnished me, and the general average was about a thousand acres. It was a conjecture that this is like the rest of the reservations out there. Whatever the amount is, however, it is not necessary for military purposes, and therefore it seems to me it should be sold and the proceeds used for other purposes.

for other purposes.

Mr. INGALLS. I think so too, but I think there ought to be some limitation as to the mode of sale.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If this be a large reservation, as I suppose it is, to sell it in block altogether might be injurious to the local public interests and possibly to the Treasury; and therefore I wish to propose an amendment that will authorize the Secretary of War to sell it is passed if the public interests will be better advanced in that way. it in parcels if the public interests will be better advanced in that way, and to that I presume the Senator from Texas would have no objection.

Mr. MAXEY. I have no objection to the Senator from Vermont amending the bill in any way whatever to protect the Government. I am as much in favor of that as he is. I only think generally that after the Government has used a reservation until it has no further use for it, the best thing that can be done is to sell it and use the use for it, the best thing that can be done is to sell it and use the money for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Undoubtedly.

Mr. MAXEY. Whatever course the Senator thinks is best to accomplish that object, I am perfectly willing to accept.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely submitted it to my friend from Texas in charge of the bill, whether it would not be wise to authorize the Secretary to sell this in parcels, if he thinks that is the best way. I think the present construction of the bill would be that he would have to sell it in block.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill authorizes the Secretary of Way (14).

sell it in block.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill authorizes the Secretary of War "to sell at public auction or otherwise dispose of, as he may deem most advantageous to the Government, the site, reservations, and buildings of Fort Logan." It occurred to me, this bill having been drawn by the Committee on Military Affairs in the House, that it was drawn perhaps upon a frame furnished by the Secretary of War and to meet his views. I do not know that to be true, but I know that is the rule with us in our committee. The bill gives to the Secretary of War the power to sell in such manner as he may deem most advantageous. From the opinion I have of the Secretary of War I am perfectly willing to leave it to his discretion and judgment, he being a sensible and ing to leave it to his discretion and judgment, he being a sensible and honest man, to sell it to the best advantage to the Government, as the bill directs

Mr. EDMUNDS. But I am not able to construe the bill as my friend from Texas does on the precise point about which I am speak ing. He is "to sell at public auction or otherwise dispose of, as he ing. He is "to sell at public auction or otherwise dispose of, as he may deem most advantageous to the Government, the site, reservations," &c. I think the words "otherwise dispose of" there refer merely to a distinction between the mode of selling by public auction and the mode of selling by private sale. In order, therefore, to make it clear that he would have a right to cut it up into parcels and sell it to villagers or settlers, an amendment should be made.

Mr. MAXEY. I place this construction upon that language, (perhaps I am entirely wrong,) that the Secretary of War is to sell at public auction or otherwise, that is, at private sale, in such manner as he may deem most advantageous. Now, if he deems it most advantageous to sell in block it will be sold in block; if he deems it most advantageous to sell at public outery it will be done, or if at private sale vantageous to sell at public outcry it will be done, or if at private sale that may be done. That occurs to me as the construction, although I may be entirely wrong.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think my friend on reflection will see in a mo-

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think my friend on reflection will see in a moment that in point of legal construction the words "most advantageous" refer merely to the method of sale, whether at public auction or some other mode of sale. I think that is the legal and grammatical construction. At any rate, to save all possible question, I move to amend the bill by inserting after the words "dispose of," in the third line of section 2, the words "in parcels or otherwise," so as to leave him with a clear right.

Mr. MAXEY. I have no objection whatever to perfecting the bill in that way in that way.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THURMAN. Who is authorized to sell the reservation?
Mr. EDMUNDS. The Secretary of War.
Mr. THURMAN. If the reservation is to be abandoned, why should it not be turned over into the body of the public lands and disposed of by the Land Office?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Because the reservation has got more value than the ordinary public lands; and to permit homestead rights, which are in large part frauds now, I am told, and dollar-and-a-quarter per acre rights to apply here would be unjust to the Treasury. We can get much more for such a reservation usually. I do not know that it applies to this case, but usually that is the case.

Mr. THURMAN. Suppose that is so, and that the reservation ought not to be subject to homestead entry, why should not this reservation be turned over to that Department of the Government which has charge of the public lands? If this tract is to be surveyed and is to charge of the public lands? If this tract is to be surveyed and is to be disposed of in any different way than public lands generally, let it be so provided; but why should the disposition of the public lands be left to the Secretary of War? We have a land system, and it is all under one Department. Why should not this reservation, if we abandon it for military purposes, become a part of the public lands, and under charge of the public land Department?

Mr. MAXEY. I think if the Senator will look at the frame-work of the bill he will see the reason why. The object is to raise money out of this military reservation, which is now of no use for military purposes, to pay for the erection of a new post. If that can be done, it saves that much out of the general Treasury. The Secretary of War is authorized to sell this at whatever amount he can obtain, and it is believed a sufficient amount can be realized out of the sale of the reservation to build a new post. If that can be done it certainly will be an honorable business transaction.

Mr. THURMAN. That does not save the Treasury of the United States anything, and makes the proposition obnoxious to another objection; and that is, that you are expending money without appropriating it. You do not know how much you are appropriating for this new post when you simply allow the proceeds of the old reservation to be applied to the new.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There is a limitation.

Mr. MAXEY. There is a limitation of $50,000.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Ohio will permit me to call his attention to the proviso in the bill, which is as follows:

his attention to the proviso in the bill, which is as follows:

The total cost of the same shall not exceed the sum of $50,000.

As I understand it, this military post was located at the mouth of this Mussel Shell River rather as a temporary post, and the circumstances are such as to require its transfer nearer to the present frontier. If the Senator will refer to the report of the House committee, embodied in the Senate report, it will be observed that the recommendation for this removal is made in letters addressed to the House mendation for this removal is made in letters addressed to the House by the Secretary of War with the indorsement of General Terry, the commander of that department, and of General Sherman, the General of the Army. I regret that these letters are not at present in the possession of the Secretary of the Senate, as I think they ought to be accompanying the bill from the House here. These letters I have no doubt would satisfy the Senate positively in regard to all these facts. The purpose is to dispose of the present fort and out of the proceeds to erect a new fort in the new position where it is now required to protect against Indian outrages upon the frontier. To any amendment in regard to the protection of the reservation desired, of course there is no objection. there is no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. George M. Adams, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate of December 16, 1879, to print 3,000 copies of the report of the board to test iron and steel.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6066) appropriating money for the public printing; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following the state of the senate of the senate of the senate.

of our collection of books at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senate grant the request of the Senator from Indiana? The Chairs hears no objection. The Senator

Mr. EDMUNDS. Had not the bill better be reported?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill (S. No. 1117) to provide additional accommodations for the Library of Congress.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, it is impossible to magnify the importance of immediate action looking not merely to the accommodation, but to the preservation of the Library of Congress. We have reached a point where we have no choice on this subject. Our duty is importative as the guardians of public property, and we cannot avis imperative as the guardians of public property, and we cannot ex-cuse ourselves or be excused by the country if we delay the discharge of that duty any longer. There has been much talk here and elsewhere on this subject, but my desire now is to impress upon the minds of Senators the fact that prompt and decided action is an

minds of Senators the fact that prompt and decided action is an absolute necessity.

The present condition of the Congressional Library is a reproach and a shame to this Government. But for the services of an exceptionally able and accomplished Librarian its utility as a place of resort for information would be almost wholly destroyed. It contains now 375,000 volumes of books, with shelf room for 280,000 volumes, leaving 95,000 volumes to be piled in heaps on the floor and in the alcoves, or packed on the shelves behind the others. The principal value of a library consists in the readiness with which you can find what you want. In the Library of Congress, however, at this time, every fourth book is denied a place on a shelf and has to be sought for on the floor, or in some nook or corner or hidden place. When we reflect that the call for books on the part of those who are entitled to their use is incessant, we may form some conception of the perpetual overhauling going on from day to day among the contents of that Library. Books are damaged and worn out by this condition of things.

In addition to the books in the Library there are 120,000 pamphlets for which no other provision can be made than to cord them up together in an almost inaccessible condition. Nor is there any room whatever for filing the periodicals or the newspapers of the day. There are more than six thousand bound volumes of newspapers in the Library, embracing more than a century of American history; also, complete sets of the London Times since 1796, of the London Gazette since 1665, of the Moniteur Universel since 1789, and of nearly all the English and American reviews and magazines. Two newspapers from each State, representing both political parties, have also been taken for many years, and kept for reference. All this great mass of valuable matter has no place at all provided for it, and has to take its chance for an obscure and inconvenient lodgment somewhere. It is mostly packed together like dry goods in a crowded store, one piece on to has to take its chance for an obscure and inconvenient lodgment somewhere. It is mostly packed together like dry goods in a crowded store, one piece on top of another. There was yet another collection which strongly attracted my attention on a recent occasion. In a dark room up stairs there is an immense accumulation of maps and charts—chiefly, as I was informed by the Librarian, American—both manuscript and engraved, illustrative of the chartography of our widely extended country in every stage of its development. These splendid maps, thousands in number, are actually inaccessible because there is no space in which to arrange them for use. The officers in charge of the various Government surveys, to whom these maps would furnish most valuable and essential aid, have made strenuous attempts, assisted by the Librarian, to utilize them, but have all failed. They are lying there, a huge fund of knowledge, acquired in that form at great labor and expense, and now of no value whatever to anybody. Their condition is more that of an accumulation of leather, some bound in rolls and some spread out in piles together, than anything bound in rolls and some spread out in piles together, than anything else that now occurs to me. Imagine, if you can, the process of hunting for one of these maps or charts if some committee of Congress or some Senator or Member should be seized with a sudden curiosity to examine it! It simply could not be had, and the applicant would have to go elsewhere or do without the desired information.

Not only the resembless of the Library but the propriety of its business.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 6066) appropriating money for the public printing; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following concurrent resolutions; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A resolution for the printing of 10,000 copies of the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress upon the presentation to the United States by J. Randolph Coolidge and others of the desk upon which Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence; and A resolution for the printing at the Government Printing Office of 5,000 copies each of volumes 4 and 5, Contributions to North American Ethnology, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, and with the necessary illustrations.

ACCOMMODATIONS FOR THE LIBRARY.

Mr. VOORHEES. Some weeks ago I was authorized by the Joint Committee on the Library of Congress to report a bill providing for additional accommodations for the Library. I feel impelled by a high sense of duty to ask the Senate to listen this morning to some reasons why it is now imperatively necessary to take prompt action.

Not only the usefulness of the Library but the propriety of its business details is destroyed by its limited and cramped condition. Thousands of volumes are annually received there from foreign agents of the Library, from the bindery, and from other sources. The smallest town library in the country usually has some place, outside of the Library of Congress. All this vast work, going on almost daily, breaking open boxes and nailing them up, takes place in the public resorting to the Library, and, to use the language of the Library, and to use the language of the Library of congress and almost under the feet of members of Congress and of the work in the from the resort with the Library and to pack and unpack books. Not so with the Library of the Library, and, to use the language of the Library and to pack and unpack books. Not so with the Library of the Lib Not only the usefulness of the Library but the propriety of its busiauthorities could be examined and ample notes taken without any interruption from any source.

Again, the Librarian of Congress, in addition to his other duties, is required by law to preserve the records of copyright and to receive copyright publications for the United States. This of itself is a business of great magnitude and of the highest importance. During the last year there were more than eighteen thousand entries of copyright publications, and for each entry two copies of the publication are required to be deposited in the Library. The money value of the law books alone deposited under this law is estimated at over $8,000 per annum. I am also informed by the Librarian that under this law, during the ten years of its operation, an immense number of prints, during the ten years of its operation, an immense number of prints, engravings, chromos, and photographs, some of them of great size, have been received, and that there is rapidly forming a collection which will make a most instructive gallery of the progress of the arts of design in America. Yet none of these interesting works can be seen by the public. There are not ten feet of space anywhere in which to exhibit them. They are completely hidden from view, piled up with their copyright stamps and numbers until more room is obtained. The entire records of copyright in the United States, from the first enactment of the law in 1790 to this date, comprising the original records of more than forty United States district clerks' offices, as well as those of the Librarian of Congress since 1870, are actually well as those of the Librarian of Congress since 1870, are actually stored away in a dark room, two stories under the Library, where the constant references to them are prosecuted under every conceivable disadvantage and inconvenience. What first-class business house in the world would tolerate such obstructions for a single year or even a month? But there is still another and even a far more pressing cause for amediate action on our part than any I have yet named. There is immediate action on our part than any I have yet named. There is danger every hour of a destructive fire in the Library. It is true that after it was destroyed by fire in 1851, the Library-room "was rebuilt in fire-proof material, the walls, ceiling, and shelving being wholly of cast-iron; the first instance, it is said, of the employment of that material exclusively for the interior of any public edifice in America." There, however, Congress stopped, while the Library has continued to grow. An avalanche of over twenty thousand volumes a year has poured in upon the Librarian, all of which have been provided for somewhere and somehow. In order to accommodate, to some extent at least, this increasing flow of books, and to keep them from absolutely blocking up the passage-ways of the Library-rooms, the Librarian has been compelled to introduce over two hundred wooden cases of shelves into the iron alcoves. The language of the Librarian himself on this point is as follows:

These cases of pine wood may not be immediately dangerous since the heat that warms the Library is brought in steam-pipes for two hundred feet underground from the heating apparatus of the Senate and the House of Representatives. But there is serious risk of fire in the upper loft of the Library, which contains most of the newspapers and documents, and where the great collection of maps are from necessity piled in heaps. This room is full of combustibles, and is detached from the fire-proof or iron-cased apartments of the Library, so that a fire once communicated would sweep shelving, periodicals, maps, and all before it. With incessant watchfulness such a calamity may be averted, but Congress should not suffer such a risk to be run for a day by falling longer to provide adequate and fire-proof accommodations for the great and precious collections of which it is the responsible custodian.

Sir, a fire may break out at any moment in that dark upper loft, where gas has to be lit by the Librarian and his assistants whenever where gas has to be lit by the Librarian and his assistants whenever their duties call them there. The very dust of decomposing paper, and of the friction induced by constant handling may become inflammable. In fact, with all the incessant watchfulness of the officers of the Library there is no safety there at all for the public property under our care. I hope a conflagration here in the Capitol may not be necessary to unite our minds in the discharge of a plain public duty. If such a disaster, however, should befall the country the reduty. If such a disaster, however, should berail the country the Association of the sponsibility must rest upon those, who, knowing the danger, shall hereafter delay the action of Congress upon this subject.

In considering the proper construction of a library building for the future, which I think I have now sufficiently shown must be speedily done, it may not be without profit and interest to look for a few moments at the history of the Library in the past. It has had a most singular and instructive career—a career which should admonish us to build for the centuries, and not merely for the decades, or the generations. It made an humble and modest start, and its progress was slow until within these later days. It is curious now to mark its origin and its various stages. On the 24th day of April, in the year 1800, an act passed Congress, then sitting in Philadelphia, "making provision for the removal of the Government of the United States" to this city, and in that act there was appropriated the sum of $5,000 "for the purchase of such books as may be necessary for the use of Congress at the said city of Washington." This was the beginning of the present splendid Library of Congress. At that time Washington City contained less than five hundred inhabitants, and everything was on a very small scale compared with what came afterward. There was on a very small scale compared with what came afterward. There were not then more than three public libraries in the United States embracing over five thousand volumes. Congress, before it convened in this city, appears to have relied almost entirely on private sources for its works of reference. In December, 1801, a bill was introduced into Congress, which afterward, January 26, 1802, became a law in the form of an act, entitled "An act concerning the Library for the use of both Houses of Congress." It was warmly debated, such men as Mr.

Bayard of Delaware, John Randolph of Virginia, and John Bacon of Massachusetts, taking a leading part in the discussion. Mr. Bayard proposed an appropriation of a thousand dollars a year for the period of ten years for the purchase of books; Mr. Bacon moved to make it ten thousand a year; while it surprises me to find that the scholarly and cultivated Virginian thought they were both extravagant in their notions.

The act as it finally passed made $3,800 available for books; provided for the present joint committee of three Senators and three members of the House; regulated the use of books outside of the Library, and gave the President authority to appoint a Librarian. Until 1815 the Clerks of the House of Representatives were the Librarian. rians of Congress. Since that time there have been but four: George Watterson, appointed by James Madison, served fourteen years; John S. Meehan, appointed by General Jackson, served thirty-two years; John G. Stephenson, appointed by Mr. Lincoln, served three years, and the present incumbent, Ainsworth R. Spofford, appointed by Mr. Lincoln in 1864, having now served about sixteen years. I have said that the early progress of the Library was slow, yet it seems almost incredible that on the 24th of August, 1814, when our British relations visited this Capitol by way of Bladensburgh, they found a library of only three thousand volumes to which to apply their torch of uncivilized, barbarian, vandal warfare. Book-burning and the sacking of libraries have not been esteemed among the graces of varfare between Christian patients but it was peaked. between Christian nations, but it was perhaps for the best that the British forces made a bonfire of what little we had. It illustrated their hatred of a people who had conquered them on the fields of the Revolution, and it also provoked one of the most attractive incidents in the history of the Congressional Library. The very few volumes, as we reckon them now, which had been accumulated in the space of fourteen years, had disappeared in smoke and ashes when Congress convened in special session on the 19th of September, 1814. The Library of Congress had ceased to exist; it was wholly swept away. There was not a book here for public use. It was at this juncture of disaster and discouragement that Thomas Jefferson, whose great name even to this day provokes so much controversy, spoke from his retirement at Monticello in behalf of a better foundation for the Library than it had ever possessed before. He offered his entire collection of books on such terms as Congress itself might determine, a collection which had cost him fifty years to make, in which he had spared neither pains, opportunity, nor expense. Allow me to submit his grand letter to his friend Samuel Harrison Smith on the subject. It may encourage the young men of the present time in their love of libraries, and in their thirst for knowledge. It is as follows:

ent time in their love of libraries, and in their thirst for knowledge. It is as follows:

Dear Sir: I learn from the newspapers that the vandalism of our enemy has triumphed at Washington, over science as well as the arts, by the destruction of the public library, with the noble edifice in which it was deposited. Of this transaction, as of that of Copenhagen, the world will entertain but one sentiment.

I presume it will be among the early objects of Congress to recommence their collection. This will be difficult while the war continues and intercourse with Europe is attended with so much risk. You know my collection, its condition and extent. I have been fifty years making it, and have spared no pains, opportunity, or expense to make it what it now is. While residing in Paris I devoted every afternoon I was disengaged for a summer or two in examining all the principal book stores, turning over every book with my own hands, and putting by everything which related to America, and indeed whatever was rare and valuable in every science; besides this, I had standing orders, during the whole time I was in Europe, in its principal book-marts, particularly Amsterdam, Frankfort, Madrid, and London, for such works relating to America as could not be found in Paris. So that in that department particularly such a collection was made as probably can never again be effected, because it is hardly probable the same opportunities, the same time, industry, perseverance, and expense, with some knowledge of the bibliography of the subject, would again happen to be in concurrence. During the same period, and after my return to America, I was led to procure also whatever related to the duties of those in the highest concerns of the nation; so that the collection which I suppose is of between nine and ten thousand volumes, while it includes what is chiefly valuable in science and literature generally, extends more particularly to whatever belongs to the American statesman; in the diplomatic and parliamentary branches it is particul Accept the assurance of my great esteem and respect.

THOMAS JEFFERSON.

The Senate it seems had no trouble in passing a bill on the 10th of October, 1814, to purchase Jefferson's library. When the question was presented to the House, however, a different scene occurred. There was a hot discussion and a close vote. Some thought the extent of the library was greater than the public wants required; some thought it would cost too much; some thought too many of the books were in foreign languages, and some thought the collection was entirely too philosophical in its character. One gentleman, Mr. King, of Massachusetts, felt impelled to move an amendment "authorizing the Library Committee as soon as said library shall be received at Washington to select therefrom all books of an atheistical, irreligious, and immoral tendency, if any such there be, and send the same back to Mr. Jefferson without any expense to him." This amendment was not adopted, and the bill eventually passed after much controvate by only 10 majority—81 yeas and 71 nays. The House of Representatives at that time seems to have been hard to please, when, without a book in their possession, they had the privilege of purchasing such a library as Jefferson's at their own price and time of payment, acame so near not doing it. This library has been pronounced by competent judges one of the best selections of ancient and modern literature up to the commencement of the present century ever made, and they say that "by no other method than its purchase en bloc could Congress have acquired so valuable and comprehensive a library of reference." It remained three years in the post-office building of this city, then came to the Capitol, and after sojourning in different quarters, finally, in 1824, found its present location. It appears that every time the subject was agitated the Library of Congress gained something, though for a long time not much.

thing, though for a long time not much.

After the purchase of the Library was raised from one thousand to two thousand dollars, at which figure it stood until in 1824, when upon the removal of the Library to its present place the amount was again raised to $5,000 per annum. Something was afterward added for the purchase of law-books, yet a half century after the Library was founded, when the fire took place in 1851, there had been gathered together, all told, only 55,000 volumes, averaging but little over a thousand volumes a year from the beginning. Of this collection, so slowly acquired, the fire from "a defective flue" devoured 35,000 volumes, leaving but 20,000 to again start with. But the fire had awakened Congress from a long drowsy spell, just as a fire in the Library would now disturb the repose of this body. Something really very creditable was done under this fery impulse, and without delay. Congress appropriated $85,000 in one year for the purchase of books, and $72,500 for repairing and restoring the Library room. With what praiseworthy zeal we are prone to act for the prevention of accidents after they have happened! It is the old story, and will be repeated

The next most important events in the history of the Library, showing its growth in the past and its probable developments in the future, were the construction of the two wings in 1865, with room in each for seventy-five thousand volumes, which was almost immediately filled; the acquisition of the great scientific Smithsonian library in 1866; the purchase of the Peter Force historical collection for $100,000 in 1867, and the enactment of the copyright law in 1870. Each one of these events is full of most interesting details, and under different circumstances would be pleasant themes for comment. They are cited now, however, simply to illustrate the quickening influence of the last twenty-five years; to account for the present condition of the Library, and to point out our duty in making provision for the future. In 1864, when Mr. Spofford became the Librarian of Congress, it contained 86,414 volumes. It now contains more than 375,000. He has handed me the following table, which exhibits the progressive growth of the Library each year from 1864, when the annual enumeration of the books was commenced by him:

Year.	Volumes.	Year.	Volumes.
1864	86, 414	1879	246, 345
	92, 450	*1873	258, 752
	99, 650	1874	274, 157
	165, 467	1875	293, 507
	173, 965	1876	311, 097
	185, 227	1877	331, 118
	197, 668	1877	352, 655
	236, 846	1879	374, 022

It will be seen from this table that the Library has been more than quadrupled in the last sixteen years. It is now the tenth collection of books in size in the world. What will it be in the brief space of another sixteen years under our present system of laws for the reception of books and other library matter? Ten years ago there were forty-two European libraries larger than the Congressional Library. In my judgment sixteen years hence it will be the largest in the world, with possibly two exceptions, the National Library, Paris, and the British Museum, London. Considering the constantly increasing activity and power of the intellectual world, the determined spirit of inquiry into every realm, whether of speculation or demonstration, the magical profusion with which the press is flooding all countries with the published thoughts of thinking people, and considering the further fact that under the requirements of the copyright law the Library of Congress is rapidly becoming a complete repository of the entire product of the American press, it is very safe to estimate that in the next sixteen years the contents of the Library will be swollen to six times their present proportions. This will make a collection of about 2,250,000 volumes, a much larger one than now exists anywhere. The National Library, Paris, has now 2,000,000 volumes, the British Museum 1,150,000, and the Imperial Library, Saint Petersburg, 1,100,000. Looking back upon the centuries it has taken them to make these accumulations, it is clear to my mind that they will soon be outstripped by their young rival, the Library of the United States. This will certainly be the case unless we deliberately cripple the growth of an institution which it should be our care and pride to foster and sustain.

But the next question which naturally arises relates to the measures which ought to be taken for the relief of the Library from its present deplorable condition, and for its safety and greatness in the future. It is now between seven and eight years since the Librarian first urged upon Congress the necessity of more room for books. During that time I find that various plans upon the subject have been put forth and discussed. One suggestion is to largely reduce the Library by the sale of duplicate volumes, and to exclude hereafter, by some sort of censorship, much that is now placed there by the law of copyright. Mr. Spofford has stated the objections to this plan so strongly and so well in a private memorandum made for my use that I cannot refrain from submitting it entire. He says:

refrain from submitting it entire. He says:

But this proposition overlooks the facts, first, that the duplicates are mostly of a class absolutely needed for the use and reference of Congress and of the reading public, one copy being kept constantly in while another may be drawn out by those privileged; and, second, that Congress has received the copyright publications as a trust, to be permanently preserved unbroken in the archives of the Government. The Library of Congress has, through the legislation of Congress, become national in its character, and by the legal requirements of the copyright law is becoming a complete repository of the whole product of the American press, so far as secured by copyright. Such a library is not for one generation alone, but its value extends beyond our day, in handing down to successive generations an approximately complete representation of the nation's literature. The American people should rely with confidence upon finding in one great and monumental library, and that belonging to the Government, every book which their country has produced. To reduce or cripple such a collection, so well begun, and now in the full tide of a successful and inexpensive accumulation of those literary stores which can be fully secured in no other way, and which, once lost, could never be reassembled, could not but be looked upon as a narrow and unwise policy, unworthy of a nation claiming to hold a front rank in civilization.

Another method proposed, in order to avoid the construction of new library accommodations, is to store or colonize portions of the books in some other and separate building. The idea of segregating the contents of the Library, and locating them at different points, is worthy only of being stated and not of being discussed. And this brings us to the last and only practical plan, the erection of a suitable building, either in connection with the Capitol or at some other convenient point. It is conceded by all that if such a building can be constructed as a part of the Capitol, with a due regard to the architectural harmony and beauty of that magnificent national edifice, it is desirable in every respect that it should be done. There exists, however, a wide variety of opinions whether such a structure is possible. When the question was last before the Senate, in February, 1879, there was an extended and instructive debate. It came up on a bill reported by Mr. Howe, of Wisconsin, then chairman of the Joint Committee on the Library, providing for additional accommodations for the Library of Congress, and on an amendment offered by Mr. MORRILL, the Senator from Vermont. The bill reported from the committee provided for the erection of a library building on Judiciary Square, in this city, and the amendment of the Senator from Vermont made provision for a similar building on the squares that directly front the east of the Capitol. The other Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Edmunds,] then and now a member of the Committee on the Library, agreed with neither one of the foregoing propositions, and had one of his own. He strenuously insisted that such changes could be and ought to be made in the Capitol as would furnish proper relief from the present evils of the Library, and afford sufficient accommodations for its future expansion. The Senator from New York [Mr. Conkling] offered a resolution, which, after being amended, finally passed in the following form:

That the bill (S. No. 1591) to provide additional accommodations for the Library of Congress be recommitted to the Committee on the Library on the part of the Senate, with instructions to report a bill providing for a commission of skilled persons to examine and report to Congress at the next session touching practicable changes which may be made in the Capitol building, adapted to the accommodation of the two Houses of Congress and the Library.

of the two Houses of Congress and the Library.

In obedience to this instruction the Senate Committee on the Library, through the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. EDMUNDS,] on the 21st day of February, 1879, reported a bill in accordance therewith. It fell to the ground, however, on the 4th of March ensuing, that being the close of the Forty-fifth Congress. During the present session the matter was again taken up in the Joint Committee on the Library, and the bill now under consideration was agreed upon and ordered to be reported in both Houses of Congress. It has already been read. This bill is plain and simple in its meaning, and needs but little explanation and that little mainly personal to myself. I did not be:

This bill is plain and simple in its meaning, and needs but little explanation, and that little mainly personal to myself. I did not be lieve, when the question was here before, that such changes could be made in this Capitol without defacing its imposing beauty and just proportions as the growing wants of the Library required. Is o stated on this floor at that time, and I have not changed my opinion, for I have had no opportunity for further instruction on the point. I value my opinion, however, but slightly on such a question, and Senators will pardon me for saying that I value theirs no more than my own. There is not an architect by profession, I presume, in this body, and though it is said that poets are born full-fledged and ready to fly, yet I believe that architects, as a rule, are only made by education and experience. Such being the case, I cheerfully concurred in this bill, and reported it, in order that I, and others knowing no more than I and reported it, in order that I, and others knowing no more than I do, might be instructed by skilled persons in architecture, whether the proposed new structure for the Library can, with a due regard to the fitness of things, be attached to the Capitol. It is necessary to determine that question before we can move on.

The controversy growing out of it must be eliminated from the situation or we will remain at a stand-still until some great disaster overtakes the Library. It is true that I cannot perceive how sufficient space can be planned for the Library of the future in connection with the Capitol without marring its symmetry but if experts can I will space can be planned for the Library of the future in connection with the Capitol without marring its symmetry, but if experts can I will be glad of it. There are 11,600 square feet of floor for books, about one-fourth of an acre in space, in the present Library rooms. There are 110,000 square feet for the same purpose in the Library of the British Museum, about two acres and a half, and it is absolutely certain that the Library of Congress will require at least a similar space within the next ten years. How such an area can be properly incorporated into this Capitol I do not at all comprehend, and for that reason I want this bill passed at once as the only fair and satisfactory way of putting an end to controversy and of securing action. If the skilled persons provided for in this bill shall overrule my unskilled judgment I shall most gladly acquiesce; but if, on the contrary, they determine that the new Library building must stand detached from the Capitol, then the sconer we know that fact the better. I look upon the passage of the bill before us as the first possible step toward the conclusion which we must now reach in the speediest manner practicable. It will settle and put behind us a vexed question which is now an invincible obstruction to the wishes, purposes, and duties of this body.

question which is now an invincible obstruction to the wishes, purposes, and duties of this body.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. Morrill,] and now pending, provides for the appointment of a joint committee of three Senators and three members of the House to proceed at once and select a site for a new Library building, without the aid of architectural experts to ascertain whether it can be incorporated into the Capitol. I have great respect for that Senator's judgment and taste, but I think his amendment ought not to be adopted, at least for the present. If it should be found that accommodations ment and taste, but I think his amendment ought not to be adopted, at least for the present. If it should be found that accommodations for the Library cannot be provided for within the Capitol, then his proposition will perhaps be the next step in order. But to adopt it now would simply leave open and undetermined a prolific source of dispute which I see no way of closing except by the operations of the bill as reported from the committee. If the skilled persons contemplated by the bill shall ascertain and report that the Library must be located away from this Capitol building, then I will join the Senator in the support of his or some similar measure.

located away from this Capitol building, then I will join the Senator in the support of his or some similar measure.

Sir, I have now endeavored to lay this whole subject before the Senate. I have pointed out the condition of the Library, its pressing necessities, the different remedies suggested; and I have explained the proposed pending legislation. I might indeed make additional appeals to Senators. I might dwell upon the inestimable value of the Library of Congress aside from the mere numerical extent of its collection. It is rich in every branch of human knowledge. It is not only a great collection of American thought, but it embraces the best productions of all other countries. It has been made very complete up to the present time in all that pertains to the legislative. best productions of all other countries. It has been made very complete up to the present time in all that pertains to the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of the Government, in works on jurisprudence, political science, political history, and parliamentary law. The collection of works on the physical sciences is also very extensive and valuable, while in the fields of architecture, painting, sculpture, natural history, medicine, theology, topography, genealogy, and kindred subjects, the foundation has been laid for great future excellence. To neglect the proper care of such a source of information and of light, or to leave it in jeopardy an hour longer than is now possible apnears little less than a crime against civilization and tion and of light, or to leave it in jeopardy an hour longer than is now possible, appears little less than a crime against civilization and progress. We all eagerly turn to it in order to renew our strength for the conflicts of life. Those who drink most deeply at its springs are the strongest and most enduring. Ponce de Leon, the Spanish adventurer, sought the fabled fountain of perpetual youth, a fountain whose warm waters would melt the frosts of age and change the autumn and the winter time of human existence into an eternal autumn and the winter time of human existence into an eternal spring. He did not find it; no such fountain flows except in the immortal realms beyond; but even had he made the discovery his heart longed for, it would have had but slight value in comparison with a vast fountain of thought into which the best minds of all the ages have poured their mighty resources, and from whose depths we may draw from hour to hour end from day to day the inemiations of meaning the second s draw from hour to hour and from day to day the inspirations of un-

The physical man must grow old, his hair must whiten, and his face bear the furrows of years; his step must falter and his hand grow feeble. Not necessarily so with the intellectual man. The grow feeble. Not necessarily so with the intellectual man. The mind fed at the crystal fountains of accumulated knowledge will continue its youth, its growth, and its expansion until it makes its final transition to a sphere of endless and unlimited development. Let us therefore give this great national library our love and our care. Nothing can surpass it in importance. Knowledge is power, the power to maintain free government and preserve constitutional liberty. Without it the world grows dark and the human race takes up its backward march to the regions of barbarism.

I cannot believe that the plain and imperative duty of Congress on the subject of its Library will be longer neglected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The morning hour has expired.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Indiana will give me his attention a moment before resuming his seat, I should like to inquire of him when it is his purpose to take up the bill of which he has been or him when it is his purpose to take up the office which he has been so pertinently speaking?

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I am apprised of the fact that the Senator from Vermont opposite me [Mr. Morrill] desires to be heard upon his amendment, and whenever it is his pleasure to be heard I upon his amendment, and whenever it is his pleasure to be heard I shall then ask for action without delay.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to suggest to the Senator as the chairman and organ of the Library Committee, whether it would not be well on some day pretty soon, after the morning hour, to take up this bill, not only that Senators may be heard who have particular or preconceived views about it, which I should like very much to hear myself, but also that others may make such suggestions as at the time they would like to present, and that we may have action on the bill. It seems to me if we could consider it in one day we might get an expression of the Senate upon it.

Mr. VOORHEES. If it be the pleasure of the Senator from Vermont to proceed in the matter to-morrow, or any other day, I will give the notice.

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the bill coming up at once

Mr. MORRILL. I have no objection to the bill coming up at once, to-day or to-morrow. I have no set speech to make on the subject, and can say what I have to say at one time as well as at another. I would suggest, however, that perhaps it had better be to-morrow.

Mr. WITHERS. There is an appropriation bill now ready to come before the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. Then I would set it for to-morrow after the morning.

Mr. MOKRILL. Then I would set it for to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. VOORHEES. If it is the pleasure of the Senate, then I shall ask to take up the bill after the morning hour to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. What is the appropriation bill to which the Sen-

Mr. CONKLING. What is the appropriation bill to which the Senator from Virginia refers?

Mr. WITHERS. The appropriation bill providing for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, one of the general appropriation bills.

Mr. CONKLING. I suppose it is not a long bill probably.

Mr. WITHERS. Not very long—about nineteen pages I think. There are not many amendments reported to it.

Mr. CONKLING. Without intending in any way to interfere unduly, I venture to suggest that if it be agreeable to the Senator from Indiana, and if the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] who has the floor on the privileged question would as soon proceed to-morrow, we might go on now in the light of what has been said about this bill after the appropriation bill shall have been disposed of.

Mr. VOORHEES. Very well; that will suit me.

PACIFIC HARBOR OF REFUGE.

Mr. FARLEY submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be directed to furnish the Senate with a copy of the majority and minority reports of the board of engineers on the proposed harbor of refuge for the Pacific coast.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the reso-

Mr. FARLEY. I will state, Mr. President, that the appropriation for the construction of a harbor of refuge on that coast has already been made and the board of engineers have made their report. I understand there is a majority and also a minority report now in the War Department. I simply ask that the Secretary of War be directed to furnish the Senate with a copy of the majority and minority reports. I hope the resolution will pass at once.

The resolution was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is before the Senate, being the resolutions reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to the seat held by WILLIAM PITT KELLOGG as a Senator from the State of Louisiana. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. CAMERON] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. WITHERS. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me

Mr. WITHERS. I ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me in order that I may present the bill making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia, asking that the special order be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. CAMERON, of Wisconsin. In accordance with what was agreed to last evening, I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the regular order will be laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. CONKLING. The unanimous consent is that the regular order be laid aside.

be laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Temporarily.

Mr. CONKLING. Subject to call whether an adjournment intervenes or not. It is subject to call not influenced by the adjournment of the Senate to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 5896) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that for the first time a bill making appropriations for the support of the government of the District of Columbia is made one of the general appropriation bills. Heretofore the expenses necessary for the government of the District have been embodied in the sundry civil appropriation bill. I desire to make some general statements in regard to the provisions of this bill preliminary to its consideration.

I will state that the total estimates of the commissioners of the District were $3,435,980.65. The total estimates as approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, who under the law is required to revise them, were $3,434,312.55. The refere the amount disapproved by the Secretary was $1,668.10. The total of the bill as presented from the House is $2,432,727. The reference of reduction made by the Commit is $3,423,737.35. The net amount of reduction made by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate on the House bill is $8,800. The amount of the bill as reported to the Senate is $3,414,937.35. The bill as reported is less than the estimates of the commissioners $21,043.30. The bill as reported is less than the estimates approved by the Secre-

The bill as reported is less than the estimates approved by the Secretary of the Treasury $19,375.20.

The total of the appropriations for 1880 was $3,251,466. The bill as reported exceeds the act for 1880 by $163,471.35. The total amount to be paid by the United States according to the bill as reported is $1,707,468.67. The total amount paid under appropriations for 1880 by the United States was $1,625,733. The amount to be paid under this bill exceeds the amount paid under the act of 1880 by $81,735.67.

I will state now also the items in which an increase has been made I will state now also the items in which an increase has been made by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate from the act of 1880. There has been an increase under the head of street improvements and repairs, $96,600; of repairs to bridges, $1,300; for the Washington Asylum, $2,880; for the Reform School, $5,000; under the head of Insane Asylum, for the indigent poor of the District of Columbia, $15,000; for charities, $20,000; for public schools, $5,634.80; for school buildings, $25,000; purchase of police court building, $14,000; amount due property owners for ground condemned for streets, alleys, &c., $30,000, making an increase of $215,214.80 for the items enumerated. There are also miscellaneous items of reduction which I have not thought it necessary to enumerate specifically, aggregating $51,741.35. thought it necessary to enumerate specifically, aggregating $51,741.35, leaving a net increase in this bill over the act of 1880 of $163,473.45.

The items of increase made by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate over the bill as reported by the House are as follows:

For transportation of paupers	$1,000
For cottages, Columbia Hospital.
For map of District of Columbia	3, 000
For one clerk sinking-fund office	1, 200
For superintendent of parking, (increase)	200
For fuel, schools, (increase)	2,000
For removal of bodies from Holmead's Cemetery	1,000
Totalingwaga

The following items of reduction, as compared with the House bill, are embodied in the bill as now reported:

For indigent insane of District of Columbia in Insane Hospital	6,000
Mechanical fanitor	1, 200

Leaving the net amount of reduction made by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, as compared with the House bill, $3,800. With this general statement of the provisions of the bill and the changes made in it by our committee, as compared with the House bill and the appropriation of last year, I ask that the formal reading of the bill in extenso be dispensed with, and that we proceed to read it by paragraphs and act upon the amendments as they are reached in the reading.

in the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the amendments of the committee be acted on as the bill is read. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that I wish the committee amendments passed on first and then any other amendments may be offered. The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the order under the rule.

The reading will proceed. The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment reported from the Committee on Appropriations was, in section 1, line 13, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be immediately available;"

so as to read:

For work on New York avenue intercepting sewer, $28,000, to be immediately available.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state briefly that the necessity for the amendment lies in this: the New York avenue intercepting sewer, which is a very large sewer, is now entirely open for a considerable distance, and unless the appropriation be made available at once, it will remain in that condition during the heat of the summer and all the noxious gases emanating from it will be disseminated over the city to the great detriment of the health of the people. Therefore we desire to make it immediately available. desire to make it immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 59, to increase the appropriation "for transportation of paupers and conveying prisoners to the work-house" from $2,500 to $3,500.

Mr. WITHERS. The amount asked by the commissioners and recommended by the Secretary was $5,000. The committee of the Senate agreed to increase it to $3,500 on the ground that there were a large number of these people for whose transportation from the city this money was used, and that the present appropriation is entirely exhausted, and therefore the committee agreed to recommend the increase.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 64, to reduce the appropriation "for support of the indigent insane of the District of Columbia in the Government Hospital for the Insane in said District, as provided in sections 4843, 4844, and 4850 of the Revised Statutes," from $45,000 to $32,000.

Mr. WITHERS. In reference to that amendment of the committee, I will state that it was incorporated into the bill for this reason: There seems to be a very decided difference of opinion between the superintendent of the Insane Asylum and the commissioners of the District as to the number of pauper inmates of the asylum for whose superintendent of the Insane Asylum and the commissioners of the District as to the number of pauper inmates of the asylum for whose support the District should be held responsible. They recommended in their estimate $20,000 as being an amount sufficient to cover this expense. The superintendent asked for upward of $90,000. Upon investigating the question thoroughly we were of opinion that in the absence of specific information as to the number of inmates for whose support the District of Columbia is responsible, we should assume the estimate made by the board of visitors of that institution is a correct basis for our appropriation, which is $32,000 leaving to the commisbasis for our appropriation, which is $32,000, leaving to the commissioners, who are now engaged in collecting evidence of the facts of the case, to establish whether or not the number of patients charged to the District is greater than should legitimately be charged to it. They will secure this information in a day or two at the farthest, and the object of the committee was to introduce an amendment which, while in accordance with the recommendation of the board of visitors to the institution, would place the whole subject within the purview of a committee of conference to act on the specific information as to the numbers of insane poor that are in the asylum. Consequently they have moved to strike out "forty-five" and insert "thirty-two" thirty-two.

The amendment was agreed to. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 76, after the words "trustees of," to strike out "the Freedman's Bank" and insert "Jay Cooke & Co.;" so as to make the clause read:

For Reform School: For salaries, fuel, and incidentals and repairs, and payment by the District of Columbia for support of the boys sent to the school, under act of May 3, 1876, $25,000. The trustees of said Reform School are authorized to use of the money due them from the trustees of Jay Cooke & Co. the sum of $8,500, or so much as may be necessary, to purchase the remainder of the Peter farm for the use of said school.

Mr. WITHERS. That is because the fund is in the hands of the trustees of Jay Cooke & Co., and not of the Freedman's Bank.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "school," in line 80, to

Provided, That no part of said money shall be paid until a title satisfactory to said trustees is made for said farm at a price not exceeding the sum aforesaid.

Mr. WITHERS. That is in order to render certain the fact that the meney appropriated, authorized to be used at least, by this bill, shall be in full for the purchase-money of the property indicated, and not to leave a debt hereafter for which Congress or the United States might be held responsible. It is merely to make it more stringent and specific.

Mr. ALLISON Property in the fact that the money of the united States might be held responsible. It is merely to make it more stringent and specific.

and specific.

Mr. ALLISON. Before passing from this paragraph I want to call attention to the fact that this sum of $25,000 is not sufficient to carry on the ordinary operations of the Reform School of the District of Columbia for the next year. The commissioners of the District of Columbia think a portion of these expenses should be borne by the United States can are and apart from the one-half which we are re-Columbia think a portion of these expenses should be borne by the United States separate and apart from the one-half which we are required to bear under this bill, and I believe it was understood by the Committee on Appropriations that some additional sum would be provided in the sundry civil bill. Unless that is to be done, this sum ought to be increased from $25,000 to $28,000.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state that the sum appropriated by this bill is in accordance with the estimates made by the commissioners, and it is in excess of the appropriation of last year $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the $20,000 appropriated last year did not cover the additional sum named by the commissioners, so that the actual sum expended for named by the commissioners, so that the actual sum expended for this year is much more than $20,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is true; but the sum of $25,000 is the estimate made by the commissioners and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and we did not feel authorized to exceed their recommendations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 85, to insert:

For the erection of two isolated cottages on the grounds of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum, for use in treatment of puerperal, infectious, and other offensive diseases, $3,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the substance of an amendment which was offered in the Senate and referred to the committee. Upon investigation the fact was ascertained that they have no means of isolating such cases, and the committee were unanimously of the opinion that the amendment was advisable, and therefore incorporated it in the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN.

I should like to inquire of the Senator having Mr. McM'ILIAN. I should like to inquire of the Senator having this bill in charge whether the items mentioned as charities, commencing with the appropriation just read at the desk, are public institutions or private institutions, and by what authority, if they are not public institutions, appropriations are made for their support? I am not aware of the relation which these institutions sustain to the government of the District of Columbia, and ask for information that I may understand:

For the support and maintenance of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying in Asylum, $15,000.

Then the amendment proposed by the committee, which is pending, follows, and then these items:

For the Children's Hospital, $5,000.
For Saint Ann's Infant Asylum, $5,000.
For the Industrial Home School, $10,000.
For the National Association for Colored Women and Children, $6,500.
For the Women's Christian Association, $5,000,
For the Little Sisters of the Poor, to defray the expenses of construction of their building, $5,000.

For the erection of a building for the German Orphan Asylum, $10,000.

These are called "charities," and I wish to know whether they are connected with the government of the District of Columbia, or whether we are appropriating money for general public charities having no connection with the government?

Mr. WITHERS. The government of the District of Columbia has no connection directly with these charities. The commissioners of the District of Columbia have no control over them; they are just private charities controlled by boards of visitors or boards of trustees, as the case may be, for which Congress has been called on to approas the case may be, for which Congress has been called on to appropriate money more or less every year since I have been a member of this body. These charities have been such as commend them to the favorable consideration of Congress. It is believed that they are doing a good work; and while they present the singular anomaly, as intimated by the Senator, of being entirely beyond the control of the commissioners of the District, in the management of which they have no voice whatever, I will state for the information of the Senator and of the Senate that the Committee on the District of Columbia have under consideration a bill which they may offer as an amendment to this bill, or as an independent bill—I am not fully posted as to their purpose—which provides that the commissioners of the District shall have some supervision of the distribution and the expenditure of this money by providing that one of the commissioners shall be ex officio money by providing that one of the commissioners shall be ex officio a member of the board of visitors or the board of trustees, as the case may be, of each of these institutions, which I freely say I favor my-

Mr. McMILLAN. I am unable to see by what authority any of

Mr. McMillan. I am unable to see by what authority any of these appropriations are made.

Mr. WITHERS. It is simply by authority of Congress.

Mr. McMillan. It seems to me that you might just as well appropriate for charities in any of the Territories of the United States or elsewhere.

Mr. WITHERS. I have merely stated the facts in the case. It is a donation for the support of charitable institutions located in the city of Washington.

Mr. THURMAN. I will venture to say a word on the subject, because I remember very well the discussion it underwent some years ago, I think not long after I came into this body. I remember that ago, I think not long after I came into this body. I remember that when we settled then upon making appropriations to these various charities, for that is what they are, it was placed upon what I thought was a sound principle, and that was that there was not one of them but what was a charity that in most of the States of the Union is provided for by State authority, and that deserved support from the Government, more or less. So long as we do not organize such charities by law in the District of Columbia, but leave it to private enterprise and private effort to do so, it is right for the Government to aid these obstities aid these charities.

I must say further, that in my judgment these charities are better administered and are more beneficial than any under the control of Government that ever I have seen. I hope the bill will be agreed to as it is, and that no objection will be made to retaining this provision in it. If ever it should be proposed to me that one of the commissioners of the District of Columbia should be a member of the trustees to regulate the affairs of these charities, I should not have the least objection in the world to it, although my own belief is that no charities could be more honestly and efficiently administered than are these.

Mr. WITHERS. Such was the character of the information before the committee I think it necessary to remark in this connection, somewhat in correction of the general statement I made in response somewhat in correction of the general statement I made in response to the interrogatory of the Senator from Minnesota, that in regard to one of these institutions, the Columbia Hospital, Congress does exercise some supervision over it to this extent: the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House each has the power and has exercised the power of appointing a member of the board of trustees.

Mr. BECK. And so with the Reform School.

Mr. WITHERS. So with the Reform School.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I was under the impression from the reference to the Columbia Hospital that there was some connection between the District government and the institution.

the District government and the institution.

Mr. WITHERS. The District has nothing to do with it. Congress has the power to exercise supervision over it.

Mr. McMILLAN. So far as that is concerned I have nothing to

The question is on the amendment as to that, I believe.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to say that as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I agreed, upon the grounds stated by the Senator from Ohio, to giving the money necessary to aid these charities; but I desire also to say that whenever any proposition is made giving to the commissioners of the District some authority to look into the working of these different institutions, especially as half this money is being paid by the District of Columbia. I shall surely this money is being paid by the District of Columbia, I shall surely support it, because the District commissioners are absolutely ignorant of the management of any of these charities, not being even allowed, except as a matter of grace, to look inside the doors of any of them. If we have a government of the District presided over by commissioners, and the money of the people is taken to support these charities, no matter how well they are managed, if the taxation is imposed, there ought to be some sort of supervision attached to them for the benefit of tax-payers. I believe that the Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. Harris,] the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, will devise some mode whereby that can be done, perhaps not on this bill, but on some other

Mr. HARRIS. So far as I have been able to obtain information as Mr. HARRIS. So far as I have been able to obtain information as to the character of these institutions, I am satisfied that most if not all of them are highly meritorious and should have assistance, at least to the extent of the appropriations contained in this bill. It is a fact, however, that they are each and all of them private corporations, having no connection with the District government, and over which the authorities of the District have no control, nor have they indeed anything in the form of a report or satisfactory information indeed anything in the form of a report or satisfactory information as to the management and workings of these institutions. In view of these facts I have prepared and am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer at the end of line 101 an amendment, which I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read for information now; and when the amendments proposed by the Committee on Appropriations have been acted upon I shall ask the Senate to adopt that amendment, subject as I know it is to a question of order if the question shall be raised; but the amendment, as I think, is so decidedly meritorious and so proper as connected with this bill, that I am not inclined to think any Senator will raise a question of order. The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY in the chair.) The amendment to be proposed will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And that from and after the passage of this act, one of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be selected by the board of commissioners, shall be a trustee with all the powers, privileges, and duties of other trustees of the Reform School and of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum. And one of said commissioners selected by said board of commissioners shall be a director, with all the powers, privileges, and duties of other directors, of the Children's Hospital of the District of Columbia. And one of said commissioners selected by said board, shall be a member of the board of managers, with all the powers, privileges, and duties of other members of the board of managers of the Industrial Home School; the National Association for the Relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children; and of the Women's Christian Association. And the commissioners of the Instrict of Columbia shall have the right to visit, investigate, and have a full report of the management, receipts, and expenditures of the Saint Ann's Infant Asylum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations after line 85.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move to strike from the bill all the items embraced from lines 90 to 100, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be in order after the Senate has considered the committee's amendments. The Chair will enter the senate has considered the committee's amendments. tertain the motion after the amendments of the committee have been gone through with.

Mr. McMillan. Can I not offer an amendment to the bill at this

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not until the amendments of the committee shall have been concluded.

Mr. McMILLAN. Then I give notice that at the proper time I shall move, after line 100, to insert:

For the Home for Fallen Women in Saint Paul, Minnesota, $10,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator at the proper time. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in line 97, after "Poor," to insert "to defray the expenses of construction of their building;" so as to make the clause read:

For the Little Sisters of the Poor, to defray the expenses of construction of their

Mr. WITHERS. The committee was informed that it was the desire of those who control the institution to appropriate this money for the building. We did not desire to be committed to the principle of contributing to the support of the institution itself, but were willing to contribute to the erection of the building.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator would state what this building is, and what the occasion of the appropriation is.

Mr. WITHERS. In reply to the Senator I would say that it is a charity, I understand, for the support of aged persons of both sexes, who are here provided a home and the means of living. It is controlled, I think, by sisters—perhaps Sisters of Charity.

Mr. JOHNSTON. By the Little Sisters of the Poor.

control over it is the sisterhood known as the Little Sisters of the Poor. It is a simple charity for the support of the aged of both sexes.

Mr. KERNAN. If I may be permitted to say a word, I will remark that if any gentleman will do these sisters the favor to visit their institution, which is not a great way from here northwardly, he will see that it is controlled by the sisters, who take aged people over a certain age, without reference to creed, who are indigent, and support them; and they support them by charity. They are the sisters who go around and gather up by their own solicitations from ladies and others the means of supporting them. Any one who will go there will find there old people of both sexes. I was taken there the other day by a friend who wanted me to see the institution. They had 103 inmates; some of them were entirely invalids, some of them were in bed, others were old people quite happy, chatting and doing nothing, all of them poor, and all of them unable to take care of them selves.

As I understand from information from ladies and others, as well as from the sisterhood, they support them without public aid, but they do need some aid in reference to buildings which they have to keep them in, and I want to say that I know they will be delighted with anybody, public or private, who will visit their institution and see the work they are doing.

Mr. CONKLING. I have no doubt of the commendable object subserved in the case of every one of these appropriations; but I have a doubt as to the property of the appropriations. Every institution for which the property of the District of Columbia should be taxed is one a portion of the expenses of which ought to be paid by the General Government. That is true for several reasons, but sufficiently true for the reason that of the real estate in this District the title to more than half is in the United States; and to state that is to enable more than half is in the United States; and to state that is to enable every Senator to conclude that either by subjecting it to taxation or in the other mode of direct appropriation the aliquot part at least belonging to the Government, and if the property was in the hands of individuals assessable upon the property, ought to be paid. But I confess with the utmost sympathy for many, and for aught I know for all the establishments spoken of here, I cannot dismiss from my mind this doubt: Here is a charitable institution, or a religious institution, or a beneficial institution of any sort, maintained here or stitution, or a beneficial institution of any sort, maintained here or elsewhere by private benevolence, by private enterprise. It is the subject of private or corporate ownership. How can it be said that as the residue of the property here is not taxable for it and should not be, the property of the United States should be taxable or that there should be response on the part of the United States?

I beg to say, Mr. President, that I am not aiming this suggestion at this bill or at anything in this bill. I have sometimes heretofore, not in the case of these institutions but in the case of others, felt bound to withhold my vote although very urgently appealed to by bound to withhold my vote although very urgently appealed to by very excellent people deeply interested in these enterprises to give it, and I have felt so constrained for the reason which now in these few words I seek to indicate.

I know that Congress has exclusive jurisdiction of the District of Columbia, but I take it that that jurisdiction should proceed upon Columbia, but I take it that jurisdiction should proceed upon some ascertainable, definable principle, and I hardly see how it happens that if a voluntary association, religious or secular, charitable or otherwise, embarks, no matter from motives how good, in an enterprise such as some of these, it behooves Congress, bestowing money of the whole people, to select it as the subject of endowment.

Such institutions as I see named here and such descriptions as I have been given of them can be found in example all over the country. In the city in which I live there is this same thing, a home for aged women and a home for aged men founded by the generosity of those who living have made gifts and dying have left legacies to found and to aid them; but the property of the city is not taxable because they are not public or governmental agencies.

The question which arises in my mind is whether all of this principle is not as applicable here as anywhere else. If it is not, and if going out and seeking objects of undoubted merit, benevolent unquestionably, useful unquestionably, we are at liberty to give as one would give of his own private charity, of course it opens a very wide field in the present and in the future.

But, as I said, I do not aim my remarks at any object in this bill. On the contrary, if I may say so without seeming to profess too much, I should be inclined to insist that I had as much sympathy as any I should be inclined to insist that I had as much sympathy as any member of the Senate has with these or with any similar objects, purposes, establishment; but when I am required to vote on my oath upon the question whether the right of appropriating money extends so far as this, I cannot have at this time, as I have often had before, anything less than very serious and uncomfortable doubts, to say the least, whether these objects fall within the purview of legislative right and well-guarded legislative discretion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations in line 97.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "dollars," in line 140, to insert "to prepare a proper map showing accurately the subdivisions of real estate in that portion of the District outside of the cities, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary;" and, in line 145, to strike out "nineteen" and insert "twenty-two;" so as to make the clause read:

For treasurer and assessor's office: For one treasurer and assessor, $3,000; one assistant assessor, $1,800; one clerk, $1,600; two clerks, at $1,400 each; six clerks, at $1,200 each; one clerk, $900; one messenger, $600; to prepare a proper map showing accurately the subdivisions of real estate in that portion of the District outside of the cities, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; contingent expenses, including printing, books, stationery, car-fare, and miscellaneous items, $2,000; in all, $22,900.

Mr. WITHERS. I will state in explanation of that amendment that the commissioners inform the committee that there is no complete map of the territory lying outside of and around the city of Washington included within the limits of the District of Columbia; that there is a considerable portion of the real estate there which is not now assessed and upon which there is no tax paid. They desire this appropriation in order that the whole territory may be accurately surveyed and mapped out, in order that they may acquire the data for assessing the value in accordance with the law as applied to other property in the District.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for the sinking-fund office, after the word "for," in line 155, to strike out "one clerk" and insert "two clerks," and in line 158, after the word "all," to strike out "$1,500" and insert "$2,700;" so as to make the clause read:

For sinking-fund office: For two clerks, at $1,200; for contingent expenses, in cluding books, stationery, printing, and miscellaneous items, $300; in all, $2,700.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to state in explanation of that that the committee restore a clerk who was stricken from the bill, as it passed last year, by this clause of the House bill. They did it in accordance with the request of the Treasurer of the United States in a letter which I hold in my hand, which I will not trouble the Senate to read, but ask that it be put in the RECORD, in which he states that it is physically impossible for one clerk to perform the duties incident to the position, and it is absolutely necessary, in order to discharge properly the business of the sinking-fund office, that the additional clerk shall be provided.

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES,

Washington, May 1, 1880.

SIR: I have the honor to most earnestly urge the restoration of the twelve-hundreddollar clerk proposed to be dropped from the appropriation for the sinking-fund office in the bill making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881. The sinking-fund office, under the present law, is under the direct charge of the Treasurer of the United States. The two gentlemen now employed therein were in that office prior to the transfer of the powers and duties of the sinking-fund commissioners to the Treasurer of the United States. They are thoroughly competent, and are kept fully employed. Their duties embrace the keeping of all the accounts pertaining to the sinking fund; the custody of the tax-lien certificates pledged to the sinking fund, and the receipt and examination of all collections on account thereof; the keeping of the accounts pertaining to the 3.65 loan and of all transfers thereof; the examination and scheduling of all paid coupons of District loans except the 3.65 bonds; the making up of the accounts for the payments on account of sinking fund and interest; and many other important and responsible duties which it would be physically impossible for one person to perform.

LAS CHARLY.

JAS. GILFILLAN, Treasurer United States.

Hon. R. E. WITHERS, Committee on Appropriations, U. S. Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 242 to increase the item for the compensation of the superintendent of the parking commission from $1,000 to $1,200; and in line 247 to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the parking commission from $15,120 to $15,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "dollars," in line 322, to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the janitors of the principal school buildings, in addition to their other duties, shall do all minor repairs to buildings and furniture, glazing, fixing seats and desks, and shall be selected with reference to their qualifications to perform this work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to strike out lines 328 and 329, as fol-

For one mechanical janitor, who shall also furnish a horse, wagon, and hand, $1,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 331, to insert "out of which amount the sum of $2,400, being interest on the Linthicum Institute loan, shall be paid."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after "fuel," in line 333, to strike out "ten" and insert "twelve;" so as to read: For fuel, $12,000.

Mr. WITHERS. That is the estimate of the commissioners, and we did not think it a good thing to economize on fuel for the schools.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "sites," in line 337, to strike out the words "(when necessary;)" in line 341, after the word "of," to strike out "July" and insert "August;" so as to make the clause read :

For the purchase of sites and the erection and completion of three school buildings, $100,000: Provided, That they shall be contracted for before the 1st of next September and finished before the 1st of August, 1881, to be appropriated as follows, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. With reference to this portion of the bill I desire to suggest to the Senator having the bill in charge whether he amendment at the end of this paragraph in line 348 might not be inserted to this effect:

 ${\it Provided},$ That in the sixth school district the sum appropriated may be used for one or more school buildings.

The reason I make this suggestion is that in the case of the examination of a subject which was before the Committee on the District of Columbia the interests of this school district lying outside of the or Columbia the interests of this school district lying outside of the cities of Washington and Georgetown were involved, and the trustees suggested that they desired the appropriation in such form that instead of erecting one building only they might erect four buildings, but in that case they thought the appropriation should be somewhat larger than that embraced in this bill; but if the amount appropriated could be used as far as it would go in the erection of more than the discretion of the trustees it exempts a result would go. one building in the discretion of the trustees, it seems to me it would be the proper form.

Mr. WITHERS. I will simply state, in reference to what the Senator from Minnesota has suggested, that no such information was before the committee, and they passed the bill in the form in which it now stands; but it strikes me as being eminently judicious, and if he will permit it to lie until the amendments of the committee shall have been disposed of I think there will be no objection on the part of the committee, so far as I understand, to the amendment which he

Mr. McMILLAN. I shall do so.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 346, after the word "and," to strike out "four thousand eight" and insert "five thousand six;" so as to make the clause read:

For the second school division, $45,000; for the sixth school division, (county, $10,000; for the seventh school division, $45,000; amounting in all, for school purposes, to $505,634.80.

Mr. WITHERS. That is a consequential amendment, following in consequence of the other amendments to the clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the clause making appropriations for miscellaneous expenses, in line 430, to reduce the appropriation "for purchase of police-court building" from $20,000 to $14,000.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. Leaving the appropriation in settles the main question, that it is right and proper to purchase the building, and the amendment simply raises the question of price.

Notwithstanding there are contradictory opinions on this subject, speaking for myself, I do not believe the appropriation as it comes from the House is one dollar too much; and there are special circumstances connected with this case, which are better known to some other stances connected with this case, which are better known to some other Senators than they are perhaps to myself, and I hope that, when they are stated to the Senate, there will be no objection to retaining the appropriation as it came from the House.

I understand in short, and I make the statement subject to correction, that the trustees of the Unitarian church agreed with the District commissioners several years ago to rent the old church property to the commissioners at an annual rent, with an option on the part of the commissioners to purchase the property within one year at $18,000; if not purchased within one year, then they had the option to purchase it in the second year at $19,000; if they did not exercise that option, then they had the right to purchase in the third year at $20,000. I am informed further that pending this contract the trustees could have obtained $18,000 for the property and applied to the District commissioners, or to whatever authority it was with which they had made the contract, asking whether they would consent to cancel had made the contract, asking whether they would consent to cancel the contract so that the trustees might sell the property and get the $18,000 offered for it. The commissioners answered no, they would not agree to the cancellation of the contract. Relying, then, upon this contract, the trustees of this church borrowed $18,000 to enable them to construct the beautiful structure which they have built at the corner of Fourteenth and L streets, and gave a mortgage or some other security for the return of those $18,000.

Now, it does seem to me that after having relied in good faith upon this contract which they had made with the District commissioners and which estimated this property to be worth at least $18,000 if not $20,000, and having involved themselves in the loan which they made in order to erect one of the most beautiful little structures in the city, it is pretty hard—I was going to use a word which I will not use—but it is pretty hard to attempt to cut that down.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Had the commissioners any power to make powers. They have powers such as were conferred on the old gov-powers. They have powers such as were conferred on the old governments except so far as they are repealed, expressly or by implication, by the subsequent acts we have passed; and certainly the old governments had power to purchase property.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. I should like to see the power.

Mr. THURMAN. But I do not wish to go into a mere question of power. Does the Government need this building or some building for the police court? Nobody denies that. Is this a suitable building for that purpose? I do not suppose anybody denies that.

Mr. BECK. Nobody claims that it is.

Mr. THURMAN. Why then did not the committee strike it clear out?

I hope the Senate will.

Mr. BECK. I hope the Senate will.

Mr. THURMAN. Several thousand dollars have been expended on it.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say that one of the commissioners protested against it. I have his protest in writing. One of the leading lawyers of the city, Mr. Davidge, came before the committee with a number of other gentlemen with him, and avowed that no one would pretend that this was a proper place for the police court; and he gave a reason which nobody contradicted. We have passed in the Senate a bill appropriating $117,000 to have a building on our own grounds which will accommodate all the courts the people here want, and exclude the scum of the community from public view.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not believe Mr. Davidge has had to go inside of a police court for twenty years. Mr. Davidge is not a law-side of a police court for twenty years. Mr. Davidge is not a law-yer who practices in the police court. His practice is more in the Supreme Court of the United States than anywhere else. It certainly is not in the police court of this District. And as we have had the suggestion made that the enlargement of the City Hall will provide a suitable place for the scum of the city, as the Senator from Kentucky says, I beg leave to say that that is not the place to send the scum of the city; nor do I admit at all that the enlargement proposed by the bill which has passed the Senate on that subject will provide for the police court as it ought to be provided for. There will be no more room in the City Hall when enlarged than is necessary for the supreme court of this District, and I doubt if there will be sufficient for that, but certainly not for the police court.

I confess that I am surprised to hear it said that this building is not suitable as it has now been arranged for the police court. I hear side of a police court for twenty years. Mr. Davidge is not a law-not suitable as it has now been arranged for the police court. I hear it for the first time. Of course I do not pretend to set up my judgment against that of other Senators, but I have always heard the contrary before.

Mr. President, it seems to me that under the circumstances of this case this bill is right as it came from the House in this respect, and I hope that the amendment offered by the Committee on Appropria-

I hope that the amendment offered by the Committee on Appropriations will not be agreed to.

Mr. WINDOM. Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I voted to reduce this sum from $20,000 to $14,000. I did it upon the information the committee then had. I believed from that information that the property was not worth more than $14,000. I have since received evidence which satisfies my mind perfectly and entirely that $20,000 is not an undue price for this property. appraised at about that some years ago. I think the appraisal for taxation amounted to about that sum. I know that an offer of about that sum was made for it, for I have seen the letter stating the offer; and being perfectly satisfied that the amount of $14,000 is too small, and that $20,000, as proposed by the House, is not far from the right sum, I wish to state, for one, that I have changed my mind since the sum, I wish to state, for one, that I have changed my mind since the recommendation of the committee was made, and I want now to vote for $20,000. We are paying $1,500 a year rent now, I understand, for the building, besides taxes and insurance.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that that property has been appraised by experts at $20,000—from $18,000 to $24,000 f

Mr. WINDOM. I think $20,000 is the figure. I have seen the statement of experts putting it at from $18,000 to $24,000 for the land alone, as I am informed, and I have seen the other papers showing what the property is worth.

property is worth.

I was about to say that we are paying $1,500 a year rent, together with taxes and insurance, for this property. If we buy it at $20,000, which I think not more than its value, we shall pay but about $800 a year, for I suppose it is safe to estimate the interest on Government bonds or debt at 4 per cent. I think it a profitable thing to do. I think the property is worth it. I think for reasons given by the Senator from Ohio we ought to do it, provided we did not pay too much for the property, and that was the only ground on which I concurred in the recommendation of the committee before.

Mr. President I was willing to yote for the amendation.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I was willing to vote for the amendment fixing $14,000, and I did so vote in committee, not because I desired to purchase the property at all, but because I believed if we did buy it $14,000 was a full price; but it was with the determination and reservation in the committee of the right to move to strike out the paragraph altogether, because I thought it was an improper it is pretty hard—I was going to use a word which I will not use—but it is pretty hard to attempt to cut that down.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Had the commissioners any power to make the contract?

Mr. THURMAN. I think they had power, although I do not profess to have looked much into it. The commissioners have very broad to the paragraph altogether, because I though I was an improper purchase to make.

The arrangement to rent this building was not made by the present commissioners. There was no contract to purchase; there was no obligation on which the church or anybody else could rether was to be a purchase. On the contract, as soon as those commissioners who were then in office, against the written protest of Mr. Dent, one of the present commissioners, whose protest I have here, and who merely said before us he now acquiesced, as soon as those commissioners attempted to make that lease and establish the police court there, the people of the District undertook to obtain an injunction upon the ground that the commissioners had no legal right to make the contract and that it was a nuisance to the whole neighborhood. They obtained that injunction from Judge Wylie; but the court in barc, saying they had no right to look into the question of an injunction upon the ground of nuisance, dissolved the injunction, an injunction upon the ground of nuisance, dissolved the injunction, because they thought that the legal power to make the lease existed. From that an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, Judge Cox, now on the bench, and Mr. Davidge, as I understand, acting as counsel for citizens residing in that part of the city. That appeal is now pending; that appeal Mr. Davidge believes he will sustain. It is now pending. Judge Cox and he brought the suit, very good lawyers. The Senator from Ohio says Mr. Davidge's practice is principally in that court. While that appeal is pending the effort is now made to get the United States to buy the property, which necessarily dismisses the appeal, because it is the intervention of the sovereign power ratifying whatever may have been done before and fastening it upon the people.

Mr. THURMAN. Will my friend from Kentucky allow me to ask a question?

question? Mr. BECK.

Mr. BECK. Certainly.
Mr. THURMAN. I have so high a respect for the legal ability of Mr. Davidge that the statement the Senator has just made fills me with astonishment. I understand him to state that Mr. Davidge is of the opinion that this police court can be suppressed as a nuisance by an injunction.

Mr. BECK. No. sir; I did not say that.

Mr. THURMAN. If that is the case, if police courts are all nuisances, what will be the result?

Mr. BECK. I said the court in banc decided that they could not consider that question on an injunction, and for that reason overruled Judge Wylie's opinion. From the opinion of the court in banc there was an appeal taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, which is still pending. I think it does not become the Congress of the United States nor the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate of the United States to seek to deprive the people of their right to a decision of the Supreme Court when that lease has two right to a decision of the Supreme Court when that lease has two more years to run and when there is no necessity for making the purchase now nor until that question can be heard in the Supreme Court of the United States, for the lease does not expire until July, 1881, and another session of Congress will intervene between now and then. Why deprive these men of the right to have their case heard? Why rush with this haste now, more than a year before the lease expires, to pay $20,000 for what? Ten thousand dollars is to be taken out of the treature of the District of Columbia for what? To purchase to pay $20,000 for what? Ten thousand dollars is to be taken out of the treasury of the District of Columbia for what? To purchase a building wholly unfitted now and becoming more and more unfit year by year as the city increases for the purpose for which it was intended; and when bought who gets it? What interest has the United States in it after it is bought? Not a dollar; the title to not a foot of land on which it is built will be in the United States. It can be sold tomorrow or abandoned, and $10,000 is to be taken out of the Treasury of the United States now for property for which the United States sets nothing. gets nothing.

The title to this police court and the building is to be vested, if vested at all, not in the United States, but in the commissioners of the District of Columbia; not one foot of it vests in the United States; the District of Columbia; not one foot of it vests in the United States; and this provision of this bill, which the Senator from Ohio insists is so just, is to make the tax-payers of Ohio and Kentucky and elsewhere pay half of the $20,000 to vest the title in the commissioners of the District who may abandon it to-morrow if they choose, and the United States gets nothing for all she pays. First you dismiss the appeal, and then give $10,000 to acquire nothing, against the protest of all the people in the neighborhood and against the fact that we have appropriated $117,000 by another bill to add to buildings on land now owned by the United States, which every lawyer that appeared before us said, and every lawyer in the city will say, is sufficient to build all the courts we want, police courts included.

cient to build all the courts we want, police courts included.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator from Kentucky tell me, if I may interrupt him there, the provision in this bill that the title to this property shall be in the commissioners of this District?

Mr. BECK. There is $20,000 given for what? For the purchase of the police court building. Will the Senator from Ohio tell me, under the statement of the contract made on which he relies as the only basis of equity here, whether the United States will get a dollar of it and whether if this passes it is not to carry out the contract which he says is equitable? And if so, it is to vest title in the District commissioners who alone made the lease whose legality is now in doubt.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.
Mr. THURMAN. Without a provision in the bill that the title shall be in the District, I do not see that there can be any title in the District. If the Senator prefers that the title should be taken by the United States-and I am sure I have no objection to that, and I do not know that anybody else has—five words will so declare that the title shall be taken by the United States.

Mr. BECK. The bill as it comes from the House and which the Senator advocates was to carry out a contract which he said was equitable and just to the trustees of some church because they had made an arrangement or understanding with the District commissioners that the commissioners were to have this building and that our money was to go into it unless something else was done, when beyond all peradventure the title passes to other people.

Several papers have been sent to me as a member of the commitseveral papers have been sent to me as a member of the commit-tee, and before I say anything upon the question of the valuation, about which a good deal has been said, I wish to remark that it was made apparent to my mind, as I think it would be to the mind of every gentleman who heard the argument, that this is not a fit place to have the police court. It is on the corner of Sixth and D streets on a public square. It has not been a month since a colored man was charged with an offense on Capitol Hill, and when he was taken to charged with an offense on Capitol Hill, and when he was taken to the court in a van I am told that not less than five thousand people gathered there on the public streets. There all the crime of the city is unloaded in the public view. There is no way of keeping it in any seclusion; whereas on Judiciary Square where we have four or five acres, as is known to all Senators, where a great extension is to be made to the City Hall building, a wall can be erected and the van driven inside of the gates. By doing that the prisoner is himself secure, the people are secure from the sights generally seen around police courts, and everything will be done decently and in order.

Plenty of room can be had there without offending anybody or without anybody rushing around and crowding to see what comes from

Plenty of room can be had there without offending anybody or without anybody rushing around and crowding to see what comes from the slums of the city every morning or what is taken away from the court. As the city increases in size it will become more and more important that that should be done. Why should a whole neighborhood of respectable citizens have this thing fastened upon them merely because somebody wants to oblige some church? The church lot is only sixty-two feet by ninety-odd. The cells are in a condition there, as was stated by Mr. Davidge and others, wholly unfit for people to be placed in who are presumed to be innecent until they are found be placed in who are presumed to be innocent until they are found guilty. The whole arrangement there is of a character that cannot last more than a year or two, and it will probably be abandoned the very moment the church gets the money out of it. I would rather give the church $20,000 in charity than to establish an institution of that sort to the detriment of a great many good people. I know nothing about the people who live near there; I do not know any of them; I never had seen Mr. Davidge until he appeared before us, but no man could hear him, no man could hear the statements of those people, without seeing that there is a wrong to that whole section of the city, and a wrong that can be remedied very easily by placing the police court on our own grounds in connection with our own buildings.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.
Mr. BUTLER. Is not Judiciary Square surrounded by the residences of citizens just as well as the present location of the police

Mr. BECK. Judiciary Square, as is known to every Senator, oc-

Mr. BECK. Judiciary Square, as is known to every Senator, occupies a great open space.

Mr. BUTLER. It is surrounded by the residences of citizens.

Mr. BECK. A building can be so erected there that the van which carries the vagabonds of the night before, for they are carried in a close van, can be driven inside of the gates with a wall keeping it from the public view, and where crowds will not stand gazing to see the persons taken there in the morning.

Mr. BUTLER. Do I understand the Senator to insist that every police court should be surrounded by a wall to keep it from view?

Mr. BECK. I mean to say that a police court ought to be kent in

Mr. BECK. I mean to say that a police court ought to be kept in such a shape that the prisoners will be secure, that the people of the neighborhood will not have their property injured by it. Every well adapted police court is put in a shape where it is the least effensive to the great mass of people.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to me that the locality to which the Senator property is presented as the court is put in a shape where it is the least effensive to the great mass of people.

tor proposes to remove the court is just as much exposed to that objection as the site now occupied.

Mr. BECK. The Senator must know that when that building is erected it can be so built, and at very little expense, as to exclude every possible chance of a citizen being offended by anything, and that in the present situation it is absolutely impossible that those conditions should exist.

conditions should exist.

Mr. BLAINE. If the Senator will permit an interruption, does he not know that one of the unsightly objects, and he is disposed to rate this among them, which Judiciary Square suffered from for many years was from having a jail upon it, built around with a high wall? That is one of the finest squares in the city and is destined to be the site probably of some of the most important buildings that the Government will not up to the factors of the most important from Konton Konton. ernment will put up in the future. Surely the Senator from Kentucky would not have that most splendid square in the city disfigured in the way that he speaks of. Of all the places in the world, he surely would not put the police court there.

Mr. BECK. I am not an architect, but I know very well that in the plan that was laid down the other day and submitted to us as a reason for paying $117,000 to extend the City Hall on that square where all court-houses can be provided for, gates can be made to the entrance, so that without any unsightly or unseemly object attached to it the view will be excluded, and where nothing will appear that will offend anybody, so that when men are discharged they can go without being run after, and when men are convicted they can be carried to the place of punishment without being followed and the streets of the city will not be blocked by people who are running after that class of cases, and the private property of nobody will be affected by it.

I take that view of the case, first, because there is a suit pending by I take that view of the case, first, because there is a suit pending by men living in that part of the city in the Supreme Court, and the lease runs for another year, and before it expires there will be ample time. Next, the bill vests the title, if it vests it at all, in the District commissioners, if we make the purchase under the arrangement which was made, and not in the United States. Again, we have ground of our own upon which we are proposing to make improvements for court-houses and for court purposes, where all men will agree that the police court can be put, and there is no sort of propriety in forcing this measure through now.

ing this measure through now.

Upon the question of valuation I desire to make a few statements.

Thomas E. Waggaman, (I do not know the gentleman, but I see his name as a real-estate agent all over the city,) being duly sworn, says:

I am a real-estate agent and auctioneer in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia; have been engaged in that business for the past thirteen years, and have a general knowledge of the values of real estate in this city. I know the property which is now used by the police court, situated at the corner of Sixth and D streets, northwest, in this city. In my opinion the said property is not worth to-day over $12,000 as an investment. I regard that as a fair price for it at this time for any purpose, and more than it would sell for at anction.

THOS. E. WAGGAMAN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of May, 1880.

CHARLES S. DRURY,

Notary Public.

I concur in the above as to valuation,

W. M. WRIGHT.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the date of Waggaman's affidavit?
Mr. BECK. The date of Waggaman's affidavit is to-day.
Mr. WITHERS. Ammunition collected for the purpose.
Mr. BECK. "Ammunition collected for the purpose," the Senator from Virginia says. I say the lobbyists have been around here to every Senator.

Mr. WITHERS. On both sides.

Mr. BECK. On both sides, if you please. These highly respectable people are seeking to protect their own property and their own homes against a nuisance, because under the former commissioners, some of whom did not have the best reputation, there was obtained what is called a lease, and now, under pretense of representing a church, it is sought to make the United States give money for property that the United States have interest in a while year. entrenty that the United States has no interest in; and while people are earnestly proceeding with a suit in the Supreme Court of the United States it is proposed to cut them off from the right to a decision, when the Government of the United States is providing ample means to secure accommodations for all these things on its own ground.

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, the real-

Mr. BUTLER. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, the real-estate agent who has sent this communication says that he would take that amount of money for this property if it had been his.

Mr. BECK. I read his affidavit word for word. He has been a real-estate agent for thirteen years and values the property at $12,000.

Mr. HOAR. Who was that?

Mr. BECK. Mr. Waggaman and Mr. Wright. Here are other statements which have been sent to me. Why they were sent to me I do not know, except that I opposed this measure upon public grounds. I opposed buying an old church to oblige anybody, or because anybody's wife or anybody's kin is seeking to make a speculation out of it. I opposed it because it was oppressive to a large number of people. I opposed it because it was not certain the District could use it after we bought it, but might have to abandon it.

Mr. BUTLER. Does the Senator object because the money goes to a church?

a church ?

Mr. BECK. If I have anything to give to a church, I will give it, and I reckon I have given as much as the Senator from South Caro-

Mr. BUTLER. More.

Mr. BECK. And perhaps more. That interruption is hardly worth answering. I received other papers upon the subject from very highly respectable men. I have stated what Mr. Davidge said, and, by the way, here is the protest of Mr. Dent:

The following is an extract from the minutes of the board of commissioners, District of Columbia of November 17, 1879:
"Commissioner Dent—

One of the present commissioners-entered the following protest in connection with the estimates for the District government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881; and the secretary was directed to place the same in the minutes of the board: 'I object to the item of $20,000 for purchase of the property now occupied by the police court, but am willing it shall go before the Secretary of the Treasury and Congress for consideration.' "WILLIAM TINDALL, Secretary."

There is the protest of one of the present commissioners entered of record against this very appropriation.

Mr. HARRIS. The president of the board.
Mr. BECK. The president of the board. He came before us and said: "I objected to it then; I am opposed to it now; but I yield because my associates differ with me." All along he told us he was opposed to it, and here is the record in evidence of his opposition; and yet the Senator from Ohio thinks it is an outrage that we shall not vote the $20,000 in the face of all these facts.

Mr. HURMAN. I used no such words.
Mr. BECK. Well, the Senator thinks it is a great wrong and a want of faith to the church. I believe those are the correct words.

Mr. EATON. I should like to ask my friend if I understood him correctly as saying that Mr. Dent appeared before the committee and protested against this purchase?

Mr. BECK. I did not say that he did.

Mr. EATON. I understood the Senator to say so.

Mr. BECK. No, sir; I produced his written protest, and I said that I spoke to Mr. Dent and others had spoken to him. He said that was his opinion then and now.

Mr. EATON. He did not so state to the committee, however.
Mr. BECK. He said to me it was his opinion now. I think the present chairman of the committee will say that he stated it was his opinion now. This protest was entered upon the record.
Mr. WITHERS. The Senator is stating what occurred in commit-

I have not said what occurred in committee; I am speaking of what Mr. Dent said to me and what he put on record, to the effect that he was opposed to this proposition, and no man can deny the fact that he is opposed to it.

Here is another paper from a man by the name of Ruppert:

In reference to the property on the corner of Sixth and D streets, I would state in my opinion it could not be sold for over $10,000—the property now occupied by the police court.

Here is another one, from Mr. Barbour, of Barbour & Hamilton, commission merchants:

In reply to your inquiry as to the present value of the property on the corner of Sixth and D Streets, northwest, now occupied by the police court, I have to say that in my opinion it could not be sold for over $12,000 cash.

Mr. Keyser, receiver of the German-American National Bank, values the property, without the building, at nine or ten thousand dollars. He says:

I do not in this estimate include the building, for the reason that it is worthless for general business purposes, cannot readily be altered, and the cost of taking down would be about equal to the value of the materials. I think it would be difficult to find a purchaser even at the price above named.

A good deal has been said about a man by the name of Wilson, a man I never saw until he came to me to protest against this action being taken. I was advised that he had offered $18,000 for the property after he had said that it was not worth over $14,000. I said to him, "Why this contradiction?" He sent me a letter on the subject. I have no personal feeling about this thing in any form, and care nothing about it except to see fair play.

Mr. WITHERS. You are angry.

Mr. BECK. No. I am the most unfortunate man. If I speak with the least bit of earnestness, gentlemen say I am angry. I never saw this man Wilson; I never saw the building until this morning; I never saw anything connected with it except its obvious uselessness. Nobody can look at it without seeing that it is obviously unfit for the purpose. Nobody can examine it without saying so.

Mr. BUTLER. The commissioners ag it is fit.

Mr. BECK. The commissioners I do not think say any such thing. There is the protest of Mr. Dent, one of them. Here is what Mr. Wilson said as to $18,000 being offered. His note is dated yesterday, for I wanted to know what he meant by saying that it was worth but $14,000 when he had offered $18,000 for the property:

I understand that a statement is in circulation to the effect that the sum of man I never saw until he came to me to protest against this action

Dut $14,000 when he had offered $18,000 for the property:

I understand that a statement is in circulation to the effect that the sum of $18,000 was offered in the year 1877 for the property at the corner of Sixth street and Louisiana avenue, now occupied by the police court.

In respect to such statement I desire to say that such an offer was made by a combination of the property-holders in the neighborhood, of whom I was one, for the sole purpose of protecting our property from the nuisance of the police court, for the establishment of which on the property in question the commissioners had taken or were about to take the lease, and with a full knowledge on our part that we were paying five or six thousand dollars more than the value of the property. We were willing to submit to the sacrifice simply in order to prevent a greater one, and any assertion to the effect that the offer represented the value of the property or was other than an offer coerced by the necessity of saving our property is wholly devoid of truth.

I have seen plenty of men coerced in the same way; and so has every Senator. They believed they could sell it for a law-school to the trustees of Georgetown College for $12,000, and by buying it for that purpose they could avoid its use as a police court. They resorted to an injunction. They have now appealed to the Supreme Court. They have got leading lawyers of the city pressing an appeal before that court, and it is pending now. It is not known whether they will be sustained, but they are willing to pay out of their own pockets five or six thousand dollars more than the property is worth in order to get away what is regarded as a great nuisance; for everybody knows it is a nuisance. When in the effort to save themselves they were willing to pay more than the property is worth and sell it to a were willing to pay more than the property is worth and sell it to a corporation that would not be a nuisance, at a loss of $6,000, then we are told we have got to give $20,000 in face of all these facts because some church wants the money.

Mr. EATON. Does my friend know how much the assessed value is and what the taxes are that are laid upon the property?

Mr. BECK. I have never seen the tax list.

Mr. EATON. I propose to show to the Senator that the assessed value for taxation is $18,790.

Mr. BECK. I have never seen the tax list. Is there any tax paid upon it at all?

Mr. EATON. I have not examined the tax list myself. The as-

Mr. EATON. I have not examined the tax list myself. The assessed value of the property upon which taxes are to be laid is

Mr. WITHERS. I have an official copy of the estimate here which

Mr. WITHERS. I have an omeial copy of the estimate less than I propose to submit to the Senate.

Mr. BECK. I have no doubt if necessary it could have been assessed for $50,000, so as to have Congress give $50,000 for it. I have one other letter here which I have not read. I received it to-day; it is dated yesterday, from Mr. Davidge, and addressed to Mr. ATKINS, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives:

Dear Sir: I have been requested to wait on your committee this morning to explain the grounds upon which the purchase by the Government of the lot at the corner of Sixth and Louisiana avenue in this city for a police court is opposed. But my engagements in court do not permit me to leave. I understand it has been represented to your committee that all opposition to the purchase had been withdrawn. There is no shadow of foundation for such representation, if it has been made. The appeal of the property-holders is now pending in the Supreme Court of the United States. The purchase of the property by the Government will of course prevent judicial determination of their rights. The power of the commissioners to lease the property, and the propriety of the exercise of such power, if it existed, were fully discussed during the last Congress before the Committee on the District of Columbia of the House, and the report of that committee on the District of Columbia of the commissioners in respect both of power and propriety will put you in possession of all the considerations of law and fact that belong to the subject. Apart from the injustice to the neighboring property holders, the property is too small for the purpose, and the price proposed to be paid is far beyond its value. Under the lease the commissioners reserved the right of purchase at any time during the lease. There is no obligation to purchase, and the privilege does not expire until June, 1881. Besides, the Senate has by bill now pending in your House appropriated $117,000 for the extension of the City Hall, and the police court can readily be accommodated in such extension without being a nuisance to the neighborhood.

Very respectfully, yours, WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4, 1880.

To Hon. J. D. C. Atkins, Chairman Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator let me ask him, does the letter

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator let me ask him, does the letter state that the present lease runs until a year from next June?

Mr. BECK. It does; it runs until June, 1881, and the same right extends all through next year to make this purchase. That would give ample time to the property-holders to have their case decided in the Supreme Court. It would give ample time to ascertain what can be done with the $117,000 that we have voted to build improvements on our own land, and at the same time if it is determined to buy this property it would give time to make such arrangement that the United States may have some title to it after we pay the $20,000, instead of none, as is proposed now. instead of none, as is proposed now.

I have here the report of the District Committee of the House of

I have here the report of the District Committee of the House of Representatives, signed by A. S. Williams, J. C. S. Blackburn, E. J. Henkle, Gabriel Bouck, William Claffin, Eppa Hunton, Hiester Clymer, and Lorenzo Brentano, protesting against the action of the commissioners in taking possession of this property or attempting to buy it and fasten a nuisance upon the neighborhood. Among other things the committee say.

Among other things the committee say:

The committee do not propose to impute to the commissioners any improper motives or designs, but simply assert that their action in the premises is not, in the judgment of the committee, to be defended or sustained either upon the score of expediency or warrant of law.

While the property-holders are pressing their rights before the House and before the Supreme Court, in the face of all these facts and in contravention of them all, with the protest of Mr. Dent against it, more than a year in advance of the time when there will be any necessity for action, we are asked now to pay $20,000; and the amendment of the committee fixing $14,000 is to be voted down as a wrong to some church!

Mr. TELLER. I want to ask the Senator a question. In the lease is there any provision how the value of this property shall be arrived

Mr. BECK. No; there is none as far as I have seen the lease. The report of the committee of the House sets forth the fact that the commissioners have the property for four years from the 1st of June, 1877, with a right to purchase during the first year at $18,000, the second year at $19,000, and the third year and fourth year at $20,000. The commissioners have that right; but the United States nowhere has any title or right to it, although we are required to pay half the money.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand, if the Senator will permit me, that when the lease was made it was agreed by the commissioners that the purchase could be made for $20,000 that year, and that was expressed in the lease. That is my information.

Mr. BECK. No, sir. We had the option for four years as stated in this report at $18,000, $19,000, and $20,000.

Mr. HOAR. The title taken by this public board would certainly be a title to the use of the United States and entirely in the control of Congress.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not sure about that.
Mr. BLAINE. The economic side of this question I suppose is the proper one to regard and discuss upon an appropriation bill. I am moved to say that I do not believe Congress closely enough scrutinizes or thoroughly appreciates the large amount of money that is paid out for rent of buildings occupied for public uses. It is a very large item in the city of Washington, and one that when you come to examine it will cause a good deal of surprise, that largely as we build, extended as the accommodations grow for the public service, there is still such a large number of outlying buildings used. Take this case: here is a building on which taxes are remitted and on which insurance is paid, amounting I suppose at a moderate estimate to $300 on the building, and then $1,500 a year are paid for rent, making $1,800, which on a valuation of $20,000 is 9 per cent. that we are paying when money in the hands of the United States is in millions and hundreds of millions handled at 4 per cent. If we do not purchase this building I venture to remind the Senator from Kentucky that it will go on year in and year out at $1,500 a year, with taxes and insurance, and that we shall rent it until we shall have paid out more, interest included and allowed for, than we can have the fee-simple of it for to-day.

That is a mere question of economic consideration. I venture to say that that would have been the result, and will no doubt hereafter be the result, in the case of almost any building that the United States rents. It would be a wise thing to take it in fee-simple from the day of its first occupancy and pay down on a fair and even a liberal cash valuation, viewed simply as a question of dollars and cents to the Treasury.

to the Treasury.

This is not a large amount of money; it is rather a small amount of money. When you come to regard a public building according as public buildings usually cost at the hands of the United States this public buildings usually cost at the hands of the United States this is rather a trivial affair; but trivial as it may be in a moneyed point of view it will largely outrun by its annual rental in a very short time the expenditure now required to be paid for it at $20,000. Viewing it simply, and I argue it only from that point, as an economic question, the United States, I am very sure, would be very much better off to-day to take this building and pay for it and own it than it will be a learn renting it in this year.

ter off to-day to take this building and pay for it and own it than it will be to keep renting it in this way.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire simply to make a remark in reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine on the line of economy. This building I understand is a very old and a very dilapidated building. In a few years Congress will be called upon to provide a building on this or on some other spot for the police court. This building, in the condition I understand it to be, will not answer the purposes of that court for many years. I have no doubt that upon the line of economy it will be much better for us to reject this application and to erect a building, rather than to buy this one and pay $20,000 for the ground upon which you would soon have an application to erect a new building for this court.

While I am on my feet I will say that a year or two ago, at the While I am on my feet I will say that a year or two ago, at the time this lease was made, and about the time these legal proceedings were being instituted, I heard persons residing in that neighborhood, and among others Mr. Davidge, who has been referred to in this debate, speak of the great detriment the establishment of a police court there would be to that neighborhood and to the property-holders. He lived at that time, I believe, in the immediate neighborhood. I heard that there was a very general complaint and I think now as he lived at that time, I believe, in the immediate neighborhood. I heard that there was a very general complaint, and I think now, as the citizens have instituted proceedings in the court to arrest, if possible, this proposed action of establishing a police court there, we should be acting unjustly to those persons who have instituted proceedings for the protection of their property if we interfered by an act of Congress and deprived them of their legal remedy.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator from Delaware a question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. As is very well known to every member of this hody.

Mr. HOAR. As is very well known to every member of this body, on the corner of Judiciary Square and D street there is a great open space going into Louisiana avenue. Now my question is, leaving out the Judiciary Square itself, which the Senator from Kentucky suggested, suppose that ought not to be appropriated to a police court, is there any other site in the city of Washington which the Senator can think of which would injure the adjacent property-holders less than this one, where the adjacent buildings are used mainly for lawyers' offices now?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have not the slightest idea but what there are locations south of Pennyslvania avenue upon which a police court could be established that would prove of no detriment to any-court could be established that would prove of no detriment to anybody, and would not injure the value of the property of anybody.

Mr. HOAR. Is not the judgment of the District commissioners pretty important in regard to a proper site for a police court?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understand all about that. I understand that at the time this lease was made one of the considerations for entering into the lease was that it was for the benefit of a church which had been established there which wished to build a new edifice. I have a very high regard for churches of all denominations, and would be perfectly willing to see all of them get rid of their old property fairly, but I am not ready, for the purpose of relieving a church, to see old property belonging to any church bought for the purpose of converting it into a police court to the detriment of the citizens who reside in that neighborhood, when we have property of our own upon which that neighborhood, when we have property of our own upon which we can erect at as little cost as this building will be, a proper building for the police court to be held in.

I know that that was a few years ago the sentiment of the people in that neighborhood, because I was brought in contact with them. in that neighborhood, because I was brought in contact with them. I heard then that they considered it a great detriment to their property, and that it might result in driving persons who had a residence in that neighborhood out of the neighborhood, because of the annoyance that would be created to their families by the presence of a police court in that vicinity.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Delaware allow me to ask him one other question?

Mr. SAULSBURY. In a moment. Apart from every other consideration, as these people feeling themselves aggrieved have sought their remedy in the court, and the case is now pending and undecided in the court, as I understand from the letter of Mr. Davidge, which was read a few moments ago, I say it would be an act of injustice to those people to step in by an act of Congress and deprive them of the legal remedies which they are seeking in a proper and legal way. Suppose that I were a party to this proceeding. Suppose I had property in that immediate neighborhood. Believing that my property was to be damaged and rendered inconvenient for my residence, suppose I had incurred the expense of taking legal proceedings to have the question decided in the court, should I not think it a very gratuitous act on the part of Congress to step in to deprive me of the legal remedy which I had sought for the protection of my property? I ask any Senator on this floor to apply the case to himself and say whether he would be willing to have his rights divested by an act of Congress when he was seeking in a proper and lawful way to protect himself against injury? In my opinion, there is not a single Senator on this floor, situated as these complainants are in the case, but what would regard it just as I regard it, as a gratuitous act, one uncalled for, and one that would do injustice to him.

For my part, however much I value the churches, however much I

For my part, however much I value the churches, however much I am willing to extend all proper aid to them by way of purchase of their old property when they can get better, I am not willing to do it at the sacrifice of private rights. I say that if I were in the situation of these property-holders I would not like to see the same rules applied to me. I have nothing against the purchase of this property for any proper use the Government has for it at the proper time and for a proper purpose; but I am unwilling to see it purchased now or at any time hereafter for the purpose of establishing a police court there, when I am satisfied by evidence that is here all around me that it would greatly damnify the property in the immediate neighborhood and render it inconvenient as a place of residence for persons who own the adjacent property, especially as we have a location of our own upon which we can erect the court, if we see proper, where it will not injure the property of any person if we see fit to so erect it out of money in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. WITHERS. I wish to make a statement on behalf of the committee, in view of the criticism which has been cast on their report, but I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very sure I have made no criticism on the committee.

Mr. WITHERS. No, sir.
Mr. THURMAN. A very few words, Mr. President, and I do not wish to take up much of the time of the Senate on this subject. The Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Delaware have both insisted that Congress ought not to make this appropriation, because certain property-holders in the vicinity of the building which it is proposed to purchase have filed a bill to obtain an injunction. What what is the injunction asked for I do not know; I am not informed. When I put the question to my friend from Kentucky to know whether it was possible that Mr. Davidge, one of the most distinguished lawyers and practitioners before the Supreme Court of the United States, had actually and seriously asked the court to grant him an injunction against the use of a building as a police court on the ground that that would be a nuisance, such a nuisance as a court the ground that that would be a huisance, such a huisance as a court of equity could abate by injunction, I was told no, that was not it. However, the whole argument goes upon that ground; and yet the Senator from Kentucky immediately saw that such an astounding proposition as that amounted to nothing more nor less than this, that you should have no police court at all, because if this police court would be a nuisance at the corner of Sixth street and Louisiana averaged. nue it would be a nuisance anywhere else, and every police court in every city in the United States would be a nuisance abatable by the mandate of a chancellor. Mr. Davidge never could have done any such thing as that seriously. I can imagine that he has filed a bill to obtain an injunction upon the ground that the District commissioners had no right to make the purchase; that they had transcended their powers in taking the lease, perhaps. That I can conceive of; but I never can conceive that that able lawyer ever asked the Supreme Court of the United States or any other court to say that the police court was per se a nuisance to be abated by an injunction in

Mr. BECK. Will my friend allow me to say a word?
Mr. THURMAN. Certainly.
Mr. BECK. When the Senator from Ohio asked me whether Mr. Davidge had taken an appeal on the ground that it was a nuisance, I said to him no, that the decision in bane was against the decision of Judge Wylie who put it on the question of legal right. The court in banc said they could not consider the question of nuisance. I said that an appeal was pending in the Supreme Court of the United States upon the question of legal right, not upon the question of nuisance; and I said the court in banc had beld that they could not take jurisdiction of the question of nuisance, all through the responses I made.

Mr. THURMAN. So I understood the Senator.
Mr. BECK. Then why argue now that I had alleged that Mr. Davidge had said any such thing?
Mr. THURMAN. I did not say he had said so. I said just otherwise; that he repudiated any such idea.

Well, then, upon what ground is an injunction asked which should delay our proceedings in this matter? Simply on the ground that the District commissioners had no authority to make the purchase. That decides nothing. Suppose the injunction were granted and made perpetual on the ground that we have not yet given them power to make this purchase; how does that affect the question whether or not we ought to make the purchase? If we have not given the power to make it heretofore, if it is right and proper to give them the power to make it now, we ought to give them the power wholly irrespective of this injunction. But here the supreme court of the District has decided that there is no case for an injunction, and I can very well conceive that they decided that correctly; because I do not very well see that it was for a private man to come in and obtain an injunction on the ground that the commissioners had transcended their powers in contracting for a public building, it would be a matter calling on the Government to interfere.

But, Mr. President, let us pass that and come to the merits of the case. Is a police court building a nuisance? Where are the great police court buildings in the city of New York? I have seen several of them; I have gone through them from top to bottom as a matter of curiosity; and more quiet and orderly places I never saw right in the heart of the city, surrounded by buildings and by business houses. Take the largest city in the State of Ohio, Cincinnati, and where is the count? Picht in the City Public of Nickels and the city of the city. police court? Right in the City Building on Ninth street, if I recollect aright, in the heart of the city surrounded by private dwellings and by business houses; and yet nobody ever thought of calling that a nuisance. Take New Haven, as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. EATON] suggests, where it is in the public square. Take my own city of Columbus where the police court, until within a few months, was held in the city building in which is the post-office. Up until within two months the police court was held in the city building fronting the public square in the thickest has increased and the city building the public square in the thickest has increased and the city building the public square in the thickest has increased and the city building the public square in the thickest has increased and the city building the public square in the thickest has increased and the city building the public square in the thickest has increased and the city building the public square in the thickest has increased and the city building the public square in the thickest has increased and the city building the city building the city building the city building the public square in the city building fronting the public square in the thickest business part of the city, with a private residence in the thickest business part of the city, with a private residence in the next block to it and other private residences in the vicinity; and in that public building were the chambers of the common council, and was the city post-office, the city clerk's office, the city surveyor's office, and the offices of all the branches of the government of the city. That was where the people went every day of their lives and every night of their lives for years and years to get their mail; and I venture to say that I never saw the least disturbance there.

How is it here in this city? I am assured by a gentleman who was chief of the police of this city that there has been no disturbance at all at this police court.

If Senators will reflect what kind of a plot of ground this is, they will see that you can hardly find a place in this city so suitable. It is just at the intersection of Sixth street with Louisiana avenue, and as Louisiana avenue runs diagonally it makes a large triangle, leaving a larger open space before that building than there is before any building I know of in the city of Washington. Louisiana avenue is a very wide avenue; but there is in addition to the width of Louisiand avenue another piece of ground crossed by one of the streets which comes into Louisiana avenue, making a large triangle in front of this building and more completely isolating the building than almost any building that I know in this city of a public character. Then, on Louisiana avenue what are the buildings? Almost entirely buildings occupied by law offices or the like. I do not know that there is, from Fifth street to Sixth street, on Louisiana avenue, on the north side, one single private dwelling. If there is it has escaped my observation entirely.

Then, why should not this place be taken? The Senator from Kentucky says take Judiciary Square. We cannot take Judiciary Square without disturbing five times as many holders of private property. Look at the beautiful buildings all along Fourth street east of Judiciary Square, private dwellings, all of them beautiful buildings. Look then at the houses on Fifth street on the west side of Judiciary Square, schools, lawyers' offices, private dwellings. The Senator proposes to set down the police court, which he describes as a nuisance, in such a neighborhood as that, and fence it in with a great thick stone wall like the wall around the Bastile in order to keep everything that takes place within it from offending the noses and asthetic feelings of the people of that neighborhood. No, Mr. President, that won't do at all.

The Senator seems to think there is some speculation here, or a gratuity or something in behalf of a church; and although the Senator is friendly to churches, as we all are, though not quite as friendly as we ought to be, yet that idea has got into his head and that this church wants to take some advantage of the Government of the United States. Mr. President, I do not profess to be authorized to speak for churches; it would be great presumption on my part if I should attempt to speak for churches; but this I do say, knowing well the men who are the ruling men in that church and who govern its affairs, that if there are any men on the face of this earth who would be appropriate and it would be an architecture at affairs, that if there are any men on the face of this earth who would scorn to do an unchristian act—and it would be an unchristain act to cheat the Government—these are the men. No, sir, there is nothing of that kind at all. This is a plain, honest proposition to be determined upon its own merits, and upon its own merits alone. There is no job in it, not the least of it in the world, and I hope the Senate will not fail to stand by the House and rejecting this amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will take the bill as it came from

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. President, if I am correctly informed I differ with my friend, the Senator from Ohio. I understand that the church which once occupied this building has removed to a place near to his residence nice new one, and I have felt better ever since.

They did not move the old building, but built a Mr. THURMAN.

Mr. HEREFORD. 1 sympathize with my friend very much. They have improved his property by going and building a nice church alongside of his house. It is very convenient to him, and I hope he attends it every Sabbath. But if it was proposed to take that building which they have just erected near him and make a police court out of it, I am sure the Senator from Ohio would leave there just as soon as he could move out of it. I know the old building; I pass by it once a week every week; and I know it to be a fact that the ladies and the families who live in that neighborhood, when they want to go from their residences down to Pennsylvania avenue, have to cross to the opposite side of the street rather than pass through the crowds of idle loafers who are there, and brought there from idle curiosity. Will you tell me that it is no nuisance? All any Senator has to do is to go there and on some days that have brought curious people there, when some of these disgusting trials that have taken place were going on, the negroes gathered there blocked up the whole street by hundreds. The wives and daughters of the residents cannot even go to Pennsylvania avenue without crossing to the opposite side of the street.

The Senator from Ohio ridicules the idea that such a fine lawyer as Mr. Davidge would incorporate in a bill for an injunction the allegation that a police court was a nuisance. Well, I do not see any very great want of legal knowledge for him to incorporate that. The question whether this or that is a nuisance is a question of fact. If it should not even be a nuisance in law, the question is whether it is so in fact or not. Some of the Senators who have spoken on this subject say that you must not put this building on Judiciary Square; you must not put it upon some of the public property of the Government, because it would damage it. These Senators are unwilling to damage the public property by putting a police court on it, but they are willing to damage private property. I do not think that is very sound logic. Mr. President, if you put it upon Judiciary Square, it sound logic. Air. Fresident, if you put it upon Judiciary Square, it will be hundreds of feet from any residence, private or public, and if it did incommode people when put on Judiciary Square, if it did incommode the residences and schools there, they are in a very different position from what these gentlemen are. When anybody puts up a building, public or private, adjacent to or around any of the public squares, he takes the chances of the consequences. He knew that the resemble research. that that was public property; that it was dedicated for public uses, and that at any time the Government had the right to put any kind of a building there, and he took the risk. When a man builds around any of these public squares he takes the risk of a jail being put there, a police station, or a police court, or anything else that the Government chooses to erect there. Not so with these people here who are not on a public square. It is very different with them. They are in a very different position. If any Senator will go there and see this police court and then look at these people's residences north of it running along Sixth street, he will see very soon that it is a nuisance, and the question is not an economical question at all, as the Senator from Maine has suggested. It is a question of right to these private citizens who are living there.

Will you do this? The Government has plenty of public property.

Why go on and invest the money of the Government in the purchase of private property for such a purpose as this when it has any amount of acres, and acres that are unused? Why not take some of the public property, and in that way we can be economical. If we are to act from an economical stand-point, the economy comes in there, not to buy a an economical stand-point, the economy comes in there, not to buy a private property, but to use the public property the General Government already has. These people are here protesting against this purchase. They ask the Senate in its magnanimity not to do this thing, and I hope the Senate will not do it. We have plenty of public property elsewhere—Judiciary Square or elsewhere—and let the police court be built on that. Every Senator who occupies a seat on this floor knows that he, as a Senator, would not like to have a police court in a great city like this adjacent to his private residence. There is not a Senator on this floor who would not protest against it. Then I call on the Senate to act by these private citizens who live in that immediate neighborhood as they would like to be done by. I repeat that there is not a Senator on this floor who would not enter his protest here against it in the vicinity of his own residence.

The Senator from Ohio said that in the city of New York they have police stations. Yes, but not with private residences around them, I suspect. In the city of my friend from Connecticut it was said the police court was on the public square or fronting the public square of that city. That is exactly where it ought to front on, the public of that city. That is exactly where it ought to front on, the public square. Put this building where there are buildings devoted to business, stores, warehouses, things of that kind, and do not put it right in the midst of where families live, where the wives and daughters of these gentlemen live, and have to pass around it or about it or through these crowds of people every time they wish to go to the great thoroughfare of the city. Go there during some of the beastly trials that have taken place this winter, some of them disgusting in the average and see the hundreds of people that are there then and the extreme, and see the hundreds of people that are there then, and answer the question would you like your family to be thus located?

I will vote to strike out every dollar of this item; not only to strike the sum down to $14,000, but every dollar of it, because if you pass the fourteen-thousand-dollar clause by the provisions of the bill you get the property for police headquarters. Senators have talked about a breach of faith; they say it would be mala fides to refuse this appropriation. There is no contract on the part of the General Government to buy this property; it is at their option to buy it or not within

I am opposed to the amendment of the committee, but I will vote for that rather than take the other. I will vote to strike out every dollar proposed to be appropriated for this purchase.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, when the honorable Senator from Ohio treats a question of religion or theology, I should never be venturesome enough to differ with him; and when it turns out that this congregation has renounced its church on Louisiana avenue and built a fine church very near him, I congratulate him. I hope it will have an evangelizing and ameliorating effect on him and more especially upon his politics. But when the honorable Senator from Ohio lays down the proposition which I understood him to announce as one touching the law of nuisance, I will venture with great respect to dissent entirely from what he says.

The honorable Senator from Ohio said—I think I quote his language—that if a police court was a nuisance in this place, it was a nuisance in any other place, thereby meaning that the test of a nuisance is what it is, regardless of where it is. I do not understand that to be the law at all. A brick-yard is in and of itself not a nuithat to be the law at all. A brick-yard is in and of itself not a nulsance; it is an example of a very needed and wholesome industry; but I take that illustration because it has fallen within my personal observation that a very well conducted court said, and another court on appeal affirmed, that a brick-yard was a nuisance in a given place and not in a thickly occupied place at all. So a fat-boiling establishment is not in and of itself a nuisance; but a constituent of mine some years ago undertook to boil fat in rather an outlying place in the city of New York and the court said that although there was no end of places where fat-boiling might be carried on, fat-boiling carried on at that place was, not in the abstract but in the concrete, a nuisance, and they enjoined and abated it.

I am not now upon the question whether a police court in and of itself is a nuisance; but I think the Senator can scarcely maintain of a police court or of anything else, harmless or harmful, that if it is a nuisance in one place it must necessarily be a nuisance somewhere else. And, Mr. President, if Mr. Davidge, who deserves, I believe, the commendation he has received as a lawyer, filed a bill in which he put, among other things, an allegation that this police court was there a nuisance, I am not prepared on the face of the papers, as my learned friend behind me [Mr. Carpenter] sometimes says, to say that that discredits him as a lawyer, although I should be rather sur-prised if he bottomed his bill on that idea alone, because in these cases a great many other grounds may enter and customarily do enter into such a question,—grounds growing out of municipal regulations, growing out of the terms on which people bought ground, sometimes only on the plot shown them in advance on which they bought which established for them certain equities and vested rights which go to nourish and support a bill filed to restrain the devotion or diversion of the property to certain unacceptable uses. How it may be in this case I only know from the Senator from Kentucky who says that this bill stated the radical ground that the parties had no right whatever, before coming to the question whether it would be a nuisance or not, to devote this property to any such purpose. Well, if the facts up-hold the bill, that I should think would be a pretty good ground in a court of equity or in a court of law on which such a bill might stand. Then I can see, as the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Delaware have said, that there may be very substantial ground in respect of this branch of the subject which we ought to regard before we interpose and oust the court of this case and undertake to say peremptorily that this police court shall be planted and kept in this particular spot. But now I turn away from that branch of the sub-ject to speak of one or two other things which have struck me very much. The other day the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] reported a bill or an amendment giving $117,000 to be expended on Judiciary Square. How expended? Expended leaving the City Hall there now to stand; and I may say that I had then and have now great doubt whether that was a wise thing to do. Be that as it may, there stands a somewhat commodious, somewhat dilapidated, and somewhat ungainly building which has always until this time accommodated the courts of the District. One hundred and seventeen thousand dollars is to be expended in carrying back or out from it, as I understand, commodious wings, into which wings the present courts are to move and hold their sittings when it is completed. Now I should say, and I think I should feel a good deal of confidence in saying, that unless that building is to be occupied in some mode dif-ferent from that of which we know, unless there is to be some considerable additional occupation of it, the deserted chambers of the City Hall, the chambers from which the court and the officers of the court are to be removed will leave ample room for the police court.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me?
Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.
Mr. THURMAN. There is not a single one of the rooms in that building that is to be abandoned; no court-room is to be abandoned.

and no office is to be abandoned.

Mr. CONKLING. I did not say the rooms were to be abandoned. I only said that the court is to be moved out of them.
Mr. THURMAN. No, sir.
Mr. CONKLING. Then I will appeal to the honorable Senator from Vermont to know whether I do not quote him correctly in a statement he made the other day—

Mr. MORRILL. I do not know what the Senator quotes.

Mr. CONKLING. I understood the Senator from Vermont to say that the present accommodations were insufficient and uncomfortable, and that these new wings were to be put upon the City Hall in order that the courts and the officers of the courts might be there accommodated. Did not the Senator says of Mr. MORRILL. I do not remember the precise phraseology used by me, but it was to give additional accommodations for the courts.

As I understand they need more court-rooms because the courts now have not enough rooms to accommodate the different courts while they are in session. They are divided; two or three judges will be holding court in one room and two or three perhaps in another, and there will not be more than sufficient room, as I understand, to accommodate the courts when these two additional court-rooms are constructed

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to inquire what are to

Mr. CONKLING. Will the Senator allow me to inquire what are to be the dimensions of these wings? I think he gave them the other day.

Mr. MORRILL. I have not the dimensions. The plan adds something like seventy feet on the north side, and a portion of these rooms will be used for additional jury-rooms and for additional offices for the holding of the records. The rooms will be made fire-proof in order to protect the records.

Mr. CONKLING. And there are to be two wings?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir, merely one addition right straight through from one side to the other.

Mr. CONKLING. Projecting north?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator know the width?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes.
Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator know the width?
Mr. MORRILL. I think about seventy feet.

Mr. MORRILL. I think about seventy feet.
Mr. CONKLING. What is the depth?
Mr. MORRILL. I do not remember.
Mr. CONKLING. Now, Mr. President, it turns out that, without any reason except the additional number of judges and the subdivision into which the court is to be divided, a building seventy feet in width and the depth of which the Senator cannot give, is to be constructed. I say again, feeling well warranted in saying, that as far as we can judge at all, we can judge that accommodations no more extensive than are needed by a police court can be found in the same story or some corner of this building so greatly enlarged as it is to be:

Now, let me suppose I am mistaken about that. The Senator from Delaware said—and he need not have said it, because nearly every member of the Senate passes and repasses this place frequently—that the present building is old, unsuited and not available for this purthe present building is old, unsuited and not available for this purpose; and I shall be greatly surprised in case this plan succeeds if any considerable space of time elapses before somebody comes here with an application for an appropriation to erect on this ground a new building that will be durable and will be suitable. So I regard this as paying so much a square foot—that is the way land is sold here—for this ground regardless of the building.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator will allow me to say that I am assured by one of the commissioners, who was the chief of police for a long time here and who knows all the improvements that have been made on this building, that the building is a very large building, and will last for a long time, probably fifty years—a solid, square, honestly built church.

built church.

Mr. CONKLING. I would not dare to put my judgment as an expert against this unnamed commissioner who seems to have expressed himself very enthusiastically to the Senator from Ohio; but I undertake to say that if the Senators who are here and who go to the other end of the town will look at that building as they pass it to-day and remember that it has been stated to the Senate that it would be good and good for this purpose for fifty years, credit it, it ought to be said of them as was said once before: There is no such faith; no, not in

Mr. THURMAN. There is nothing remarkable in its being able to stand fifty years. I should not be surprised if it would be good for five hundred years, for the oldest structures in this world are built of

Mr. CONKLING. Since the church has been moved up next door to the Senator his faith has evidently greatly enlarged. [Laughter.] He is able now to believe what is going to happen five hundred years from now; and I hope if that church remains there and he attends it as regularly as I hope he does, being at least thrice every Sunday, that his faith will extend to five thousand years before his term in that his faith will extend to five thousand years before his term in this body expires.

But with the limited vision that I have and with some knowledge of this building which I have looked at very often, my attention being sometimes attracted to it in the way the Senator from West Virginia has suggested, by a very large and motley collection of people about there, I believe that it will answer this purpose but a very short time and that in the march of progress very soon, if this is done, an approprition will be made to take away this building and put up one larger and better conformed to modern notions and modern improvements.

It seems that the lease which we have, or under which we are occupying it, extends for a year from next June. Would it not be well to wait until the new seventy-foot building has been run back northward on Judiciary Square and see what the accommodations are there, ward on Judiciary Square and see what the accommodations are there, and in the mean time allow these people to ascertain their rights and confirm or correct their prejudices against this alleged nuisance? It seems to me it would, economically and every other way. If somebody else were to take possession of this property, if the question was whether we should get it now or never, and the building was right suitable, and there was no objection to the site, I could see that a nimble huver might profit himself by set being the latest that the first set. suitable, and there was no objection to the site, I could see that a nimble buyer might profit himself by not being too late; but I do not believe that this property is to go like hot cakes, that unless we speak at once we cannot get it at all. On the contrary, all the chances of the future seem to be in our favor, if this is allowed to stand; and, therefore, with the knowledge that I have been able to derive from this debate, I shall vote to allow the lease to go on, to allow these people to settle their rights, if they have any, to allow Congress to determine whether the large addition already provided for in the City Hall building will not accommodate the police court and dispose of this whole question. whole question.

The honorable Senator from Ohio made one remark about Judiciary Square, which I noted. He asked, would it not be a great annoyance to have this police court on Judiciary Square? I answer with little hesitation, no. If the courts of the District are to continue to be held there, attracting, as they do, very considerable crowds, making it no easy matter oftentimes to traverse that sidewalk and impossible to do so except by making one's way through a crowd,—if that is to go on the additional attraction of Congress and standers-by and spectators, which will come from having the police court there also will be rather fanciful than serious or appreciable. In other words, people who own property near Judiciary Square, near the City Hall, will be no worse off if the police court was removed into the basement of that building than they are now. I do not think there would be any change that anybody could notice to his serious detriment.

So I think that that objection is disposed of; and take it all around the limit of the country of

I believe it a good deal safer to cut and try to go along and see what comes out of this; what rights these people have in court, and what provision, if any, turns out in the end to be necessary.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President—

Mr. WITHERS. Mr. President, I should like very much to state that I am more anxious to dispose of the bill than to make any research is righted.

marks in vindication of the action of the committee; but the Senator marks in vindication of the action of the committee; but the Senator from Tennessee has risen.

Mr. HARRIS. No matter. I want to get through with the bill.

Mr. WITHERS. I wish merely to state, in vindication of the action of the committee in this matter, that they had no knowledge whatever of any interest churches might have had or of any arrangement in the interest of churches. So far as I am aware, no person approached any member of the committee in the interest of a church or in favor of this bill as it was reported from the House. The only persons of whom I have any knowledge were those who opposed the provision, and upon questioning those gentlemen and inquiring of persons of whom I have any knowledge were those who opposed the provision, and upon questioning those gentlemen and inquiring of others, I ascertained that their objections arose from the fact that they owned property or occupied residences in the neighborhood.

When the case came up for consideration in the committee the when the case came up for consideration in the committee the commissioners were present, and when the statement was made in regard to one of them that he was opposed to the purchase of the building, it was said that he had withdrawn his opposition. The questions propounded to the commissioners were: "Is this a suitable location for the police court?" The answer was, "It is." "Is it a suitable building?" "It is." Then the question came up as to the price which was provided to be paid for it. I am free to say that the testiment of continuous who were introduced as executed in the continuous of continuous had been interesting to the continuous of continuous and testimony of gentlemen, who were introduced as experts in this mattestimony of gentlemen, who were introduced as experts in this matter, real-estate agents, to the effect that the property was not really worth more than $14,002, influenced my vote, as it did that of other members of the committee, and induced us to give our assent to the proposition to reduce the amount appropriated by the bill from $20,000 to $14,000. But when yesterday a letter was placed in my possession, of which I have a copy before me, and which I have compared myself with the original and find it to be correct, wherein the very gentleman who made this statement and upon whose knowledge of the subject we acted, put down in black and white an offer of $18,000 for the same property. I am free to confess that my confidence $18,000 for the same property, I am free to confess that my confidence in his judgment or sincerity was very much changed.

Mr. CONKLING. Who was that †

Mr. WITHERS. He was not the man quoted by my friend on the right, a member of the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator will pardon me, the point of my question is this: Was it somebody that wished to rescue the property from this threatened use, or was it somebody who wished to buy it on speculation? for that would make a good deal of difference.

on speculation? for that would make a good deal of difference.

Mr. WITHERS. I am not in possession of accurate information on the subject. I only know that the paper which I hold in my hand made an offer from this gentleman on behalf of other parties, "to purchase the above-mentioned property at the price of $18,000." It is signed by Mr. J. M. Hanna, the same man who testified before us that it was only worth $14,000.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Virginia will pardon me for a moment. He knows better than I can tell him that it might very well be true of him and of me that if a thing was very disagreeable in the neighborhood in which we lived we and others might club together and not only pay a large price but twice or three times its price in order to prevent a livery stable or any other thing you please which would be very disagreeable occupying a particular site. Unless the Senator knows the purpose of this offer, I do not think much light is thrown on this question by it.

4 Mr. WITHERS. I have only the information conveyed in the statement which I presume is anthentic. The fact appears from the data ment, which I presume is authentic. The fact appears from the date of the paper that this offer was made subsequent to the lease, and therefore it could not have been made pending the lease and in order to prevent the lease.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not see that. It might be the reverse of Mr. WITHERS. If the Senator does not see it, of course it is not for me to enlighten him on the subject.

Mr. BECK. Mr. Wilson was the man who testified it was worth $14,000; and when the Senator speaks of the same man who made the offer, I wish him to understand that I referred to Mr. Wilson who signed the letter to which I referred.

Mr. WITHERS. I do not pretend to state whether this was the same man or not. I was so informed and I understood his name to be the same as that of the gentleman who, as I have understood, made the statement before the committee. But what I do wish to state is this: that there is official evidence before me now which shows the actual value of the property in the judgment of a man competent to judge. I think that the official assessment made by an officer of the District whose duty is to assess property with a view to its taxation is testimony which should be accepted as impartial and carrying authority with it, and under that the assessment of this property for taxation purposes is put at $18,700.

Livish to state further that when this lease was made by the commissioners they secured the services of several of the most prominent real-estate agents of the city to ascertain, if they could, the value of this property, and the estimates made by this class of men as to the value of the property ranged from $18,000 to $24,000.

Now, I respectfully submit that the committee should not be subjected to the severe criticisms which have been made upon their action by some of the Senators who have discussed the question.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator if it is not also true that $18,000 was raised upon the mortgage of this property?

Mr. WITHERS. I am not in possession of information on that sub-

Mr. HOAR. That is the fact.

Mr. WITHERS. But I have this additional fact to communicate to the Senate, that after the lease was consummated and after legal preceedings were instituted the trustees of the church came forward and asked the commissioners to release them from the lease, to release them from the obligations of this contract, in order that they might dispose of the property, for which they then had an offer, for $18,000, and that the commissioners refused to release them. This was done and that the commissioners refused to release them. This was tone after legal proceedings were instituted; and they not only made this application once, but renewed it subsequently. So that twice the trustees of the church have asked to be released from this contract, and twice have the commissioners refused to release them.

Now, whether one individual member of the commission favored or opposed the purchase in question, I undertake to say here without the fear of successful contradiction, that the commissioners of the District of Columbia recommend this purchase, recommend the building as a suitable one, and the place as a suitable location.

Mr. President, these were the considerations which prompted the committee, in my judgment, to report the bill in the form in which it is now before us. All the objections to the clause resolve themselves, in my mind, into one, and that is the objection of the property-holders in the neighborhood to the location of the building at that point. I undertake to say that whatever point may be selected for the build-I undertake to say that whatever point may be selected for the building, whether this or any other point, the same objection will be urged with equal if not with greater force. The testimony before the committee and the statements made in the Senate to-day go to the effect that this particular locality is as free from the objection that it is in the immediate vicinity of residences as any location which can be selected. There is a large open space around it, which cuts off the immediate neighborhood of residences. On one side of it the property immediate neighborhood of residences. On one side of it the property is occupied almost exclusively by the offices of lawyers, and there are very few private residences in immediate contiguity to this building. Looking upon it in that light, and recognizing the fact that wherever this building might be located the objection of the adjacent property-holders would be equally strennous, I did not regard it as sufficient to induce us to oppose a provision which had been reported by the House committee. The District of Columbia Committee having reported a bill there with this provision in, it having passed the House without objection, no person there challenging the suitable character of the place or of the building itself, when it came to us I must confess that I have been surprised at the amount of objection which has been developed here to-day.

must confess that I have been surprised at the amount of objection which has been developed here to-day.

This opposition to the existence of a police court, the allegation that it constitutes a nuisance, the very fervid argument of my friend from Kentucky to show that the existence of a police court must of necessity be a nuisance and that it ought to be removed into Judiciary Square to prevent the congregation around it of low, disreputable characters, offensive to public decency and public morals, it seems to me resolves itself at last into this proposition, that, by the change proposed, you would be enabled to empty the vans of the police department into an old building, but if improper characters follow up these vans to the building, at last the only advantage would be in the exposure in the limited period of time occupied in passing from the vans into the walls in the one case or into the existing building in the other.

Mr. President I never resided in any contiguity to police courts.

Mr. President, I never resided in any contiguity to police courts, but I had an office once immediately adjoining, and one of my early experiences was as physician at a poor-house, and I never lived as high anywhere as I did at the poor-house, and I never had as quiet a time about my office and as perfect freedom from loafers as I had when it was next to a police court.

Several Senators. You are a doctor.

Mr. WITHERS. I was a doctor, but I do not see why a doctor's office should be any more free from nuisances than the offices of office should be any more free from nuisances than the offices of others when next to a police court.

The Senate may of course do with this bill as it pleases. So far as I am concerned as the organ of the committee, my judgment now is that the amount fixed by the committee was not sufficient, was not adequate to the purchase, because information now lies before me upon the subject which has induced me to change my original opinion upon that question.

Mr. TELLER. Does the Senator then ask us to sustain the com-

Mr. WITHERS. No; with the statement I have made of course I cannot. Several members of the committee have already indicated the same change of opinion on the subject to which I have given utterance, and therefore I cannot insist on the Senate standing by the report of the committee, because that amount was fixed upon what I regard now as unreliable testimony; and subsequent testimony having satisfied me of the unreliable character of that on which we acted, I do not hesitate to say that I have changed my opinion on the subject.

on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Garland in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations to strike out "twenty" and insert "fourteen," in line 430.

Mr. BECK. I desire the yeas and nays on that. I have read enough proof to show that $12,000 is sufficient.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the real.

Mr. HOAR, (when Mr. Dawes's name was called.) My colleague [Mr. Dawes] is absent as one of the trustees of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum on public duty.

Mr. RANSOM, (when his name was called.) On this question I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin, [Mr. CARPENTER.] If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 17, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS-17.

Beck, Booth, Cockrell, Conkling, Davis of Illinois,	Harris, Hereford, Jones of Nevada, Kernan, Mergan,	Pendleton, Pryor, Randolph, Saulsbury, Teller,	Vest, Williams.
	NA	YS-33.
Allison, Anthony, Bailey, Baldwin, Blaine, Bruce, Burnside, Butler, Call,	Cameron of Pa., Cameron of Wis., Coke, Edmunds, Farley, Garland, Hampton, Hoar, Ingalls,	Jonas, Kellogg, Kirkwood, McMillan, Maxey, Morrill, Paddock, Platt, Plumb,	Rollins, Thurman, Vance, Voorhees. Windom, Withers.
	ABSI	ENT-26.
Bayard, Blair, Carpenter, Davis of W. Va., Dawes, Eaton, Ferry,	Gordon, Groome, Grover, Hamlin, Hill of Colorado, Hill of Georgia, Johnston,	Jones of Florida, Lamar, Logan, McDonald, McPherson, Ransom, Saunders,	Sharon, Slater, Walker, Wallace, Whyte.

So the amendment was rejected.

Either now or as soon as the committee amendments are through I will move to strike out these words in lines 429 and 430:

For purchase of police-court building, $20,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments of the committee will be acted on first. The Secretary will continue the reading of the

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 432, to increase the appropriation "for removal of bodies from Holmead's cemetery, (when requested by the relatives,)" from $1,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 441, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for miscellaneous expenses from $68,800 to $63,800.

Mr. WITHERS. It will be necessary in consequence of the action.

of the Senate just now to amend that by substituting "sixty-nine" for "sixty-three," $6,000 having been added to the bill by the last vote of the Senate, so as to make the total $69,800.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Virginia for the senator of the senator.

of the Senator from Virginia to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. MORGAN. I think the committee had better pass over that amendment until the amendment of the Senator from Kentucky is

Mr. HOAR. I understand these footings are always made correct by the Clerk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia offer his amendment now?

Mr. WITHERS. I offer the amendment now on the part of the committee. It is in consequence simply of the vote of the Senate just taken

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection to that amendment, it will be considered adopted.

ment, it will be considered adopted.

Mr. BECK. Before anything further is done I have given notice of a motion to strike out "for purchase of police-court building, $20,000" in this same paragraph. If that should happen to prevail, then the present footing would be wrong.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then that can be corrected correspondingly. This only corrects it according to the present opinion of the Senate, and if the opinion is changed the amount can be changed again.

Mr. WITHERS. This only corrects it according to the present

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Virginia will be regarded as agreed to.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. BUTLER. I give notice that when the committee amendments have been disposed of I shall move to strike out, in line 447, "$480" and insert "$600" as the compensation of "one messenger of the health department."

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "debt," in line 455, to insert "exclusive of water bonds;" so as to make the clause read:

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt, exclusive of water bonds, $1,155,583.55.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear that explained.
Mr. WITHERS. I was just about to offer the explanation. It is Mr. WITHERS. I was just about to offer the explanation. It is simply to make a definitive provision of law for that which we have at present in practice. That is to say, the amount provided in the bill, $1,155,583.55, is the amount actually required to pay the interest and provide for the sinking fund, exclusive of water bonds, which are not now paid out of that fund, but they are paid out of the water fund. It is simply to prevent any doubt or uncertainty about it that the committee at the request of the commissioners propose to insert these

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that is quite right, but I should like to call attention in that connection to the vagueness of the first line in that clause:

For interest and sinking fund on the funded debt.

I do not know what the words "sinking fund on the funded debt" mean. The phrases are run together without any separation.

Mr. WITHERS. I presume the language may be subject to the criticism of the Senator from Vermont as a question of syntax or prosody.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am merely on the question of how it will be construed by the Treasury Department. If I may suggest to the Senator, as is suggested by my friend from Minnesota behind me, [Mr. WINDOM,] it would be better to transpose the words "interest" and "sinking fund," so as to read, "for sinking fund and interest on the funded debt," so much. I think that will be clear.

Mr. ALLISON. I think that is better.

Mr. WITHERS. I concede the force of the objection; but the bill follows precisely the language of the estimates of the Secretary of the Treasury and the commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the words had better be transposed to

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the words had better be transposed to make it clear, so as to read, "for the sinking fund and interest on the funded debt exclusive of water bonds," and so forth.

Mr. WITHERS. I have no objection to the amendment proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be considered as agreed to, and the question is on the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued and concluded. The last amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after the word "District," in line 21, at the end of section 2, to insert:

And provided further. That they shall submit their annual estimates to the Secretary of the Treasury by the 1st day of October of each year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to inquire why that is necessary?

Does not the existing law require these estimates to be made by the commissioners?

Mr. WITHERS. Not specifically. The existing law simply requires that the estimates for the expenditures for the District shall be submitted by the commissioners of the District to the Secretary of the Treasury for his revision, and that he shall make such suggestions and alterations in them as may comport with his views and return them to the commissioners; but there is nothing said as to the time within which this shall be done. The amendment was introduced at the instance of the Secretary of the Treasury in order that the estimates for the expenses of the District of Columbia should be submitted at the same time that the other estimates are required to be submitted by the Departments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This then is only understood to merely fix a time for complying with existing law and not to make any change in their present duties beyond fixing the time?

Mr. WITHERS. That is the whole effect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With that construction I have no objection to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. With that construction I have no objection to it.
Mr. WITHERS. That is precisely the construction.
The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. BUTLER. I move now, in line 447, that the words "four hundred and eighty" be stricken out and "six hundred" substituted in lieu thereof. I base this motion on a letter which I received this morning from the health officer of the District.
Mr. WITHERS. I would suggest to the Senator from South Carolina that the estimate is only $540 for that messenger, and it is the sum which he has been receiving, and it would be improper to increase sum which he has been receiving, and it would be improper to increase sum which he has been receiving, and it would be improper to increase the salary beyond the estimates.

Mr. BUTLER. I will call attention to the allowance for messengers in the other offices of the District government. On line 122, page 6, in the auditor and comptroller's office, "one messenger, $600;" on page 7, line 140, in the treasurer and assessor's office, "one messenger, $600;" in line 150, in the collector's office, "one messenger, $600;" for the division-of-property office, line 188, page 9, "one messenger, $600;" for the engineer's office, page 10, line 217, "two messengers, at $480 each," and so on. I think, with the exception of the health officer, the various offices have either one messenger at $600, or two at $480 each. at $480 each.

Mr. WITHERS. There are more than two, according to my recollection, the salary of which is fixed at $480. I think there are three or four. I undertake to say that the committee did not alter the bill as it came from the House in those particulars; it made no change whatever; but the House cut down this particular messenger from $540, which he had previously received, to $480. I am not possessed of any information as to the reasons which influenced them in making that change; nor do I know any reason why this messenger should not be replaced at the amount provided for in the estimates and the sum which he has heretofore received, and I have no objection to that being done, but I shall be compelled to object to any increase of the estimates.

Mr. BUTLER. I will accept that, then, and say $540.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina accepts the amendment suggested by the Senator from Virginia. The question now is on the amendment as amended, to make this salary

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WITHERS. That will necessitate a corresponding change in the footing at the end of that paragraph.

Mr. DAVIS, of Illinois. Let that be done by general consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the correction will be made.

Mr. WITHERS. Let the Clerk note the proper addition in the footing.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be done.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I gave notice on the first reading of the bill that on page 5, at the end of line 101, I would-offer an amendment, which I sent to the Clerk's desk, and it was then read for information. I ask that it be again read, and I now offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, after the word "dollars," in line 101 to insert:

And that from and after the passage of this act one of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, to be selected by the board of commissioners, shall be a trustee, with all the powers, privileges, and duties of other trustees of the Reform School and of the Columbia Hospital for Women and Lying-in Asylum. And one of said commissioners, selected by said board of commissioners, shall be a director, with all the powers, privileges, and duties of other directors of the Children's Hospital of the District of Columbia. And one of said commissioners, selected by said board, shall be a member of the board of managers, with all the powers, privileges, and duties of other members of the board of managers of the Industrial Home School, the National Association for the relief of Destitute Colored Women and Children and of the Women's Christian Association. And the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have the right to visit, investigate, and have a full report of the management, receipts, and expenditures of the Saint Ann's Infant Asylum.

Mr. INGALLS. Why is the German Orphan Asylum omitted?
Mr. HOAR. I desire to ask the Senator from Tennessee if the Women's Christian Association is an association of women?

Mr. HARRIS. It is governed, however, by a board of managers, as specified in the amendment, and is one of those institutions for the benefit of which an appropriation is made, one-half of which appropriation is paid by the tax-payers of the District of Columbia—Mr. HOAR. My question was whether it was an association of women?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.
Mr. HOAR. And whether therefore we should not provide that one of the commissioners should be a woman, in order to carry out the Senator's view?

Mr. HARRIS. I hardly think such a provision would be wise, nor do I see any impropriety in making one of the commissioners a member of the board of managers to look into the general management and the expenditure of this fund that is raised from the people of the District of Columbia by taxation.

Mr. HOAR. Why does the Senator omit in his amendment the Saint Ann's Infant Asylum and the Little Sisters of the Poor

Mr. HARRIS. Only for the reason that in those cases these are specific appropriations for the construction of buildings, not appropriations for the general administration of their affairs; but whenever an appropriation shall be made for the general charitable purposes to which those institutions are devoted, then I should think it proper to make the same provision in respect to them that has been made in respect to these others.

Mr. HOAR. Perhaps I did not understand the Senator's amendment. Does he make the same provision for the Saint Ann's Infant Asylum that he does for the Children's Hospital?

Mr. HARRIS. The same provision for every institution except the two where the appropriation is specific to aid those institutions in the construction of buildings.

Mr. CONKLING. Which two?

Mr. HOAR. Will the Secretary read the Senator's amendment again †

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment of Mr. HARRIS

Mr. HOAR. Now, why does the Senator make a District commissioner a director of the Children's Hospital, a Protestant institution, and not make him a director of the Saint Ann's Infant Asylum?

Mr. HARRIS. Alone because the former institution is incorporated and it is governed by a board of directors, while the latter is governed by the Sisters of Charity, and has no board of directors or board of managers or other board than the Sisters of Charity. Hence I provided that the commissioners should have a right to visit, the right to investigate, the right to demand a full report as to the management, receipts, and disbursements of that institution, but I did not seek to give them further control than that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is a little extraordinary. Here Congress is called upon to pay certain sums of money, $5,000 to the Children's Hospital which is managed by charitable individuals in this town under one form of government; for Saint Ann's Infant Asylum which is managed by other individuals in this town under a different form of government; for the Industrial Home School which is managed by certain other people under some sort of government, and so on. And yet the Senator from Tennessee has fixed his amendment so that any control, any voice in the management by force of this legislation is exclusively applied to the Protestant institutions and not to the Roman Catholic ones?

Mr. CONKLING. Is not that inevitable?
Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from New York asks if that is not Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from New York asks if that is not inevitable? No, I do not think it is inevitable because we can give the money upon just such terms as we please. But I should be glad to know upon what principle it is, if it is right that we should have a voice in the management of institutions to which we appropriate money, that we are to have that voice in Protestant institutions and not to have it in Catholic institutions?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President— Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator from Tennessee answers, I beg him to allow me to say to the Senator from Vermont what perhaps did not appear fully enough in my question. If you once admit, as this proposed legislation does, the propriety of going into voluntary societies, whether they are churches or whatever, and bevoluntary societies, whether they are churches or whatever, and bestowing the public money upon them, when you come to one which because of church government does not admit of any board of directors, does not do business in that way, is it not one of the inevitable consequences that you accept, simply finding a case where your machinery for inspection will not operate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I will go on, Mr. President.

In answer to my friend from New York, I do not think you do because you can just into the one way more the clarical review.

the power of the hierarchy, whatever you may call it, of a church, this power of the hierarchy, whatever you may call it, of a church, this power of having a voice in the disposition of the money as well as the general power of disposition, just as well as you can where there is a board. That is your responsible officer enters into the composition of the disposition of that money and of the management of the things to which that money is to be appropriated. I am quite unwilling to vote for any proposition which, for what are called inevitable causes or any others, makes a distinction in respect of the power of the Government to have its voice in the disposition of this money and in the management of the institution that is to dispose of it, merely because one church happens to be a hierarchy constituted in merely because one church happens to be a hierarchy constituted in one way, and the other church happens to have its members exercising the powers of a board of control. That is a mere matter of machinery. The principle applies just as well to it all and the principle ought to be effectuated.

When you come to the other aspect of the case, which is a broader one, I will say what I believe I have said heretofore, that I greatly dankt the propriety of the Congress of the United States could be a propriety of the Congress o doubt the propriety of the Congress of the United States or of the Legislature of any State aiding by direct appropriation in this way special private charities, as they are called, whether they are man-aged by one church or another or by the members of one church or another, or managed by anybody else, for I believe human experience has shown that it runs to evil and favoritism and into politics, and that much more evil is done on the whole than good by pursuing that style of performance. If the tax-payers are to pay the expenses of performing these various charities—worthy I have no doubt all of them are in themselves—then the tax-payers themselves ought to provide the organization in the form of a public institution in which all religions and all politics and all good order and progress should be merged as one board of control, and then we know what we are doing. But if every little church or great church gets up a charity, and has a little institution of its own, sectarian necessarily in its and has a little institution of its own, sectarian necessarily in its character almost always,—sometimes several churches combine it is true in a particular charity, all very good in itself—but the moment you begin to impose taxes upon the people to support these special institutions that are managed by private arrangements, in my belief you have departed from the true principles of a republican government. And therefore I shall vote, if somebody moves it, to strike out the whole thing. the whole thing

Certainly, as it now stands, to make this discrimination on what my friend from New York calls the inevitable nature of the situation, shows I think the injustice and absurdity of this method of proceeding. If it is a discrimination that must be made growing out of the circumstances—but I do not think it need be made—I think we can provide that if this money is to be taken by the Saint Ann's Infant Asylum, one of these commissioners shall have a voice in directing the expenditure of the money and in the selection of the objects to which it shall be applied, no matter whether it is a hierarchy that controls it that has not a municipal organization, or not. There is no practical difficulty about it. I know it appears incongruous; I agree to that, but you get at the solid fact that the representative of the tax-payers has to see to the application of the money that the taxpayers pay.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order. The point of order is that the amendment is out of order because it is general leg islation. It is not simply fixing a condition for this year's expenditure of the money, but it is a permanent provision for the future.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not insist upon his point of order. I am quite satisfied myself that the point of order is well taken if insisted upon. I was quite satisfied of it when I prepared the amendment.

Mr. THURMAN. May I interrupt my friend? Does he think the point well taken?

Mr. HARRIS. I am inclined to think so.
Mr. THURMAN. I beg leave to dissent from him utterly.
Mr. HARRIS. I am inclined to think that it is general legislation which I propose in this amendment; and in that point of view alone I was inclined to concede that the point of order was perhaps well taken. I shall be glad to find that my friend from Ohio is right and that I am mistaken in that, for I think the legislation is important.

Now, in respect to the suggestion of the Senator from Vermont, I beg to say only this, and I will not detain the Senate longer than a moment. However wise or unwise, proper or improper, it may be to make these appropriations to these charities, our records show for years and years in the past we have made them; we are making them year by year in our general appropriation bills, and doubtless will continue to make them-

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I am sorry to interfere with my friend from Tennessee, but it seems to me the point of order should be decided before we enter upon discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the point of order is insisted upon, it is not debatable. The Chair will submit the question raised by the Senator from Massachusetts to the Senate whether the amendment is

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Chair submit it to the Senate? The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does.

Mr. THURMAN. Then it is debatable. I suppose the point of order is made under the twenty-ninth rule, which reads:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill; nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto; and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate; and any amendment to a general appropriation bill may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill.

The question arises, therefore, first, whether this is an amendment which proposes general legislation, and, second, whether this bill is a general appropriation bill within the meaning of this rule.

Now, Mr. President, without taking up the time of the Senate to argue it, I do not believe the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee is general legislation within the meaning of this rule; nor do I believe that this bill, relating simply to the District of Columbia, is one of the general appropriation bills intended by this rule.

the general appropriation bills intended by this rule.

For these reasons I think the amendment is in order.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator in charge of the bill has already stated that this bill is a general appropriation bill and comes within that category, as I am informed, and it clearly was so. It gets to the Committee on Appropriations and not to the Committee on the District of Columbia solely under the rule which makes it a general appropriation bill. The term "general appropriation bill" is a name of a certain set of bills which come in regularly every year. The twenty-seventh rule refers them all to the Committee on Appropriations. Nothing else could have sent them there. This comes under that rule as a general appropriation bill. It comes to us from the Committee on Appropriations as a general appropriation bill.

Now, is this general legislation? It is a permanent enactment setting forth the duties of the commissioners of the District of Columting forth the duties of the commissioners of the District of Columbia perpetually until repealed; not merely for next year, but for every year; and providing that certain described corporations shall in future be managed in part by public officers of this District in a certain way, changing the board of managers of all of them, and changing and enlarging the duties of the commissioners of the District. It seems to me that is general legislation, if anything is.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I hope the point of order will be sustained, whether it is well taken or not. Here in this District are one hundred and seventy-five thousand people assembled from every State in the Union and from all the four quarters of the globe. A number of self-denying and noble-hearted women have undertaken to dispense charity among these people, to furnish food for the hunnumber of self-denying and noble-hearted women have undertaken to dispense charity among these people, to furnish food for the hungry, a shelter for the homeless, medicine for the sick, and consolation for the afflicted, and to alleviate as far as possible the inevitable ills of human life. I do not care whether they are Catholics or whether they are Protestants, the work that they propose to perform is a noble one; it ought to have the sympathy and the support of every human being; and the attempt to introduce here in the Senate some sort of supervision of how our little charities shall be disbursed seems to me on about the same par with the action that would require me if I gave half a dollar to a beggar on the Avenue to ask how it is going to be expended, and see whether or not it is to be appropriated to the proper use.

Mr. President, if we want to give these people anything, if it is humane and generous to take care of the sick and of the afflicted, what is the use of your inquiring whether Catholics do it or whether Protestants do it?

There is no caste in blood Which runneth of one hue; nor caste in tears Which trickle salt for all.

It appears to me that we are devoting ourselves to rather small busi

It appears to me that we are devoting ourselves to rather small business, and, as I said before, whether the point of order of the Senator from Massachusetts is well taken or not, I hope it will be sustained, because I' am opposed on principle when we are disbursing charity here to worthy objects to insisting that we shall have some supervision or some control over the way in which this charity shall be expended, and when everybody admits that every one of these institutions is noble and generous, and that the people who devote their time and their money to carrying them on deserve the consideration, and deserve the support of all good men everywhere.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas has stated I think the way to sustain this point of order; that is to do it whether it is well taken or not. Because I think it is not well taken, I shall vote against sustaining it, and I hope in a moment I can give my reason. I will assume that this is a general appropriation bill, and that brings us to the words about general legislation, and I submit to the Senate that that is not and cannot be within the meaning of that rule "general legislation" which is a mere provise and condition on which the money is appropriated. Five thousand dollars is appropriated to send tents to those who have suffered from a hurricane, provided the Secretary of War shall be authorized to detail an officer to see that the tents are returned. If the tents were money, that would not be general legislation; so of any object which for illustration you may take. You appropriate money. That is competent. You say "provided that such or such thing," a safeguard, "shall be adopted as to its expenditure." That is a provise, a restraint upon the appropriation. It gives guidance to the appropriation; it pertains to that, it pertains only to that; it cannot be general legislation.

Now, the criticism made by the Senator from Massachusetts upon the form in which the Senator from Tennessee offers his amendment, is merely, I submit, model, enti

the form in which the Senator from Tennessee offers his amendment, is merely, I submit, model, entirely so. The honorable Senator says it is permanent. Very well; then the Senator from Tennessee has only to say, to escape that technical objection if it be good, "provided that the money shall be paid on this condition." Then it would extend perhaps only in time to the period covered by the appropriation, or perhaps it would extend beyond, but it would be technically, as it is now substantially and virtually, a mere condition on which the appropriation is made.

the appropriation is made.

As to the suggestion made by my honorable friend from Kansas that it is paltry, it is unworthy in bestowing what he calls charity to adopt any mode of knowing how it is administered, securing its faithful administration, I confess I cannot quite sympathize with him. I believe, as I said an hour or two ago, and as the Senator from Vermont has since said, that it is, to say the least of it, exceedingly doubtful whether we are warranted in sitting here and picking out something which individually and collectively we approve because of its appeal to our sympathies, because of the morality and exaltation of its purpose, and saying we will vote away the money of the taxpayers for that. Here is some individual—I might name one in this District—who alone establishes a benevolent house where the hungry and the friendless can go, and we sit here and say we will vote five, or ten, or fifteen thousand dollars to this man or this woman or this estate, we approve of that. I have some doubt about it; but if we are to do it, I we approve of that. I have some doubt about it; but if we are to do it, I cannot doubt that it is a seemly, provident, well-regulated and good example, to at least give to it the semblance and as far as we can the substance of public and official accountability. Therefore I think that if it were proper to sustain a point of order not well taken because of the object to be attained by sustaining it, this case could hardly be put with safety upon that ground; but I do not believe it is general legislation, and, therefore, I shall be compelled to vote against sustaining the point of order.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from New York answers the proposition which I laid down by saying that this is not general legislation, it is a condition attached to the appropriation of the money. But certainly, if the condition attached to an appropriation of money be in itself general legislation, the mere fact that it is annexed as a condition of the money of the condition of the money be in itself general legislation, the mere fact that it is annexed as a condition of the condition of the mere fact that it is annexed as a condition of the cond nseri general legislation, the mere fact that it is annexed as a condition to the appropriation of money does not make it any less so. Now, suppose the amendment were this: that the money be appropriated provided the justices of the supreme court of the District of Columbia should have jurisdiction in equity over all charitable trusts administered by these corporations, would that be any less general legislation because it is made a condition to a grant of money? This is not that they are not that it is not that the stress of the suppose that the stress of the suppose that the suppose the suppose that the suppose the suppose that the suppose the suppose that the suppose that the suppose the suppose that the suppose that the suppose the suppose the suppose that the suppose t is just that thing except that it says as the proviso that the commissioners of the District shall be ex officio managers of half a dozen enumerated charitable institutions, from and after the passage of this

I concede that it would not be open to the point of order if it said that in regard to the particular expenditure of this sum of money the commissioners of the District should exercise a certain oversight in their discretion; but when you go beyond that and make a change in general legislation a condition of the appropriation, it is just as much liable to the point of order as if it came in separately without any appropriation. And this is not even in form a condition of the appropriation. If this amendment should be added to the bill and the appropriation then stricken out, this amendment would stand. It is a separate, substantial matter that from and after the passage of this act the commissioners of the District of Columbia shall have certain duties in regard to certain corporations.

Mr. VOORHEES. It is manifest that this bill cannot be finished this evening. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Several SENATORS. We can finish it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator withhold his motion for a moment, that the Chair may submit some bills on the table?

Mr. VOORHEES. Certainly.

NORTH AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing-Office 5,000 copies each of volumes 4 and 5, Contributions to North American Ethnology, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series, and with the necessary illustrations; 3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution.

ACCEPTANCE OF JEFFERSON'S DESK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring therein.) That there be printed 10,000 copies of the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress upon the presentation to the United States, by J. Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate adjourn.
Mr. WITHERS. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion.
It is very important for us to get through this appropriation bill.
Mr. EDMUNDS. You cannot finish it to-night. There are a good many other topics to be discussed in it.

Mr. VOORHEES. I made the motion after conference with those who seem to understand the condition of business. I shall have to insist on my motion. The motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and fourteen minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 5, 1880.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. and was called to order by the Speaker.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

PRESENTATION OF JEFFERSON'S DESK.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Printing, reported back favorably the following resolution:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed 10,000 copies of the proceedings of the two Houses of Congress upon the presentation to the United States, by J. Randolph Coolidge and others, of the desk upon which Thomas Jefferson wrote the Declaration of Independence; 7,050 copies to be for the use of the House of Representatives and 3,000 copies for the use of the

The resolution was concurred in.

NORTH AMERICAN ETHNOLOGY.

Mr. WILSON also, from the same committee, reported back the following concurrent resolution, with amendments:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed at the Government Printing Office 5,000 copies each of volumes 4 and 5, Contributions to North American Ethnology, uniform with the preceding volumes of the series and with the necessary illustrations; 2,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution.

The amendments of the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6 strike out "2,000" and insert "3,000;" and in line 8 strike out "2,000" and insert "1,000;" so it will read: "3,000 copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 1,000 for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution."

The amendments of the committee were agreed to, and the resolution, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. WILSON. I desire, by unanimous consent, leave to print some remarks on the subject of the resolution just concurred in, which I have not time now to deliver.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly. [See Appendix.]

REPORT ON IRON, STEEL, ETC.

Mr. WILSON also, from the same committee, reported back favorably the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate, (the House of Representatives concurring.) That 3,000 copies of the report of the board to test iron, steel, and other metals be printed for the use of Congress; 1,000 for the use of the Senate, and 2,000 for the use of the House.

The resolution was concurred in.

COLUMBIA HOSPITAL.

Mr. BREWER, (by request,) by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 6064) relating to the Columbia Hospital in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MARY VREDENBURGH.

Mr. BREWER also, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H.R. No. 6065) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Vredenburgh; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Interoceanic Ship Canal to submit the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CHALMERS. Is that a question of privilege?

Mr. COX. The Committee has leave to report at any time.

Mr. CHALMERS. But is that a privileged question?

Mr. FERNANDO WOOD. Several other committees stand in like

Mr. COX. The committee has leave to report at any time under

Mr. WHITTHORNE. Mr. Speaker, it would be well to turn back to the record to see exactly the condition of this matter. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. King] reported this subject at the start by unanimous consent, and, under the direction of the Speaker, he reserved the right to call it before the House at any time.

The SPEAKER. That subject, however, is open to the majority of the House.

the House.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry, and that is to know whether it is not competent to raise the question of consideration against the report the gentleman from Louisiana is now making, although he is on the floor under the order of the House to make it at any time.

Mr. COX. There is no doubt about the question of consideration.

Mr. BLACKBURN. That is all I want.

Mr. COX. The majority can decide that.

PRINTING DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask by unanimous consent to report from the

Mr. ATKINS. I ask by unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Appropriations a bill (H. R. No. 6066) appropriating money to provide for the public printing.

The bill, which was read, provides that the sum of $250,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to continue the public printing, the public binding, and for paper for public printing, including the cost of printing the debates and proceedings of Congress in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and for the Departments, and for lithographing, mapping, and engraving, being a deficiency for the present fiscal year.

Mr. ATKINS. That sum of $250,000 was provided for in the deficiency bill which was vetoed by the President yesterday. It is necessary that it should pass, as the Government Office will be entirely without funds to meet its expenses.

Mr. CONGER. That is in the bill now pending before the House.

Mr. ATKINS. This covers the whole deficiency as far as that office is concerned.

The SPEAKER, This bill by unanimous consent will be considered as in Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask unanimous consent that it be so considered. Mr. KITCHIN. I object.

Mr. ATKINS. Then I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, for the purpose of considering this appropriation bill; and I move that all general debate be limited to one minute upon it.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The objection being withdrawn, this will be considered by unanimous consent as having been read a first and second time, and the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER. Can that be passed without calling the yeas and

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause the rule to be read.

Mr. GARFIELD. Unanimous consent can suspend the rule which requires the yeas and nays to be called.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will cause to be read clause 6 of Rule

The Clerk read as follows:

Upon all general appropriation and revenue bills, and bills for the improve-ment of rivers and harbors, the yeas and nays shall be taken on the passage of such bills in the House and entered upon the Journal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that this is not included in the term "general appropriation bill," as used in the rule, although it has got to be a very general thing to have deficiency bills. [Laughter.] Mr. CONGER. More general than any other bills in the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. KING. I object to any further proceedings until this resolution from the Committee on the Interoceanic Ship Canal is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana desires to report back a joint resolution in reference to the interoceanic ship-canal, and claims the right to do it now. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky that it is a question for the House to determine by a majority vote, where the question of consideration has been raised.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move, therefore, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in order

Mr. COX. The gentleman cannot make two motions at once when there is a question of consideration raised.

Mr. BLACKBURN. The regular order is the morning hour, and I move therefore to dispense with the morning hour.

At that time, this being introduced as a matter of privilege, and the Speaker sustaining that view of it and deciding that it was a question of privilege, when it was presented for consideration the gentleman from Texas objected to its consideration at that time; whereupon, on the suggestion, I think, of the Speaker, it was agreed by unanimous consent to be laid over subject to be called up at any time by the gentleman from Louisiana, and under that agreement—that preprious consent. unanimous consent—it was laid over to be called up as if it were a constantly pending question before the House, subject simply and solely to the action of the gentleman from Louisiana. That is to say, it was to be called up as a pending measure, and in that way, deferentially I submit to the Chair, it has precedence over every other question in the House

The SPEAKER. Nevertheless, the majority of the House has the right to say whether it will consider it at this time or not.

Mr. SPARKS. That is not now the question; the question is whether the morning hour will be dispensed with.

Mr. COX. The gentleman from Kentucky made two motions.

The SPEAKER. After the question is taken on dispensing with the morning hour the Chair will then recognize the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Louisiana respectively on the question of consideration.

Several members demanded the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion to dispense with the morning hour.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 139, noes 14. So (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the morning hour was dis-

Mr. BLACKBURN. I move now that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to proceed with the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. KING. And I raise the question of consideration as between that motion and the unanimous consent given to introduce this report from the Committee on the Interoceanic Ship Canal.

The SPEAKER. The question will first be taken on the motion of the gentleman from Louisiana to proceed to consider the report from the Committee on the Interoceanic Ship Canal.

The motion was not arread to.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I now insist on my motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CARLISLE] will take the chair in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KING. I give notice that I will again call up the resolution reported by the Committee on the Interoceanic Ship Canal on Tuesday next.

Mr. COX. The consideration of the resolution will occupy two days. I would like to ask unanimous consent that two days be assigned to it.

The SPEAKER. That request cannot be entertained now, the House being really in Committee of the Whole.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. Carlisle in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 6036) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881, and for other purposes. The pending question is upon an amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota, [Mr. Dunnell,] upon which the committee divided yesterday and a quorum did not vote. The pending paragraph and the amendment thereto will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General:
For inland mail transportation, namely: For transportation on railroad routes, $9,500,000: Provided, That in case any railroad company fail or refuse to provide railway post-office cars when required by the Post-Office Department, said company shall have its pay reduced 10 per cent. on the rates fixed in section 4002 of the Revised Statutes; and section 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1860, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1879, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment offered by Mr. DUNNELL was read, as follows:

In line 61 strike out "$9,500,000," and insert "$9,800,000," making it read:
"For inland mail transportation, namely: For transportation on railroad routes, $9,800,000."

The question was taken on the amendment; and upon a division

there were—ayes 65, noes 54.

Mr. BLACKBURN. No quorum has voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BLACKBURN and Mr. DUNNELL were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 76, noes 80.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. ANDERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 71: Insert, after line 71:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall retain, out of any part of the said $9,500,000 which shall be earned by a Pacific railroad company to which public lands were granted by the Pacific railroad acts severally approved July 1, 1882, and July 2, 1264, the amount of unpaid costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying the lands so granted to said company; and he shall charge the sums so retained to said company, and credit the proper account with said sums.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not desire to prevent the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Anderson] being heard on his mendment, but meanwhile I reserve points of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be considered as reserved.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is to require the Kansas Pacific Railway Company to complete its title to the lands granted under the acts of 1862 and 1864. Upon the construction of its road, in accordance with the terms of these acts, the company had fully earned the right in equity to an immense body of magnificent farming land in Kansas and Colorado; but, by persistently neglecting to pay the "costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying" these lands, it has failed to complete its legal title thereto. As this title by consequence remains in the Government, and as United States property cannot be taxed by a State, this failure on the part of the company prevents, and is intended to prevent, the assessment and collection of taxes on its lands by the counties in which they are situated.

It will readily be seen that, as a necessary result of the course pursued by the company, taxes in the State of Kansas amounting in the aggregate to a quarter of a million of dollars are annually and unjustly withheld from the county treasuries; that property worth many millions of dollars is exempted from its equitable share of the public burden; and, therefore, that a constitutional principle, or want of principle, is involved. It is for these reasons, and more particularly because of the especial importance of this matter to the constituency for whom I have the honor to appear, that I feel bound to ask the kind indulgence of the House.

OBJECT OF THE PACIFIC RAILWAY ACTS.

It is only just to remember that in one sense the Pacific Railway grants were a war measure. In 1860 the settlement of the huge Mississippi basin was practically bounded on the west by the Missouri River; Kansas and Nebraska being alike unoccupied and uncivilized. From that stream westward, for many months of travel over vast plains, across the Rockies, and away to the Nevadas, a distance of two plains, across the Rockies, and away to the Nevadas, a distance of two thousand miles, there were only drear waste, bristling ranges, and wild savagery. This vast region, lying in the heart of the continent, blocked and barred passage more effectually than an ocean of twice the extent would have done. While beyond it, in the sunshine of fable and of the future, nestled California, Oregon, and Nevada, young States tingling with enterprise, true to the flag, deserving the highest privileges of national citizenship, and rolling from out gorge and flat that gold of which the nation found special need in the day of its sore trial. And the only means of communication with those States that gold of which the nation found special need in the day of its sore trial. And the only means of communication with those States were vessels around the Horn, or steamers across the Isthmus.

With the war speedily came the menace of intervention by England; and in 1862 that was our greatest danger, either internal or external. Such intervention meant war by England's navy; and the immediate effect would have been the stoppage of American vessels, the blockade of Panama, the severance of the Pacific from the Atlantic coast, and, possibly, the occupation of San Francisco and Portland by foreign troops. In the glare of these contingencies, the geographical relations of the two slopes and of the vast interior wilderness which separated them, appeared in a new and startling light. Aside from obligations of patriotism, there suddenly arose strategic considerations of such importance as to require national action. The military, as well as the commercial, necessity for transit across the conerations of such importance as to require national action. The mittary, as well as the commercial, necessity for transit across the continent flashed through the public mind with a vividity that fully justified Congress in offering subsidies for a railway, which, under different circumstances, public opinion would have sternly forbidden. And the following words in the act of 1862, approved by Lincoln, had then a spirit which has long since evaporated in the sun rays of peace: For the purpose of aiding in the construction of the Union Pacific Railroad and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores, there is hereby granted, &c.

As a result, the far West was brought to the East by steam and electricity; the two great slopes were lifted together and compacted; months were condensed into days; till armies from the Atlantic, as well as men, gold, and grains from the Pacific, could be quickly shifted in spite of all the navies of the world.

In this sense the Pacific railroad was a war measure. The power to make the inducing grants was clearly constitutional; and in view of the circumstances of that day the building of these lines was an achievement of which this nation has a lusty right to be proud.

But that period has given place to the present; and we of to-day have only to deal with existing facts. Whether the law was wise, whether the subsidies were too munificent, whether the limitations were sufficiently stringent, are no longer questions for action. Yet as we consider the subject I somehow feel bound to recall the past, as an act of sheer justice, if not of proper generosity, to the men who devised, shouldered the risks, and successfully executed an enterprise of such pith and moment.

SUBSIDIES.

Coming to the specific question, the Kansas Pacific, then known as the "Union Pacific Company, eastern division," received governmental aid of two different kinds, namely, bonds and lands.

By the act of 1862 the road was to be built and inspected in sections of forty miles each; and upon the acceptance of such a section by United States commissioners the company became entitled to $16,000 per mile in bonds, running thirty years, bearing 6 per cent. interest, and payable at maturity by the company. These bonds ipso facto constituted a first mortgage upon the whole line, but by a subsequent act gave place to an equal amount of bonds issued by the company as a first mortgage. The amount of United States bonds issued and outstanding May 1, 1880, is as follows:

outstanding May 1, 1880, is as follows:

Principal outstanding. $6,303,000 00
Interest paid by the United States $4,805,703 09
Interest accrued and not yet paid. $126,000 00
Interest repaid by the company in transportation $2,370,183 23
Balance of principal and interest. $8,864,579 80

I presume the road was built with the proceeds derived from these bonds. If not, it was undoubtedly built with the additional proceeds derived from the company's first-mortgage bonds. It could be duplicated to-day at a cost of $12,000 or $15,000 per mile. So that the subsidy in the shape of lands may fairly be regarded as clear profit and bonus. and bonus.

LAND GRANT.

The original act grants "every alternate section of public lands, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of five alternate sections per mile on each side of said road, on the line thereof, and within the limits of ten miles on each side of said road." The road extends from Kansas City to Denver, a distance of six hundred and thirty-nine miles, of which four hundred and forty miles are in the State of Kansas City to Denver, a distance of six hundred are state of Kansas City to Denver, a distance of six hundred and thirty-nine miles, of which four hundred and forty miles are in the state of Kansas City to Denver, a distance of six hundred and forty miles are in the state of Kansas City to Denver, and server alternate square mile of land miles, of which four hundred and forty miles are in the State of Kansas. Hence the grant embraced every alternate square mile of land, then owned by the United States, in a belt twenty miles broad, and reaching from Missouri to the Rocky Mountains, or a distance equal to that from Washington, via Philadelphia, New York, and Boston, to Maine—a body of land aggregating three millions of acres, and having an area as great as that of the combined States of Rhode Island and Delaware.

TRANSFER OF TITLE.

The provisions regulating the transfer of title were minute and precise. I call attention to two points as the section is read: First, that definite periods are fixed at which a conveyance of title shall be made, namely, upon the acceptance of a section of completed road; second, that upon the occurrence of these periods there should be an actual and absolute transfer of the title to the lands earned.

Sec. 4. That whenever said company shall have completed forty consecutive miles of any portion of said railroad and telegraph line, ready for the service contemplated by this act, and supplied with all * * the necessary equipments of a first-class railroad, * * the President of the United States shall appoint three commissioners to examine the same and report to him in relation thereto; and if it shall appear to him that forty consecutive miles of said railroad and telegraph line have been completed and equipped in all respects as required by this act, then, upon certificate of said commissioners to that effect, patents shall seve conveying the right and title to said lands to said company, on each side of the road as far as the same is completed, to the amount aforesaid; and patents shall in like manner issue as each forty miles of said railroad and telegraph line are completed, upon certificate of said commissioners.

No contingent paried can be were deficitable for the contingent paried can be were deficitable for the contingent paried can be were deficitable for the same is company to an extensive the contingent paried can be were deficitable for the contingent paried can be were deficitable.

No contingent period can be more definitely fixed than is here designated: "whenever forty miles of road have been completed, then, upon certificate to that effect," the title shall pass.

Respecting the second point, the language is, if possible, even more absolute: "Patents shall issue conveying the right and title to said lands to said company." It is not that patents "may" issue, or "may be" issued, or "may be accepted" by the company; but "patents shall issue conveying the right and title to the company; In what words can a peremptory command be more positively given? When the certificate reached the Secretary of the Interior he had not even the shadow of an "option" as to whether he might or might not issue the patents. The law was mandatory; it could neither be disobeved nor evaded: The law was mandatory; it could neither be disobeyed nor evaded; and it forced him to transfer the titles.

But was not the law equally mandatory to the company? When, by building the road, it had lawfully earned the right and title to the adjacent lands, and when this fact was duly certified, what "option" had the company as to whether it should or should not accept the had the company as to whether it should or should not accept the patents? If there was such an option, upon what ground, either expressed or implied, did it rest? Certainly upon nothing expressed. A title is merely legal evidence of a completed right, and the patent is merely an official certificate of the legal title. But the statute is explicit: "Patents, as the official conveyances of the right and title to said lands from the United States to said company, shall issue."

Nor is there anything in the transaction from which such an option on the part of the company can be inferred. The Government no longer possessed an equitable interest in the lands. It had parted with its contiable right, and therefore with the equitable title by with its equitable right, and therefore with the equitable title, by accepting the road as the fulfillment of the conditions of the grant. accepting the road as the fulfillment of the conditions of the grant. Both the right and title had equitably passed to the company by the same acceptance, because they could not hang midway between the parties, and there was no third party. But when the company had thus acquired the right to possess the lands, and had exercised this right by offering them for sale and by pledging them as security for bonds, then certainly the Government had equally acquired the right to be released from the custody of property which it no longer owned, and, therefore, the right to divest itself of the "legal" title thereto. Rights have responsibilities, and the transfer of a right equitably transfers the accompanying responsibility. So that the action which conveyed have responsibilities, and the transfer of a right equitably transfers the accompanying responsibility. So that the action which conveyed the equitable right and title to the company imposed upon it the concurrent obligation to accept the legal title.

And there can be no doubt that Congress intended, and enacted, that just as soon as the company had earned the lands it should at once convey to and vest in itself the legal title, by accepting the patents.

A VERY PECULIAR AMENDMENT!

I have dwelt on this point because of the strong light which it throws upon a very remarkable amendment passed in the interest of the companies July 2, 1864, as follows:

SEC. 21. Before any land granted by this act shall be conveyed to any company or party entitled thereto under this act, there shall first be paid into the Treasury of the United States the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same by the said company or party in interest, as the titles shall be required by said com-

On a casual reading the purpose of the amendment seems to be that On a casual reading the purpose of the amendment seems to be that of protecting Government, by requiring the company to pay the expenses of running the lines and of transferring the title to its grant. The section wears the smiling face of an innocent measure of "economy," and demurely walks at the tail end of a long procession of sections as the saintly personification of "retrenchment and reform." But had this been the true object, the section would have simply said, "the company shall pay the cost of surveying, selecting, and conveying the land." So far from this, it enacts "that before the title shall pass the company shall first pay the cost of survey and conveying the land." shall pass the company shall first pay the cost of survey and convey-ance, as the titles shall be required by the company." Here is the exact "option" given to the company that was expressly denied by the mandatory act of 1862, which fixed the completion of a section of the mandatory act of 1802, which fixed the completion of a section of the road as the time when the patent should issue. What time is here specified for the conveyance of legal title? When shall the costs of survey become due and payable? Not upon the completion of a section, or of the whole road; not upon the certificate of acceptance; only at the sweet will and pleasure of the party by whom costs are to be paid; only when and "as" the titles shall be required by the company!

EFFECT OF "SECTION TWENTY-ONE."

Suppose it should never require the patents, what is there in this law, or in any law, to compel it to take the legal title? The Secretay, or in any law, to compet it to take the legal title? The Secretary of the Interior cannot deliver patent until after the company has first paid certain fees; and just so long as it retains these fees it can legally defy the Secretary. The Attorney-General cannot sue it as a delinquent, because the fees only become due "as" and when it requires the titles-which it does not vigorously require! the same reason the Secretary of the Treasury cannot withhold an equal sum from the company's money passing through his hands. Hence the legal title remains in Government, and, as a consequence, the lands cannot be taxed.

There have been two decisions of the United States Supreme Court to this effect, reported in 16 and 22 Wallace. Justice Miller said:

That the payment of these costs of surveying the land is a condition precedent to the right to receive the title from the Government can admit of no doubt. Until this is done, the equitable title of the company is incomplete. There remains a payment to be made to perfect it. There is something to be done without which the company is not entitled to a patent.

Under these views we are of opinion that the State has no right to tax the lands for which the cost of surveying had not been paid, and for which no patent had been issued.

As has been well said by counsel:

How long shall these immense bodies of land remain in this situation? Not under the control of the United States, so as to be open to settlement and cultivation; not owned by the company, so as to be subject to taxation, but owned by it when it wants lenders on mortgage, or when it wants purchasers; owned by it for every beneficial purpose, but not owned for the purpose of bearing any share of the publishments.

ADVANTAGES TO THE COMPANY BY NOT COMPLETING TITLE.

What inducement has the company to complete its title? None in the world, because it sells the lands and only draws the patent after the purchaser has paid the fees. On the contrary, it has every induce-ment that can influence a corporation to leave matters precisely as they are. By so doing it saves the expenses of survey, of conveyance, of taxation by the State, and a legal possibility of retaining its lands after the foreclosure of its first-mortgage bonds, because under the above decision the lands are Government property, and hence only the road is subject to foreclosure. After the sale of the road under mortgage the company could still pay the survey fees and take patents to the land.

Furthermore, why should not the company in selling a tract of land first release it from mortgage (which it has the power to do and does) and then, without drawing patent, quitclaim its right in the land to the purchaser? Would not his title be good? Who has a better or even an adverse claim? Not the Government, nor the company, and it is impossible that any other party can have an interest. But as the legal title is in the Government, the tract remains exempt from taxation. Has its owner any inducement to obtain the patent? None tion. Has its owner any inducement to obtain the patent? None whatever; and I can see no reason why the same rule which enables the company to evade taxes for years will not equally enable the individual to evade taxes forever. And this fact constitutes an additional inducement to the company to decline patent, because purchasers can afford to pay a higher price for land perpetually exempted from taxation, and the company can afford to demand a corresponding advance

THE ACT OF 1864 BENEFICIAL TO THE COMPANIES.

Every provision of the act of 1864 amending that of 1862 was framed for the benefit of the companies. The time for the completion of the roads was extended; the bonds of the United States which had been first mortgages were made second to those of the companies; the land-belt was broadened from twenty to forty miles, giving to the Kansas Pacific six millions instead of three millions of acres, or a domain of greater area than that of the State of Massachusetts or New Hampshire, nearly equal to that of Maryland, and greater than that of Rhode Island, Delaware, and Connecticut combined. And last of all is this bland and child-like "section 21," which furnishes to the company, as a free gift, a constitutional barrier behind which it legally places itself and says to the officers of the United States, of the States, of the counties, of the townships, and to the agents of foreclosing bondholders, "The legal title to these lands is in the United States, and United States property can neither be assessed nor seized. Now, what are you going to do about it?"

THE NATION'S GENEROSITY.

Such is the legal status of this kingly grant, and such are the baleful effects of this subtle amendment. Its spirit is as different from that of the noble grantor in the original act as is darkness from sunthat of the noble grantor in the original act as is darkness from sunshine. The Congress of 1862, with pulsing patriotism and 'mid the surges of desperate war, offered an imperial prize for continental transit. It granted huge kingdoms with a munificence unequaled in modern history, and wrote the nation's signature upon the back of notes issued by private corporations in the sum of sixty-five millions of dollars, ($64,623,512.) Its word has been kept to the syllable and hour. Patents have been issued without a murmur, and thirty-three millions of interest ($32,981,602.09) have been paid at the stroke of the clock; and its faith will be kept to the last letter and to the last cent. But will it submit to the bold trickery and gross imposition of this "section 21," an anomaly in equity and an outrage upon justice? It fetters the Departments, gags the Supreme Court, and manacles the States; nor can any power save that of Congress set these pristhe States; nor can any power save that of Congress set these prisoners free.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I wish briefly to present the practical side of the question, that side which presses against the people of Kansas and bears down upon the tax-payers.

VALUE OF THE GRANT.

The Government estimates the extent of the grant of land in Kansas at 4,300,000 acres; the company places it at 3,953,320 acres, or 246,680 acres less; and I take the latter authority. By an official statement made August, 1878, the company had then sold to individuals 1,023,270 acres; or, to be more exact, it had contracted with the buyer to deliver title when the terms of purchase were fulfilled, the lands being usually sold on long time, with annual payments of interest and an installment of the principal. From an advertisement issued by the company in November, 1879, I infer that it had then sold 66,788 additional acres, making the quantity sold at that date 1,090,058 acres, and the number of acres offered for sale 2,863,262. The average price asked for the lands offered was $4.30 per acre, which gives $12,312,026.60 as the company's appraisement of their value.

But on May 1, 1880, it had paid the costs of survey and drawn patents for only 791,987 acres of the entire grant in Kansas. This amount may fairly be assumed as indicating the number of acres which have ents for only 791,987 acres of the entire grant in Kansas. This amount may fairly be assumed as indicating the number of acres which have legally passed from it to buyers, and to which it has given the deeds. Hence there remain 298,071 of the 1,090,058 acres reported as sold, still in the legal but not in the actual possession of the company; because it merely holds the legal title as security for the final payments of the purchase-money, while the lands themselves are used and cultivated by the buyers. Estimating their average price as above, and we have $1,281,705.30, which added to the value of lands offered for sale gives $13,593,731.90 as an approximate estimate of the value of the grant for which the company has not drawn patent, and on which taxes cannot be levied. taxes cannot be levied.

WHY SHOULD THIS PROPERTY ESCAPE TAXATION?

Why should this enormous property be permitted to escape its share why should this enormous property be permitted to escape its share of the public burden? Does it not receive its full share of the public benefits, both directly and indirectly? The expenses of making, maintaining, and executing the public laws are borne by the taxpayers, and not in the least by these lands. Yet the permanence of boundaries, the right of possession as against trespasser or squatter, the preservation of records, and the freedom of sale, collection, and transfer are each and all maintained and enforced by the courts of transfer, are each and all maintained and enforced by the courts of the preservation of records, and the freedom of sale, collection, and transfer, are each and all maintained and enforced by the courts of the State and at the public expense.

And, too, as adjacent lands are cultivated, as houses are erected and homes beautified, as schools, churches, and towns spring into rigorous life, the value of the company's property is correspondingly and rapidly increased. But these are the indirect benefits of that security and civilization which law begets and law alone maintains. Then, upon what semblance of justice or upon what pretense of soulless legality can it be claimed that so vast a property, receiving such valuable benefits from society, should rightfully evade its quota of the common expenses necessary to the maintenance of society?

Is a millionaire, just and only because of his wealth, to clude the tax which the poor man must pay even though the roof be sold from over his head? Or is the power of this company, which commands many millions of dollars, greater than the sense of justice in this House and stronger than the will of an American Congress? I believe neither of the propositions.

For a moment note another phase of the question. Suppose two immigrants of equal necessities and industry to take adjacent farms at the same time, the one by homesteading Government land and the other by contract of purchase with the company on say fifteen years' other by contract of purchase with the company on say fifteen years' time. At the end of five years the homesteader receives his patent, and thereafter pays his share of public expenses; but for ten years longer, under any event his neighbor goes scot-free, though equally receiving all public benefits. If the homesteader happens to have rendered four years' service in defense of his flag he must pay taxes ten years longer than would the purchaser of railroad land. For that matter there is no reason whatever, as the law now stands, why the purchaser need ever take the Government patent, or ever allow his land to be assessed.

AMOUNT OF TAXES ANNUALLY WITHHELD FROM THE COUNTIES.

I present herewith a reliable statement by counties of the lands thus exempted from taxation and of the amount of taxes unjustly withheld from the county treasuries. The public expenditures must be met, and every tax-payer in these counties is forced to bear some of that burden which would otherwise be met by the taxes on these lands:

*The number of acres given for this county and those following is taken from the statement of lands for sale and price per acre in the Kansas Pacific Homestead, an advertising paper published by said company, in November, 1879; and the assessed value per acre and the amount of tax levy on each $100 valuation are assumed, but considered fairly low.

POINTS OF ORDER.

Now, upon the point as to whether this amendment is germane to this bill or not, I call the attention of the Chair to the title of the

A bill making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department.

I also call attention to the title of the act of 1864:

An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes.

The point I desire to make here is that the Government by giving to these roads a magnificent grant of land, by giving them bonds amounting to $65,000,000, on which it has paid $33,000,000 of interest, acquired certain rights in the roads, and among those rights is the right to use the road for postal purposes. The company by its own option has neglected to pay certain costs of surveying, locating, and conveying lands that were required by the act to be paid by the company, consequently there is a lapse so far as the fulfillment of the contract with the Government is concerned. I submit, therefore, that even in a postal bill, on the ground that the road is a part of the postal machinery of the United States, it is germane and legitimate to require that the Treasurer of the United States shall withhold or retain from any portion of the fund earned by the company under to require that the Treasurer of the United States shall withhold or retain from any portion of the fund earned by the company under this postal bill enough money to make good to the Government that which the company has failed to make good.

I have one more word to say. It is that the amendment does not change existing law. The act of 1862 required that the patent should issue immediately upon the completion of a section of road forty miles in length. Then there came an amendment in 1864 which provided that before the patent should issue the company should pay the costs of survey. Now, the company fails to pay the costs of survey, and—vey, and—

Mr. BUCKNER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a ques-

Mr. ANDERSON. Certainly, sir.
Mr. BUCKNER. Has the gentleman considered whether this amendment, if adopted, would be obnoxious to the views of the President, as detailed in his message of yesterday? In other words, whether

Mr. ANDERSON. No, sir; I do not regard it as a rider, because this amendment is only the teeth of the animal itself and not a rider in the shape of a man on the horse's back. It is no rider in that sense; and certainly it is not a political rider. It simply asks mere justice upon the part of these companies.

I conclude with making this remark: that as a consequence of the decision of the Supreme Court, and of the fact that the patent cannot issue and of the resultant fact that the fill remains in the Court.

decision of the Supreme Court, and of the fact that the patent cannot issue, and of the resultant fact that the title remains in the Government until these fees are paid, all of these lands are exempt from taxation. As a consequence of that, the company is selling these lands upon long time, eleven years, I think, and does not give title to the purchaser until he has made the last payment. Therefore these lands, for, say, eleven years, are kept off our tax-rolls; and they constitute a body of land approaching in area that of the State of Massachusetts. I hope the point of order will not hold good against the proposed amendment.

proposed amendment.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I ask the Chair to rule on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the amendment is not germane to the bill under consideration. The purpose of the amendment is to impose certain duties upon the Treasury Department in reference to the accounts between the United States and this railroad company. It seems to have no connection with carrying the mails or the duties of the Post-Office Department. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all in the sixtieth and sixty-first and sixty-second lines between the word "namely," in the sixtieth line, and the word "provided," in the sixty-second line, and substitute the following:

"For transportation on railroad routes, $9,490,000, of which sum $150,000 may be used by the Postmaster-General to maintain and secure from railroads necessary and special facilities for the postal service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1881."

Mr. BLOUNT. I make the point of order on that amendment. Mr. ROBINSON. I would like the gentleman to state what the point of order is.

Mr. BLOUNT. The point of order is that the amendment changes existing law and does not retrench expenditures.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask the Clerk to read the second portion of clause 3, Rule XXI.
The Clerk read as follows:

Nor shall any provision in any such bill or amendment thereto changing existing law be in order, except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures by the reduction of the number and salary of the officers of the United States, by the reduction of the compensation of any person paid out of the Treasury of the United States, or by the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] says that the amendment I have proposed, if adopted, would change existing law; and abiding by the ruling of the Chair made yesterday, I will admit that for the present. But amendments involving changes of existing law are in order under the rule in certain circumstances enumerated in the rule. The first question is, are they germane to the subject-matter of the bill? I believe the gentleman does not object to the amendment upon that ground; this amendment clearly is germane to to the subject-matter of this bill.

Being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, amendments involving changes of existing law are in order if they retrench expenditures. Does this amendment retrench expenditures? This bill provides for an appropriation of $9,500,000 for this branch of the service. The amendment I have offered proposes to reduce that amount $10,000, leaving it $9,490,000. The amendment, therefore, does retrench ex-

Further, the rules provide that the retrenchment of expenditures must be done in one of three ways enumerated in the rule. I will call the attention of the Chair to the last one: "By the reduction of amounts of money covered by the bill." Now, can language be plainer than that? Can that language be given any construction which will hold this amendment not to be in order? "By the reduction of amounts covered by the bill." Now the amount covered by the bill." Now the amount covered by the paragraph of the bill is $9,500,000. This amendment proposes to reduce that amount to $9,490,000, and therefore would be a clear reduction of expenditures of $10,000.

Now I wish to re-enforce the anticipated decision of the Chair that this amendment is in order, by referring the Chair to a decision made during the last Congress by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky who has charge of this bill, [Mr. BLACKBURN.] When the jury amendment was under discussion on an appropriation bill, and I made the point of order upon it that although the proposed amendment did in terms reduce the per diem pay of jurors, yet it went further and changed the whole mode of drawing jurors, my distinguished friend said that a point of order is read a grainst the relations and the said that a point of order is read a grainst the relations. friend said that a point of order is made against the whole amendment, and that there could not be a division of it. Now, I believe that decision is sound, although the decision was against me. I never fight against the court when the decision is against me, whether eight to seven or otherwise. I always abide the decision of the court eight to seven or otherwise. I always abide the decision of the court and do not fight it. Now I submit this to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] for his most careful consideration and reply.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am surprised at the argument of my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. ROBINSON,] quite surprised. The gentleman says that his amendment retrenches expenditure. Now, sir, what is his amendment? The present law requires that so much shall be paid to a railroad company for the mails it carries according to their weight, and that so much shall be paid where postal cars are used. In addition to what is the present law, the amendment of my friend proposes a clause which will authorize the payment of a sum beyond this.

Mr. ROBINSON. Oh, no; the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not want to be interrupted by my friend. I wish to state his argument as I think would be proper to state it, and the gentleman can afterward correct me.

wish to state his argument as I think would be proper to state it, and the gentleman can afterward correct me.

Mr. RQBINSON. Do not go on in the dark.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not going in the dark; but I want to bring the gentleman into the light.

Mr. ROBINSON. Go ahead; let us have the light.

Mr. BLOUNT. The legal proposition of the gentleman is to allow the law compensating railroad companies for the weight of the mails they carry and the postal cars used by them to standard it is a mails. the law compensating railroad companies for the weight of the mails they carry and the postal cars used by them to stand as it is; and to include another proposition, over and above that, legalizing payment for special services. Yet the gentleman would have the Chair believe that such an amendment would retrench expenditures. How? Simply by cutting down the figures in the bill; although the gentleman knows that the railroad companies would even then have the right to the full amount under the law for the weight of their mails and restal cars and a reduction of the forms in the bill would amount. postal cars, and a reduction of the figures in the bill would amount postal cars, and a reduction of the figures in the bill would amount to nothing at all except perhaps a deficiency.

Now, I am surprised at my friend, who is generally so liberal and fair, attempting to palm off such sophistry as this on the Chair or anybody else. His proposition does cut down the amount in the bill, but it is not the legislation he proposes which will decrease expenditures. While the figures are cut down, the legislation will increase expenditures, by authorizing payments to be made to railroad companies not only for the weight of the mails they carry and for the postal cars they use, but for the extra trains and increased speed.

Mr. ROBINSON. The gentleman from Georgia has seen fit to characterize my argument by certain words which he has got from the dictionary this morning. I will say nothing of the character of his speech, but will only refer to what he offers as a reply to me.

He says that my amendment does not accomplish anything in the

He says that my amendment does not accomplish anything in the way of retrenching expenditures, because it will create a deficiency. Not at all. If a deficiency shall arise hereafter, it will arise under the law as it now stands.

He says I propose to change existing law. I concede it; but I say that under the rules of this House I have a right to offer an amendment which will change existing law, provided I bring that amendment within this one of three conditions: "Reduction of the amounts covered by the bill." Now, the gentleman himself says that it does reduce the amount covered by the bill. He comprehends even so small a sum as $10,000. He says there will be a saving or reduction to that extent, but he says it may create a deficiency.

Ah! but the language of the rule so carefully drawn after long.

Ah! but the language of the rule, so carefully drawn after long deliberation in this House, is that the amendment shall reduce the amount of money covered in the bill. The committee bring in here a bill embracing an appropriation of $9,500,000. I propose to reduce that amount to the extent of $10,000. I will not characterize the gentleman's argument; I will let it stand before the Chair for what it is worth

Mr. PAGE. Did I understand the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to say that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts was for the purpose of appropriating $150,000 additional for extra mail service and for expedited service?

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir.
Mr. PAGE. Is this similar to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois yesterday?

Mr. BLOUNT. The same.

I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the language of the rule, under which, as I contend, the effect of the amendment as a legal proposition must be to retrench expenditures, not merely to strike out a part of the sum named in the bill. The language is:

ing law be in order except such as, being germane to the subject-matter of the bill, shall retrench expenditures.

The CHAIRMAN. Although the meaning of the words "necessary and special facilities for postal service" is not very clear, yet the Chair held yesterday, after giving the subject some consideration, that the effect of such an amendment would be to change existing law. The Chair still adheres to that opinion. But under the third clause of Rule XXI an individual member upon the floor may offer an amendment changing existing law provided it retrenches expenditures in one of three modes: First, by reducing the number and salaries of the officers of the United States; or, secondly, by reducing the compensation of persons paid out of the Treasury of the United States; or, thirdly, by reducing the amounts covered by the bill. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts does not propose to add an appropriation of $150,000 to the bill; but it provides that of the amount appropriated by the bill the sum of $150,000 may be used for certain purposes; and it diminishes the amount covered by the bill by striking out "$9,500,000" and inserting "$9,490,000." So that the Chair is bound to hold that the amendment conforms strictly to the language of the rule. Whether the language actually used in this rule accomplishes the exact purpose which the House had in view in adopting it, is not a question for the Chair to decide; but taking the language of the rule as it stands and putting upon it the construction which ordinarily would be put upon such language in a statute or in a rule of the House, the Chair is compelled to hold that the amendment comes within the rule, and is in order.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask that the amendment be now re-

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I ask that the amendment be now reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. MONEY. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "$150,000" and inserting "$350,000." Mr. Chairman, I was extremely disappointed that the Committee on Appropriations did not report some appropriation for providing proper mail facilities on railway trunk lines, and especially—

Mr. BLACKBURN. Without wishing to interrupt the gentleman's argument, but simply wanting to have the opinion of the Chair before he proceeds, I desire as a parliamentary inquiry to ask whether the Chair holds that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts was in order, although changing existing law, by reason of the reduction of the amount covered by the bill, and that it is in order now by way of amendment to the amendment to do away, as Chair holds that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts was in order, although changing existing law, by reason of the reduction of the amount covered by the bill, and that it is in order now by way of mendment to the amendment to do away, as the gentleman from Mississippi proposes, with the feature of the amendment which alone made it admissible under the rule?

Mr. MONEY. I do not propose to do that; the gentleman is mistaken. I propose that the $350,000 shall come out of the $9,490,000. The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi does not propose to add anything to the aggregate amount which the amendment proposes to expend.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Then I was mistaken.

Mr. MONEY. As I was saying, I was very much disappointed in the report of the Committee on Appropriations as embraced in this bill. There is nothing that is to-day so much needed by the business interests of this country as fast mail service. The importance of these fast mails cannot be appreciated unless the matter is brought directly to the notice of gentlemen by the evidence of business men in different portions of the country. I am perfectly astonished that any man from the South or West should vote against an appropriation to give us fast mail facilities. The superintendent of the railway mail service had just about completed arrangements for a mail from New York to New Orleans that would shorten the time fourteen hours. Richmond, Danville, Atlanta, Montgomery, Mobile, and New Orleans were particularly to be benefited by this arrangement. He had also made arrangements for similar facilities for the far West on lines leading to Saint Louis and Chicago. If this bill passes in the form reported by the committee the special train now leaving New York City (the great postal center of this Union, and, I may say, of the whole world) at five o'clock in the morning and half past six o'clock in the evening will be cut off. The consequence will be that New England from Hartford northward will receive mails from the repo

Said:

The time saved by these mails in the transmission of correspondence between the Southwestern, Western, and Northwestern States and the Eastern eities was over twenty-four hours, making the difference of one day's interest on all Eastern remittances. Intelligent business men in Galveston estimated the amount of exchanges between that city and New York at $30,000,000 annually; in Houston it was placed at $35,000,000; in Little Rock, Arkansas, at $30,000,000; in Nashville, Tennessee, at $75,000,000; in Derver, at $20,000,000, in San Francisco, at $450,000,000; in Toledo, at $350,000,000; in Chicago, at $600,000,000.

The annual saving to these cities alone, assuming the average rate of interest to be 7 per cent., would amount to nearly $300,000; and if we assume $000,000 as the entire amount of interest annually saved it would be a low estimate. Many merchants estimated the benefits they received from the shortening of time between the sending and filling of orders for goods as greater even than the saving of inter-est, for though the telegraph is largely used in a certain class of transactions, yet the great bulk of mercantile orders, where not given by the purchaser in person, are sent by mail. About forty times as many letters as telegrams are sent.

One merchant at Denver said the fast mail was worth alone to him $100,000 a year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the section which I have the honor in part to represent is more interested in this mail service than in all the other Departments of the Government. You may abolish the Army and Departments of the Government. You may abolish the Army and Navy and all the Federal courts, and the people would hardly know it; but when you touch the mail service, then you touch every man, I care not whether he is served by the railroad or star route. The star routes are all dependent on the railroads for their mail. They carry 95 per cent. of the mail. The man—I do not care where he is—who gets his mail in the South gets it one day earlier by reason of this fast-mail service. These facilities which we of the South get are cut off by action of this committee. Only seven or eight States pay an excess of revenue to the Post-Office Department, and they are all in the North with the exception alone of Missouri; and yet we of the South, in the only manner in which we feel the beneficence we of the South, in the only manner in which we feel the beneficence of the Government without feeling its burdens, are now to be plucked short by the action of the Committee on Appropriations of our share of the benefit of the fast mail.

of the benefit of the fast mail.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it necessary to occupy the attention of the House for any length of time on this question, because I believe nearly all concede my amendment should be adopted, and I look for its adoption. I call the attention of the House to the fact that this amendment increases in no way the amount in the bill, but provides for these special and necessary facilities through the railroad service which carries the mail to remote parts of the country, and is not a benefit alone to the great central parts. I wish it understood this provision is only the same we have had in the bill the preceding year, and it ought to be adopted in accordance with the recommendation of the Post-Office Department through the superintendent of the railway service, Mr. Thompson. I ask to have read a communication, so it may go into the Record, from Postmaster James, of New York, who has some information on the subject of a through mail. a through mail.

The Clerk read as follows:

Post-Office Department,
Washington, D. C., May 5, 1880.

Sir: In corroboration of the statement of the General Superintendent of Railway Mail Service, transmitted by me to you on the 3d instant, I have the honor to submit herewith a letter from the postmaster of New York City, showing the necessity for continuing the appropriation for the fast mails.

Very respectfully,

D. M. KEY, Postmaster-General.

Hon. S. J. RANDALL, Speaker House of Representatives.

Post-Office, New York City, N. Y.
Office of the Postmaster, May 4, 1880.

Sh: Having noticed the published announcement that General Superintendent Thompson, of the railway mail service, has addressed to you a communication recommending an appropriation for the continuance of the special mail service which has been performed during the past year and setting forth the advantages which have accrued from such service, I venture to add my testimony to that of Mr. Thompson, and to say that the results of the improvements in the service, effected under the special appropriation of last year, have been beneficial in the highest degree, more especially to the mercantile community, the dispatch and delivery of whose correspondence has been greatly facilitated and their interest sensibly promoted thereby.

The special trains which have been placed on the New York.

whose correspondence has been greatly facilitated and their interest sensibly promoted thereby.

The special trains which have been placed on the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad and the New York Central and Pennsylvania Railroads have been of very great advantage in enabling this office to dispatch with promptitude and celerity the greater portion of the mass of correspondence deposited and arriving here for distribution between the hours of four and six p. m., between which hours the bulk of the business letters written here are posted, as well as allowing an early dispatch to the North and East of heavy mails arriving here during the night; and the facilities thus afforded could not, in my opinion, be withdrawn without serious detriment to the commercial, manufacturing, and other business interests of the entire country.

The local benefits of every improvement in postal facilities are incidental only; their effects are in no case limited to a single neighborhood or community, but are felt throughout the Union to its remotest extremity. It is, therefore, not solely with a view to the special interest of New York in this matter that I write to express the hope that Congress will promptly furnish the means to continue, and even to extend, the advantages which its last appropriation has enabled the railway mail service to provide, and the withdrawal of which would not, in my judgment, be anything less than a public calamity.

Very respectfully,

T. L. JAMES, Postmaster.

Hon. D. M. KEY, Postmaster-General.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to say a word more before my time expires. The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has two minutes left.

Mr. ROBINSON. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Money] to my amendment will not be adopted. I think there are gentlemen here who are willing to devote $150,000 to this purpose, but who are not willing to take out of the whole sum as large an amount as the gentleman proposes. I hope, therefore, in the interest of accomplishing something in this line—though if the situation were different I would favor the larger sum—my amendment will be adopted and the amendment to the amendment will be voted down. down.

I yield the one minute remaining of my time to the gentleman from
